I do not say this with any view of making any reflection upon the eminent gentleman who sits as the judge in that court. For him I have the highest respect, and so far as that court itself and the administration of justice in that county are concerned I have not a word to say against them. But, sir, it is an alarming example, which hereafter, in times of high political excitement, may be followed in every county in this State. What would the people of Lancaster think if Schuylkill and Berks were to elect their judges? What would any county in the State think if adjoining counties had the power to elect their judges? What does it mean? What did it mean in Schuylkill when two counties were attached to Schuylkill in order to elect a judge? It meant at the time the court was created just one thing: That unfair play should be administered to one set of citizens in that county, and different law and different rulings to others. That that has not been the operation of the law and of this court has been owing to the eminent character of the man who was elected. But, on the other hand, suppose the people should, as they have the power to do, and as in times of high political excitement it is very probable they would do, elect the veriest political demagogue in the district, what is the result? You drag down the high judicial ermine through the lowest cess-pools of politics, and you everywhere plunge the State into disgrace.

Now, sir, I have no hostility to the proposition of the gentleman from Lycoming, if he will make it broad enough. I believe there ought not to exist in this Commonwealth courts of record other than constitutional courts. If we had adhered to the very wise report of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, so far as the first section of this article is concerned, we would have done well; but now, since we have departed from that and permitted the Legislature to establish such other courts as they please from time to time, I am decidedly against establishing a constitutional barrier to protect merely those courts which deal with the property and not with the lives and personal liberties of the citizens of Pennsylvania. I had hoped that the first section would be amended so as to meet the gentleman's proposition, but a motion was made to strike out these words, "and in such other courts as the Legislature may from time to time establish," and it was lost. I, therefore, am decidedly opposed to any proposition that looks towards making such an outrageous distinction in favor of dollars and cents, and leaving those courts which deal with life and liberty at the will and pleasure of the Legislature.

And, sir, what is that Legislature? It may be a bare majority of one in each branch, and then the majority of that majority makes the law. This court to which I have referred was made under the dictation of a caucus of one political party. It was forced down the throats of a large minority of the political majority in the Legislature under that infamous caucus system which has disgraced our State and others. Your laws in relation to the courts will be made for you, not by the Legislature, but by the majority of the majority, by the political caucus, which may be a very great minority of the Legislature; and in times of high political excitement, as I said before, you may have the entire judiciary of the State changed.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The delegate's time has expired.

MR. ARMSTRONG. It appears to me that the gentleman is under an entire misapprehension as to the effect of this amendment. It is to prevent the very thing which he argues against. It is to be borne in mind that at the time this clause was introduced in the fifth section it was by an amendment offered by the gentleman's colleague from Schuylkill, (Mr. Bartholomew,) and it was adopted with a view to prevent the establishment of any courts which would exercise the same powers that the general courts of common pleas in the State exercise; and as it has already been passed and is in the Constitution, I could not imagine that a mere proposition to transpose it would create any debate whatever. I again say to the Convention that it changes nothing, it affects nothing, except to remove a doubt as to whether or not in the location in which it stands it is not trammelled by the possibility of being limited to the cities of Philadelphia and Pittsburg. If there is to be any debate about the amendment I will withdraw it, because it is not worth the discussion. It is already in the Constitution, adopted after full debate and fully understood. I will not stop to discuss it further, and if debate is to continue upon it I shall withdraw it.

Mr. CUYLER. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The amendment is withdrawn. The question is on the section.

Mr. KATNE. I think this is a very important section and should not be passed over hastily; neither do I think it should be adopted by the Convention. It is entirely new. It is certainly a novel thing to put into a Constitution:

"All laws relating to courts shall be general and of uniform operation—"

I suppose that is already provided for in the article on legislation——"And the organization, jurisdiction, powers, proceedings and practice of all courts of the same class or grade, so far as regulated by law, and the force and effect of the process, judgments, and decisions of such courts shall be uniform."

Now, I should like to understand what is meant by the force and effect of decisions of the several courts of common pleas of this Commonwealth being "uniform?" A judge in one part of the State decides a question one way, as he may construe an act of Assembly or as he may construe a decision of the Supreme Court upon that particular question under consideration, while a judge in another part of the State may decide the same question in a different manner. Now, how are you going, by a constitutional provision, to provide that the judges of the several courts of common pleas shall make their decisions upon particular questions uniform throughout the Commonwealth? To my mind the thing is utterly impossible and is absurd. I have no objection to the rules of court being uniform all over the State, but I have objection to providing in the Constitution that the decisions of the courts shall be uniform.

Mr. STEWART. Only in their legal effect.

Mr. KATNE. Who is to be the judge of that? I propose to amend the section by striking out in the fourth line after the word "judgments" the words "and decisions," and inserting the word "and" before "judgments," so as to read:

"And the force and effect of the process and judgments of such courts shall be uniform."

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment of the delegate from Fayette.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the section as amended.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee—I have not paid attention to the section—whether this requires the rules of court and practice in every county of the State to be exactly alike.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. It does not, as I conceive, and with that view I propose to offer a section to follow this which will provide for uniformity of practice in the State. The section which I will offer immediately following this will provide for a uniform practice throughout the State under the rules of court.

Mr. KATNE. Why not offer that in place of this?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. This is right.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I would not care to make it imperative that all the rules of court in relation to practice shall be exactly the same in the interior as they are in Philadelphia and Pittsburg. If the gentleman does not encounter that difficulty I shall have no objection to it.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. We do not encounter that, because we have made provision for it.

The CHAIR put the question and declared that the ayes appeared to prevail, and a division was called for.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If there is any danger of this section not passing, I want to be heard upon it. ["Go on."] In the first place, this section has the advantage of experience in the State of Illinois, and has been operating there since the adoption of their amended Constitution with eminent success and value, and it is embodied in this report as taken from the Constitution of the State of Illinois. Now, why should it not be so? We simply provide that all laws relating to courts shall be general. It is in the direct line of the limitation which we have already adopted as to other important matters in the article of legislation.

Why should it be left open to the Legislature to make a law which shall be applicable to the courts of one district and not applicable to the courts of another? I say there is eminent propriety and commanding necessity for so limiting the Legislature that they shall not impose laws which shall be applicable to and binding upon one court and shall not be applicable to and binding upon all other courts of the Commonwealth. If there be anything in the whole range of legislation in which there is necessity for holding the Legislature to the line of uniformity, it is in reference to the laws which affect the courts.

