Students learn in a converted hallway space in a School District of Lancaster Elementary School.
This photo shows a mural in Greater Johnstown School District’s former middle school facility that was closed in 2017 when deteriorating conditions were deemed unsafe for students. The ceiling was damaged by leaky pipes. The center of the mural reads “the doorway to our future.”
A crack in the wall of Kistler Elementary School in Wilkes-Barre Area School District. The district commissioned a facilities study, which found that the school needs $25 million in facilities repairs.
A classroom in Kistler Elementary in Wilkes-Barre divided with classroom furniture—a white board and a coat rack—so that two classes can be held at once.