Now, this section is not intended to regulate practice, so far as it pertains to the mere rules of court. That I propose to cover by another section which I shall offer, in which the necessities of large populations are provided for; which, when it comes up, will be properly considered upon its merits. But I can conceive of no sufficient reason whatever that shall justify us in refusing to say that the Legislature shall not make laws which shall be operative upon one court of the State and not upon all alike. I think the section ought to be adopted.

Mr. CUYLER. I cannot agree with the gentleman from Lycoming. I cannot see that the courts of a great city like Philadelphia will be surrounded by the same circumstances, be situated in the same way, with courts of the sparsely settled parts of the State. I cannot see that there may not, and indeed I am well convinced that there will be many occasions where special laws affecting the operation and action of courts of one locality may be requisite which would be wholly inappropriate in another. I can very well understand, every gentleman can understand, that the venue that called a jury to a court in Philadelphia county will require the summoning of a larger number of jurors than that which shall call jurors to some other county in the interior of the State; and yet if the section prevails and the laws that relate to the courts are to be uniform, I suppose the provision must be that the same number of jurors shall be called in an interior court that would be called here.

I might illustrate it in many other ways. Just so long as the circumstances of one part of the State may vary, and do vary, and largely vary from those of other parts of the State, just so long will the application of a law that shall be absolutely uniform operate with severity upon one or the other portion of the State. I am in favor of leaving that to the wisdom of the Legislature and letting them determine whether circumstances exist which should apply a system of legislation to one district which might be wholly inapplicable to another.

Therefore, unwilling to bind the Legislature in this respect, I hope that this section may be voted down.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I desire to call the attention of the Convention to the fact that no such difficulties as the gentleman suggests could arise under this section. It only requires that the law shall be uniform, and that law may with propriety regulate the number of jurors in large or small districts; but it shall be a general law, and in that law provisions shall be made which shall adapt it to the exigencies of different counties, but it shall be general and shall be of uniform operation. It means that the law applied to the State at large, within the terms of that law shall not be different in one place from another; but it does not limit the Legislature in making a general law to provide for all exigencies which may be necessary, but it must be made by a general law and shall not be made by a particular and special law which shall apply to Philadelphia and shall not apply to Allegheny, or shall apply to that city and not to the other counties of the State. The section limits it to laws relating to the courts.

In our legislative article we have required that the Legislature shall legislate by general law on a great variety of subjects. This is a limitation upon the wide and unreasonable discretion of the Legislature to prevent that kind of special legislation which obtains in the Legislature—laws affecting particular cases—which is pernicious legislation at all times, and ought to be prohibited.

Mr. DALLAS. Mr. President. The gentleman has not yet replied to the objections well presented by my colleague from Philadelphia, (Mr. Cuyler,) for there is a portion of this section still remaining to which his remarks can have no application. In the latter half of this section it provides in this way: "And practice of the courts of the same class or grade, so far as regulated by law, * * shall be uniform." In other words, we shall have in the city of Philadelphia and in the county of Allegheny precisely the same practice for the regulation of our larger courts that they have throughout the rest of the Commonwealth. That, sir, is certainly open to the objection presented by the gentleman from Philadelphia, and which has not been answered by the gentleman from Lycoming.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I will ask the Clerk to read for information the following, which I will offer as a new section when this shall be passed.

The CLERK read as follows:

"It shall be the duty of the Supreme Court, as soon as practicable, and within one year after this Constitution shall take effect, and from time to time thereafter as may be necessary, to provide rules and regulations for a general system of practice in all the courts of record in the State, which shall be uniform in all courts of the same class or grade, and shall not be changed except by the Supreme Court: Provided, That special rules may be provided for cities and counties exceeding one hundred thousand inhabitants, and special rules may be added thereto by the presiding judge of any judicial district, with the consent and approval of the Supreme Court."

Mr. DARLINGTON. Mr. President—

The President pro tem. The hour of one having arrived the Convention will take a recess until three o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention re-assembled at three o'clock P. M.

THE JUDICIAL SYSTEM.

The President pro tem. When the Convention adjourned the question under consideration was the twenty-fifth section of the article on the judiciary. It will be read.

The CLERK read as follows:

SECTION 25. All laws relating to courts shall be general and of uniform operation, and the organization, jurisdiction, powers, proceedings and practice of all courts of the same class or grade, so far as regulated by law, and the force and effect of the process, judgments and decisions of such courts shall be uniform.

Mr. DARLINGTON. I hope this section will not be agreed to. I think it will be found exceedingly inconvenient when we recollect that throughout the State there are a great many varying systems of practice, all of which are appropriate to and agreeable to the parties who have adopted them. In Philadelphia, for instance—and I presume this is intended to make the practice of universal application—there are now monthly return days for writs. They have that plan in Delaware and they have it in Allegheny, but Delaware differs from Philadelphia and Allegheny in this, that writs are returnable on the fourth Monday of the month, while in the others they are returnable on the first Monday of the month. In Berks it is the second Monday of the month. Thus we find in the different counties writs may be returnable exactly as it suits the convenience of the bar and the community there. In almost all other parts of the State we have a general law, passed in 1832, which contains three different return days for writs; first, the first day of the term; next, the next day preceding the last day of the term; and the third, if the writ shall be issued before ten days anterior to the commencement of the term and shall not be served until within ten days, then the defendant is to appear in ten days after the writ shall be served; so that under the general law there are the three return days, somewhat inconvenient, I admit, and cumbersome in practice.

In our county of Chester, in 1862, we had a special law passed, making the return day of all process for the commencement of action in ten days after the process was served, adopting one of those in the general law and abolishing all others as to that county, so that a writ issued there for the commencement of an action is in all cases made returnable in ten days after its service, and it is so stated on the face of the writ, so that the defendant has clear notice that he is to appear to the writ in ten days after it is served. That we find exceedingly convenient. We have practiced upon it for the last ten years with entire satisfaction to every member of the bar, the court, and the whole community. At the end of ten days, having filed our claim, if the action be for a money claim, or a statement of the cause of action, five days before the return day, if no affidavit of defence can be made at the return day, we take judgment and issue execution. Thus it is that one-half, and it may be more than one-half, of all the cases for collections end with the ten days' judgment and execution, and we never hear of them in court; and this probably is one reason why our business is closely worked up.

Now, this satisfies our community. It might not satisfy the community elsewhere. We should not like to change it. Why, then, I ask, should we be compelled to change it? It suits our whole people better than anything else we have ever had; and if in Franklin or in Fayette or in Greene they might think other days more convenient for them, let them have them. There is no necessity for our having the same days or the same number of days of service in one county as another. There is no necessity for the uniformity which the section proposes to make.

"All laws relating to courts shall be general and of uniform operation."

It is all well enough to prohibit special legislation when you can, such special legislation as leads to mischief, as leads to bribery of members of the Legislature and everything of that kind. Do away with special laws; but these are not the things that anybody pays to get done; they are only granted by the Legislature when the people want them done, and it requires no corruption to get them done.

"All laws relating to courts shall be general and of uniform operation, and the organization, jurisdiction, powers, proceedings and practice of all courts of the same class or grade, so far as regulated by law, &c., shall be uniform."

Now, it would be highly inconvenient to the city of Philadelphia, I apprehend, where thousands of suits are brought every year, to have the same practice and rules of proceeding and the same return days, and such uniformity as that, which would be proper in other counties of the State. Certainly it would be very inconvenient for any county to give up that to which they are accustomed and which is most satisfactory to them, for the sake of uniformity. Can any one give me a reason why the rules of practice of two different courts should be the same?

My friend from Montgomery (Mr. Boyd) suggests that when he goes into another county to practice, it is inconvenient for him to learn new rules. When he commenced to practice in his own county he had to submit to the inconvenience of learning the rules there, and they do not vary so much as to make it inconvenient for him to acquire them. He will always find when he comes to Chester county a willing friend to tell him all about them. [Laughter.]

Mr. HANNA. But he does not want to go there. [Laughter.]

Mr. DARLINGTON. We have no objection to his coming. When I go to Montgomery county I think I shall know the rules there sufficiently to keep within them. No gentleman has any difficulty of that kind. It has been my fortune to practice a little in several counties in the eastern part of the State, and I have always found gentlemen of the profession so courteous and kind and clever that I have never had any difficulty in getting along.

Mr. D. W. PATTERSON. I move to amend the section by striking out the words "proceedings and practice," in the second and third lines, and inserting the word "and" between the words "jurisdiction" and "powers."

I merely wish to say that this will provide for any necessary variation in practice or proceedings where it may be entirely necessary. I have spoken to the chairman of the committee and believe he is perfectly willing that these words should be stricken out, because it might be necessary that the practice and proceedings in some courts should vary from some others.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I think the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Lancaster judicious, and I should be glad to have it adopted. I do not feel like sitting down without thanking the gentleman from Chester (Mr. Darlington) for so ably arguing in favor of this section. He argues very warmly in its favor, but says he is not for it. It occurs to me that if there be in his county a practice of such exceeding advantage as that stated by him, there is no reason why we should not have it all over the State. When I come to think over the various points of practice and points of law that make this section necessary, it is easy to indicate them, as in Allegheny county they have a special law which is different from the rest of the State as to the mode of collecting mortgages, I understand, under a special act recently passed. In Chester county they have one rule of proceeding and in other counties different rules. I could go over and mention numerous counties; but it is not necessary to delay the Convention with that. It is enough to know that one of the greatest defects in the judicial system of Pennsylvania has been this want of uniformity. No lawyer is safe in advising on a point of law outside of his own county. There are special laws which no lawyer beyond the district can follow and which are not understood beyond the limits of the county or district to which they apply. This section, if adopted, would not apply to laws as they at present exist, but only as to future legislation, and with the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Lancaster I think it a section of very great importance. It will unify the laws respecting the courts. It will cut up that pernicious system of having a stay law in one place different from that which exists in another. It will cut up the practice of having the mode of collection of debts and mortgages in one county different from another, and will compel in all future legislation a uniformity of law as relates to courts of the same degree.

Mr. CORBETT. I should like to ask the chairman of the Judiciary Committee why keep in the word "practice," when it is provided in section nine of the article on legislation, line twenty-seven, (and probably it supplies another portion of this article also,) that the Legislature is expressly prohibited from passing special acts regulating the practice and jurisdiction of courts.

Mr. D. W. PATTERSON. What about the rules of practice?

Mr. CORBETT. That section prevents special legislation "regulating the practice and jurisdiction or changing the rules of evidence in any judicial proceeding or inquiry before courts, aldermen, justices of the peace, sheriffs, commissioners, arbitrators, auditors, masters in chancery, or other judicial officers, or providing for changing the methods for the collection of debts, or enforcing judgments or prescribing the effects of judicial sales of real estate.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If it were entirely clear that the section referred to by the gentleman would cover the ground of this there would be no necessity for it. It covers the practice so far as it is regulated by law, but it does not cover the other points, I think that it does not cover the case, and that this section, which is in the same line of thought and of precaution which is taken in the section we have already adopted relating to legislation, is proper and will be wise.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment of the delegate from Lancaster (Mr. D. W. Patterson.)

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question recurs on the section as amended.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I call for the yeas and nays upon it.

Mr. STEWART. I second the call.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I call for the reading of the section as amended, upon which the yeas and nays are to be taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. It will be read.

The CLERK read as follows:

SECTION 25. All laws relating to courts shall be general and of uniform operation, and the organization, jurisdiction and powers of all courts of the same class or grade, so far as regulated by law, and the force and effect of the process and judgments of such courts, shall be uniform.

The yeas and nays were taken on the adoption of the section with the following result:

YEAS.

Messrs. Achenbach, Alricks, Armstrong, Baer, Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Barclay, Beebe, Biddle, Bigler, Black, Chas. A., Boyd, Brodhead, Broomall, Buckalew, Cochran, Corson, Cronmiller, Cuyler, Dunning, Elliott, Ellis, Ewing, Finney, Fulton, Funck, Gilpin, Guthrie, Hall, Hay, Horton, Kaine, Lawrence, Lilly, MacConnell, McClean, McCulloch, M'Murray, Mann, Mantor, Palmer, G. W., Palmer, H. W., Parsons, Patterson, D. W., Patterson, T. H. B., Patton, Pugh, Purman, Purviance, John N., Purviance, Sam'l A., Reed, Andrew, Sharpe, Simpson, Smith, Wm. H., Stanton, Stewart, Turrell, Van Reed, Walker, Wetherill, J. M., Wetherill, J. Price, Wherry and Wright—62.

NAYS.

Messrs. Alney, Baker, Corbett, Dallas, Darlington, Davis, Edwards, Gibson, Hanna, Hemphill, Heverin, Hunsicker, Landis, Ross, Smith, Henry W., Temple and Worrell—17.

So the section was agreed to.

ABSENT. Messrs. Addicks, Andrews, Baily, (Perky,) Bannan, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Black, J. S., Bowman, Brown, Bullitt, Calvin, Campbell, Carey, Carter, Cassidy, Church, Clark, Collins, Craig, Curry, Curtin, De France, Dodd, Fell, Green, Harvey, Hazzard, Howard, Knight, Lamberton, Lear, Littleton, Long, MacVeagh, M'Camant, Metzger, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Newlin, Niles, Porter, Read, John R., Reynolds, Rooke, Runk, Russell, Smith, H. G., Struthers, White, David N., White, Harry, White, J. W. F., Woodward and Meredith, President—54.

MR. ARMSTRONG. I offer the following as a new section:

"SECTION —. It shall be the duty of the Supreme Court, as soon as practicable and within one year after this Constitution shall take effect, and from time to time thereafter as may be necessary, to provide rules and regulations for a general system of practice in all the courts of record of the State, which shall be uniform in all courts of the same class and grade, and shall not be changed except by the Supreme Court: Provided, That special rules may be provided for cities and counties exceeding one hundred thousand inhabitants, and special rules may be added thereto by the presiding judge in any judicial district with the consent and approval of the Supreme Court."

As I remarked a few moments ago, I believe one of the great complaints of the judicial system of Pennsylvania has been its want of uniformity, and in nothing has this lack been more manifest than in the varied practice that prevails throughout the State. It will readily occur to any gentleman, when thinking on this subject, that it would not be wise nor indeed practicable to bring all cities and counties of the State under the same general practice. Large cities and counties having a concentrated population evidently require some rules of practice which would be inapplicable to the State at large. This necessity is fully provided for in the section proposed. Wherever a uniformity of practice has prevailed, it has been with marked good effect. The Supreme Court have prescribed rules which are in force throughout the State in all that appertains to their appellate jurisdiction; they have also established uniform rules in all that pertains to the equity jurisdiction; and in both instances the advantage is very marked and clear.

In the district formerly presided over by the distinguished Chief Justice Black, now a member of our body, when he went upon the bench, they had very insufficient rules. He established a system which has prevailed from that day to this. But many of the adjoining counties have in vain attempted to procure the same rules or modifications of the same rules as applied to them. The rules of practice vary so much that lawyers going from one district to another are wholly at a loss to know the rules by which they must regulate their practice at a special court.

It was stated this morning in discussion upon a kindred topic that the judges called in special cases to hold special courts are greatly at a loss to know what the practice is in the district to which they are called. So also it has been frequently the case that the judges of the Supreme Court themselves have been under the necessity of inquiring of practitioners from various counties what the rules of practice in particular cases may be; and yet the rules of practice become rules of property; they become in a large degree the foundation of vested rights, and there is every necessity for having them uniform that can prevail as to laws.

It would not do to provide for a uniform practice by law because, that would not be sufficiently flexible; but under this provision, in which it is made the duty of the Supreme Court to provide a uniform system of practice, it is at all times open to and subject to change or revision by them as new necessities may arise.

It is said that the Supreme Court shall indicate or designate these rules. It might be wise to say that the court of common pleas might indicate them; but the body is too large, and the Supreme Court, without any sort of doubt, would consult the judges of all the districts until a system should be devised which would be uniform at the same time that it would give to every county the advantage of whatever rule had proved itself to be valuable in any district of the State. It provides also for changes so far as may be necessary, but it prevents changes except with the concurrence of the Supreme Court or with their approval, in order that the rules may not be liable to unreasonable and frequent change.

I have thus indicated what I believe to be the necessity for this section. I regard it as valuable and of great advantage. It would give uniformity to practice, it would enable attorneys to practice out of their own immediate district or county with greater facility and advantage; it would aid in the administration of justice, and I can see no reasonable objection against it, because under the proviso special rules may be adopted as applied to large cities, which would not be applicable to the smaller populations of the State.

I trust that the section will commend itself to the approval of the Convention.

Mr. CORBETT. Mr. President: I hope this section will not prevail. If there is a benefit in a uniform system of rules, it ought to exist throughout the whole State; but it appears that there is to be an unbending system of rules to be applied to all the State except cities of over one hundred thousand inhabitants.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. No; the gentleman misapprehends. It is equally unbending as to all the counties, but special rules may be made in large populations where special necessities require.

Mr. CORBETT. Is that not unbending now except for cities of large populations, and there it is bending or flexible. There there can be a special rule made or a special system of rules. If there be any benefit in a general uniform system of rules it ought to exist over all the State, and there ought not to be a special exception here, as has been made in other cases, with reference to cities.

The truth is that the State of Pennsylvania has been composed of the city of Philadelphia and the county of Allegheny, and in every instance there is to be some exception in their favor. Now, if the city of Philadelphia requires special rules, or if the city of Pittsburgh or Allegheny does, I ask why the country districts do not?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The gentleman will pardon me once more. It is also provided by the last clause "and special rules" the very same language "may be added thereto by the presiding judge of any judicial district."

Mr. CORBETT. "With the consent of the Supreme Court."

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The same as to the cities; it applies to both of them and in the same terms.

Mr. CORBETT. Applies to both what?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Both the cities and the country.

Mr. CORBETT. Without respect to inhabitants?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Yes, sir.

Mr. CORBETT. Then I ask why make it a provision of the Constitution? You only make it a little more difficult to change the rule. You will soon not have a uniform system of rules extending over the State, and I do not see the benefit of it. Why not leave every district to make its own rules? Why not leave it to the district to adopt a system such as the exigencies of the practice require? You propose to insert in the Constitution, not a statute, but a section that means nothing. It provides that the president judge may change the rules with the consent of the Supreme Court, and under this very clause you will soon have as many different systems of rules in the State as you have now. Why insert it? If this change is to be allowed, I can see no benefit whatever that will arise from this section.

Mr. S. A. PURVIANCE. In addition to what has been said by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, I rise to add my testimony to what I believe to be a very valuable proposition. It is a fact notorious that the Supreme Court have prescribed rules for the government of cases in equity. Those rules, I believe, every member of the bar, from one end of the State to the other, agrees are most valuable. Now, sir, this amendment is nothing more, as I understand it, than authorizing the establishment of rules by the Supreme Court to be made applicable to proceedings in law. I hold that that is absolutely necessary, and I put it to every member of the bar in the Convention whether he cannot occasionally turn it to advantage. Suppose, for instance, a client belonging to Philadelphia sued in the county of Erie; that client cannot remain there; he must come right home upon urgent business. He comes, naturally, to the office of his own attorney and submits the writ served upon him and makes a statement of his case; but what can that attorney say in reply? He has to say, "I am not familiar with the rules of the courts in Erie county; I can do you no service; you must go back at once to where you were sued." On the other hand, if this proposition is incorporated in the Constitution, we will understand the rules of practice in every county in the Commonwealth, and we can, in our offices, sit down and prepare the preliminary papers necessary in every case, just as well as though we were to send our client to the county in which he was sued. I therefore hope that this section will be adopted.

Mr. CORBETT. Allow me to ask the gentleman a question. Suppose that rule has been changed under this latter clause with reference to Erie county, how can he tell then?

Mr. S. A. PURVIANCE. I do not think that the change will take place unless it should be some additional matter not affecting the general rule, and I presume that is what is covered by allowing a court to make special rules. As my colleague on the committee (Mr. Armstrong) suggests, the change must be acted upon by the Supreme Court, and of course thus be notified to the whole bar.

Mr. KAINE. I desire to say a single word in commendation of this provision. You know very well, sir, as every lawyer in this Convention knows, that the books of reports are full of discussions and remarks of the Supreme Court upon the subject of the rules of the different districts of the State. The Supreme Court have decided over and over again that each court must be the judge of its own rules. One district has a rule on a subject of one kind, while another district on the same subject has a different rule, and therefore it leads to confusion. The judges of the Supreme Court, by virtue of an act of Assembly a few years ago, established a set of rules in equity for the whole State, so that the attorneys in Philadelphia have to practice in the same way in equity that they do in the city of Pittsburg. Having this kind of rules established by the Supreme Court, I do not see why we should not have the same kind of rules established by the Supreme Court for the several courts of common pleas of the Commonwealth.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is upon the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PATTON. I move to amend by adding the following new section at the end of the article :

"SECTION —. All advertisements and legal notices emanating from any court or public officer, required by law to be published in any newspaper of any county of this Commonwealth, shall hereafter be published by the proper officers in the two newspapers, if so many be issued, of such county having the largest circulation; the rates for such publication of advertisements to be fixed by law."

Mr. President, as this section is shorn of those objectionable features which defeated the one I offered yesterday, looking towards the same object, I hope this will meet the approval of the Convention and be engrafted upon the article under consideration. This section only contemplates an enlarged publicity of legal matter emanating from the courts and public offices, and that the Legislature shall regulate the price thereof.

As the section is in the interest of all the people, I hope the friends of reform will give it their cordial support. The argument I made yesterday, and the reasons assigned for its adoption, are no doubt fresh in the minds of the members, and I will not add anything more at this time.

Mr. BAER. I move to amend the amendment by adding the following proviso :

" Provided, That said papers are not published in the interest of the same political party."

I offer this because the amendment of the gentleman from Bradford simply creates an additional expense to the State without meeting the difficulty. The two papers having the largest circulation in a county or city may be published by the same political party and taken by the same readers. I am in favor of having intelligence disseminated among the greater number of the people, and if there is to be any provision at all for disseminating information to a larger number, it must be by causing it to be published in papers of different political sentiments.

Mr. LITTLETON. I desire to further amend, if it is in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. There is an amendment to an amendment pending.

Mr. COCHRAN. I regret that the gentleman from Somerset felt called on to offer this amendment to the section, because it was bringing it directly to the point which we reached yesterday and which was the objectionable point to the minds of many gentlemen. Now I am not at all squeamish about the recognition of a fact so notorious as the existence of political parties, and I have no objection even to recognize that fact in the Constitution. But, sir, it seems to be thought indecorous, I believe, here to recognize it in that connection, and, therefore, I was in hopes that the section offered by the gentleman from Bradford would be acted upon without any such objectionable condition being attached to it.

Mr. President, it has been my lot the greater part of my life to be connected in some way or other, loosely or closely, with the political press of the country, not with the great daily organs of the city, but the small press of the country, and I have had a good deal of experience with regard to this matter of publishing these notices, and I know that throughout the country it is generally a matter of favoritism. The object sought after by those who have had the control of them has been rather to compensate pets and to accommodate them than to give the information to the public, which is the real design intended in the publication of such notices.

I think that there is nothing wrong certainly in this amendment of the gentleman from Bradford. It will work justice. It is useless to say, Mr. President, as I apprehend, that it is entirely within the control of the Legislature. Now, that may be so, and the Legislature may pass such a rule as this, but it never has done it, and the probability is that for very obvious considerations it never will do it. In some counties, which are exceptions to the general rule, a provision of this kind has been adopted by consent, and I have never heard any complaint arising out of it. Now, although political parties are not recognized in the proposition as offered by the gentleman from Bradford, yet practically under the terms of this amendment citizens of different political sentiments will receive the information which is designed to be conveyed, and if there is any value in these notices at all, any value in this publication, it can only be fully realized by giving a reasonable opportunity to the entire community to have information and notice on the subject. Now, I think under these considerations that it would be right to adopt the section offered by the delegate from Bradford.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question recurs on the amendment of the delegate from Bradford (Mr. Patton.)

Mr. H. W. PALMER. I move to strike out the words, "emanating from any court or public officer," and I think it will meet the views of the mover of the section and improve the phraseology. I do not like the words. With these words stricken out I am in favor of the section. It is eminently fair that the public advertisements should reach the people to be affected, and this is done by requiring those advertisements to be put in papers having the largest circulation. I have known cases where legal advertisements were put into little seven-by-nine papers having a circulation of one hundred to one hundred and fifty, totally subversive of the purpose for which the advertising was done. When the property of a poor man is advertised to be sold at sheriff's sale, the advertisement of it is stuck into a German newspaper having a couple of hundred circulation, and he pays his money for nothing. It might as well be put up behind a barn as put there.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question recurs on the amendment of the delegate from Bradford.

Mr. CORBETT and Mr. PATTON called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I will just call the attention of the Convention to one fact? It becomes of course, if adopted, a constitutional provision—

The PRESIDENT, pro tem. The yeas and nays have been ordered upon the amendment.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I rise to explain for a moment, because, as the yeas and nays have been called for, I want to give the reason why I shall vote against the proposition. It is simply this: If a mistake should occur upon a question as to which is the paper of the largest circulation, it might vitiate the entire proceeding. It is dangerous for that and a great many other reasons.

The yeas and nays were taken with the following result:

Y E A S .

Messrs. Achenbach, Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Brodhead, Buckalew, Clark, Cochran, Cronmiller, De France, Dunning, Elliott, Ellis, Finney, Fulton, Funck, Gilpin, Guthrie, Hemphill, Kaine, Lambertson, Landis, Lilly, MacConnell, M'Murray, Palmer, G. W., Palmer, H. W., Patton, Purviance, Samuel A., Simpson, Smith, Wm. H., Stanton, Temple, Turrell and Wherry—33.

N A Y S .

Messrs. Ainey, Alricks, Armstrong, Baer, Barclay, Beebe, Biddle, Bigler, Black, Charles A., Boyd, Broomall, Bullitt, Corbett, Corson, Curtin, Cuyler, Dallas, Darlington, Davis, Edwards, Ewing, Gibson, Hall, Hanna, Hay, Heverin, Howard, Hunsicker, Knight, Lear, Littleton, M'Clean, M'Culloch, Mann, Mantor, Newlin, Patterson, T. H. B., Purviance, John N., Read, John R., Reed, Andrew, Reynolds, Rooke, Ross, Sharpe, Smith, H. G., Smith, Henry W., Stewart, Van Reed, Walker, Wetherill, J. M., Wetherill, Jno. Price, White, David N.,

White, J. W. F., Worrell and Wright—55.

So the amendment was rejected.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Addicks, Andrews, Baily, (Perry,) Baker, Bannan, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Black, J. S., Bowman, Brown, Calvin, Campbell, Carey, Carter, Cassidy, Church, Collins, Craig, Curry, Dodd, Fell, Green, Harvey, Hazzard, Horton, Lawrence, Long, MacVeagh, M'Camant, Metzger, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Niles, Parsons, Patterson, D. W. Porter, Pughe, Purman, Runk, Russell, Struthers, White, Harry, Woodward and Meredith, President—45.

MR. CUYLER. I ask leave to propose a new section, which I will read, and then I shall desire to state the reason why I think it ought to pass, stating that it is introductory also to another section which I shall propose. The amendment I now offer is:

"SECTION.— There shall be established a court in the city of Philadelphia, to be called "the Supreme Court nisi prius," having two judges, elected by all the qualified voters of the State, and holding office for fifteen years; but in the election of said judges where more than one is to be chosen each elector shall vote for only one person. They shall exercise the jurisdiction now possessed by the court of nisi prius, and in addition shall have jurisdiction of all appeals from the settlement of accounts by the Auditor General of the State, and original jurisdiction in all proceedings either in law or equity throughout the Commonwealth in which corporations, other than municipal, are defendants. They shall also have jurisdiction without further appeal of all writs of error and appeals from courts of common pleas, in which a sum less than one hundred dollars is involved; and in exercising this jurisdiction the State shall be divided by the Legislature into six convenient districts, in each of which an appellate court shall be annually held, and the several president judges of courts of common pleas whose districts are included shall be members of said court in such district."

I desire to state briefly the reasons why I think this section ought to pass. We need in the city of Philadelphia a court removed from local influences. The aggregated wealth and the aggregated population of the great city, developing individual and corporate interests and powers in such a manner as may, perhaps, be dangerous to the independence of the courts, makes it necessary that in the city of Philadelphia there should be a tribunal which is removed from local influences. That tribunal we have hitherto enjoyed in the court of nisi prius, which has been a greatly serviceable court and one without which we really cannot do. Such a court is also necessary for the dispatch of the immense mass of business which accumulates in this county. The district court for the city and county of Philadelphia, in which most of the issues are tried, has to-day more than one thousand six hundred cases upon its lists awaiting trial. Of course the process of disposing of so great a mass of cases must be slow; and if the jurisdiction of the court of nisi prius, which has generally been confined of late years to jury trials of an important character, the heavier causes of jury trials and equity business, is to be cast upon the district court in addition to that which it already has, with its vast accumulation of cases undisposed of, now upwards of one thousand six hundred, the delay of justice in this county must come to be something fearful.

I do not understand that any gentlemen in the Convention really doubt the existence of the necessity to which I have alluded; but there has been an intense and persistent determination on the part of the Convention that the judges of the Supreme Court shall not be taken from the duties to which they have hitherto been usually confined and to which it is proposed expressly to confine them by the terms of the new Constitution—that the judges of the Supreme Court shall not be taken away from the exercise of their appellate jurisdiction to hold the court of nisi prius.

The section I propose gets rid of that difficulty. It does not give to the city of Philadelphia an additional tribunal, but it continues to it in substance the same tribunal it had before, and by providing for it judges who are especially devoted to the duties of that court it gives us a court during the whole year through, instead of during four or five months of the year, at most, and then interrupted by the business of the court in banc, as has been the case in previous time. It gives us then this tribunal without interfering in the slightest degree with that which is the persistent feeling of this Convention that such a tribunal if it exists shall not take away the judges of the Supreme Court for the purpose of the transaction of its business. It gives us a tribunal presided over by a judge removed from local influences and elected by the qualified voters of the whole Commonwealth. There is propriety that the judge should be thus elected, not only in view of the reason that I have stated, but also in view of the character of the jurisdiction which this section provides for, because appeals from the Auditor General's office, which now consume much of the time of the court of common pleas in Dauphin county, would be transferred from a tribunal that is purely local; I say this with all respect to that court, for I have profound respect for the learned and distinguished judge who presides over it with great ability, but no man can say that for the future it will be as it has been in the past, when he shall pass away from it. It gives us a court which shall pass upon these questions, oftentimes of transcendent importance, which will be removed from the seat of government and from the immediate and overshadowing power of the government itself, which sometimes at least imperils the justice of decision in such a tribunal so situated.

It gives us, moreover, a tribunal that exercises in some degree a visitatorial power over corporations throughout the Commonwealth, and it meets another want, the existence of which no man can deny, but the remedy for which, as proposed by the Judiciary Committee, did not meet with the approval of the Convention; that is to say, it establishes an intermediate court which shall finally dispose of cases of minor importance and thus leave the Supreme Court proper relieved from the pressure upon it and enabled to transact all the vast business which now exists and hereafter in increasing degree must press upon it.

It is a fact, as was stated upon the floor when the circuit court question was under discussion, that the Supreme Court in this district is two years and a half in arrear, and I believe it is a fact that in the Western district of the State it is even more in arrears than that. How shall we get rid of this difficulty? Gentlemen coming from other districts whose lists are smaller and are usually disposed of at each term of the court fail to realize how severe the pressure is upon the bar in this district and in the Western district of the State by reason of the impossibility of the Supreme Court, situated as it is now, getting through the mass of business which has accumulated upon it. You will not relieve the difficulty by increasing the number of judges. Seven judges can decide no more cases than five. Business is to increase, and the two years and a half of accumulation of business which we have upon us now is to become still greater in the future, until it will amount to a positive denial of justice to suitors. But here is a remedy proposed which is free from the criticisms that have been heretofore upon it on this floor and which is a remedy for this difficulty, a remedy which makes two judges elected by the whole people of the Commonwealth, with whom there shall sit the judges of the court of common pleas of the particular district from which the case came up, who shall decide those cases of minor importance which ought not to occupy the time of the Supreme Court in banc and delay the business of other suitors in that tribunal.

It is for these reasons which I have thus briefly stated, and which, it seems to me, should commend themselves to the confidence of the Convention, that I have proposed this amendment. I feel, as a member of the Philadelphia bar and somewhat cognizant of the necessities of business, both in our local tribunals and in the Supreme Court, that there is a crying and vital necessity for a larger provision of judicial force than has yet been made, and for the existence of a tribunal which shall be free from those local influences which necessarily accumulate about a large city like this. All those difficulties, I think, are provided for, and I ask for this section the support of the gentlemen of the Convention.

MR. ALRICKS. Mr. President: This proposition has taken at least one of the delegates by surprise. It is thrown in upon us just after dinner, and we have had no opportunity whatever to consider it.

They ought to have a sufficient judicial force in the city of Philadelphia. No person will dispute that fact. Whether it shall be organized in a manner different from that which is to govern the other good people of the Commonwealth is another question. But, sir, when it was provided in our Constitution and in our law that the Commonwealth cases should be tried at the State Capital, it was done because it would best answer the convenience of the Commonwealth. It will be understood by gentlemen of this Convention that the public papers must be kept secure. It is necessary that they should be used in a court that is convenient to the place where those papers are deposited. Now, I appeal to the Convention that it would be very inconvenient for the Commonwealth to take her papers away from the capital of the State in order to accommodate other persons and to have the court in which those papers were wanted located in the city of Philadelphia.

I cannot for my own part see the propriety of the argument that has been made here that this new court should be established for the purpose of trying appeals from the decisions of the accountant department. You are all familiar with the value of the papers connected with the public institutions of the Commonwealth. You know the great inconvenience to which it would subject a bank to carry their papers from one end of the Commonwealth to the other. Why then should the officers of the Commonwealth having the papers in our accountant department be obliged to take them away from the capital of the State and come to the city of Philadelphia, where a court is to be established for the trial of cases in which the Commonwealth is a party.

If the judicial force of the city of Philadelphia is to be increased, let it be so; there will no objection to it; but I hope when it is increased it will be done with reference to the fact that it is the city of Philadelphia that is to be accommodated, and that other portions of the State are not to be put to an inconvenience, and above all that it will not be argued here that the cases of the Commonwealth should not be tried where the heads of the various departments are, and where the papers of the Commonwealth are kept by law. I therefore feel it my duty, as at present advised and as I understand the proposition, to vote against it.

Mr. CUYLER. I should like to say a single word before the vote is taken. If gentlemen do not like those special provisions that relate to matters outside of the county of Philadelphia, I have not the slightest objection, if the feeling of the Convention is to strike them out, that they should do so, by an amendment. What I am really after is the local tribunal. I think these other matters would be desirable, but I shall make no fight for them, and, therefore, if gentlemen who are not satisfied will move to strike them out I shall not have a word to say.

Mr. LANDIS. Can you not divide your section?

Mr. DALLAS. Let us have a division of the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the section.

Mr. CUYLER. The gentleman from Schuylkill (Mr. J. M. Wetherill) desires me to say that he moves to strike out from the section so much as relates to appeals from the Auditor General. His modesty forbids his rising, and therefore at his request I have ventured to make that motion in his name.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on that amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected, the ayes being thirty-three, less than a majority of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question now is on the section offered as an amendment.

Mr. CUYLER. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. DALLAS. I second the call.

Mr. CURRY. I should like to hear the section read before we vote upon it.

Mr. CUYLER. I withdraw so much of the section as relates to appeals from the Auditor General, at Harrisburg, and all that relates to appellate jurisdiction.

Mr. LILLY. I rise to a point of order. I think that portion has been voted upon once, and the amendment cannot be modified.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The gentleman cannot now withdraw any portion of the amendment.

Mr. CUYLER. I ask leave to withdraw from the section so much as relates to appeals from the Auditor General's office, at Harrisburg, and so much as relates to an appellate tribunal to which minor causes should go and be finally decided.

I do this not because I do not deem those desirable features, but because there seems to be so much of antagonism to them in the Convention that I would sacrifice those for the sake of securing what I esteem to be a great boon to the county of Philadelphia.

Mr. DARLINGTON. As a matter of order, I think the gentleman has a right to modify his amendment.

Mr. KAINE. I hope the gentleman from Philadelphia will indicate where he proposes to strike out from. If it is from the words "nisi prius," it will be all right. I think that is what he wants.

Mr. D. N. WHITE. I rise to a point of order. The yeas and nays have been ordered and all debate is out of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. TEMPLE. I submit that unless the Chair has withdrawn the call for the yeas and nays, the proposition is not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. I have not done so, and cannot withdraw them. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. CUYLER. Can I not amend the proposition?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Not after the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The CLERK proceeded to call the roll and Mr. Achenbach answered to his name.

Mr. CUYLER. I made the call for the yeas and nays, and it was seconded by Mr. Dallas. I ask leave to withdraw the call.

Mr. DALLAS. I withdraw the second.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The call is withdrawn.

Mr. LILLY. I renew the call, and I make the point that after the yeas and nays are called for the delegate cannot withdraw the call.

Mr. CUYLER. Mr. President: Have I the floor?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The delegate from the city has the floor.

Mr. CUYLER. Then I move to amend by striking out the words I have indicated.

Mr. LILLY. I rise to a point of order. My point of order is this: The yeas and nays were called for, and after they were ordered it was beyond the reach of the gentleman calling for the yeas and nays to withdraw the call. In addition to that the name of one gentleman has been called and his vote recorded.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Chair has decided the point.

Mr. TEMPLE. The roll had been partly called.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The delegate from the city moves to amend the amendment in the manner that he will indicate.

Mr. CUYLER. I propose to amend by striking out the words "have jurisdiction of all appeals from the settlement of accounts by the Auditor General of the State," and also by striking out all of the amendment after the word "defendants."

Mr. SHARPE. I should like to have it read as it will stand if amended.

Mr. HOWARD. I hope it will be read, I have an idea that it is intended that we shall not sue the Pennsylvania railroad company except in Philadelphia. I suppose that is what it is for.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The amendment will be read as proposed to be amended.

The CLERK read as follows:

"There shall be established a court in the city of Philadelphia to be called 'the Supreme Court nisi prius,' having two judges elected by all the qualified voters of the State, and holding office for fifteen years; but in the election of said judges, where there are to be more than one to be elected, no voter shall vote for more than one. They shall exercise the jurisdiction now possessed by the court of nisi prius, and in addition shall have original jurisdiction in all proceedings, either in law or equity, throughout the Commonwealth in which corporations, other than municipal, are defendants."

Mr. CORBETT. As I understand that proposition, we are not simply asked throughout the State to elect judges to hold a court in the city of Philadelphia, but we are asked to concede to that court original jurisdiction in all cases in which corporations are concerned.

Mr. CUYLER. Cases in which corporations are defendants, and original, but not exclusive, jurisdiction.

Mr. CORBETT. Exactly. If a corporation exists in the western part of the State, it is to be sued in this court in Philadelphia.

Mr. CUYLER. "May be," not "shall be."

Mr. CORBETT. Well; "may be." It can be sued here.

Mr. CUYLER. Move to amend it in that particular.

Mr. CORBETT. No, sir; I shall not move to amend, because I am opposed to the whole section in all its four corners. I am not willing to elect a judge for the city of Philadelphia. If she is not competent to elect judges to administer justice within her corporate limits all I have to say is strike out the power to elect at all, and let them be appointed. It is for herself, I say, to provide her own judges. I am not willing that we shall be convulsed all over the State by an election of judges who are to preside in the city of Philadelphia. I am not willing to do that. I am told that it has been done, but it has never been done with my consent. I never voted that there should be a nisi prius court in the city of Philadelphia. The Legislature gave it to you. She took the judicial force that belonged to the whole Commonwealth and she appropriated it to the city of Philadelphia. I say it is not right to ask the citizens of this State to be convulsed in an election that the city of Philadelphia alone is interested in. It is not right to give to a court, so constituted, jurisdiction over every corporation within the limits of the State. Other members may do as they please, I care nothing about it; but I shall not give my hand to this measure, nor shall I vote for it.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President: I am very sorry to say that I have a very bad cold, so that I shall be unable to make a speech. This, I have no doubt, will make the Convention very happy, while it (the cold) makes me very uncomfortable. I was going to offer an amendment, and I think I shall before I get through, and that is to strike out "Philadelphia" and insert "Pittsburg," which is a great deal better place to sue corporations than Philadelphia. [Laughter.] It is a curious proposition, is it not? Take it altogether, it is really funny. My friend, the delegate from Clarion, (Mr. Corbett,) has treated it seriously, as though the delegate from Philadelphia (Mr. Cuyler) had offered this in serious earnest and expected it would be adopted by the Convention. Why, Mr. President, it only provides that if a person suffers damages from any of the corporations throughout the Commonwealth he shall come to Philadelphia to bring his suit, but it leaves them at liberty to go over the Commonwealth and sue anybody wherever they can get a court. It is a kind of one-sided machine at any rate, and I think that in order to accommodate the public, if we are to have this kind of court it would be far better to strike out "Philadelphia" and insert "Pittsburg;" and in order to test the sense of the Convention, I move to strike out "Philadelphia" and insert "Pittsburg," which will be much more convenient for plaintiffs, and on that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. H. W. SMITH. I move further to amend by striking out "Pittsburg" and inserting "Reading." We have a better court room there than any room in Philadelphia.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. There is an amendment to the amendment pending. The question is on the amendment of the delegate from Allegheny (Mr. Howard) to the amendment of the delegate from Philadelphia (Mr. Cuyler.) I suppose the delegate from Berks did not mean his amendment seriously, or he would say "Erie." [Laughter.]

Mr. HOWARD. I merely want "Pittsburg" inserted. I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUYLER. Now I move further to amend by striking out so much as relates to corporations.

Mr. DALLAS. What was the vote just now taken?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. "Philadelphia" was stricken out and "Pittsburg" inserted.

Mr. CUYLER. I understood the Chair to decide that there was an amendment pending and that the amendment of the gentleman from Allegheny was out of order, and therefore I understood the vote just taken to be on my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Not at all. "Pittsburg" has been inserted.

Mr. ELLIS. I move to reconsider the vote on the amendment inserting Pittsburg. I voted with the majority.

Mr. BROOMALL. I second the motion. I voted in the majority.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

The motion was not agreed to, there being on a division, yeas thirty-four, noes thirty-six.

Mr. CUYLER. Mr. President: I wish I could have leave from the House to withdraw the amendment. ["No."] I offered the amendment in sober gravity.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The delegate can move to postpone the section, I suppose.

Mr. CUYLER. Well, let the vote be taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment of the delegate from Philadelphia as amended.

Mr. BOYD and others called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I trust now that the gentleman who has offered this amendment, who did it in good faith and with the expectation that he would advance the interests of Philadelphia, will be allowed to withdraw it. It is against the sense of this Convention as clearly established, and why should we refuse him the courtesy of withdrawing it when he asks to do so? I think it is a discourtesy which we ought not to perpetrate. I hope he will be allowed to withdraw his amendment—

Mr. TURRELL. I call the gentleman from Lycoming to order.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The proposition cannot be withdrawn now after a vote has been had upon it.

Mr. DALLAS. Unanimous consent can allow it to be done.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. I move that unanimous consent be given to withdraw the proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Does any delegate object?

Mr. LILLY. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Philadelphia (Mr. Cuyler) as amended.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHARPE. I offer the following as a new section:

"The office of associate judge not learned in the law is abolished; but the several associate judges in office when this Constitution shall be adopted shall serve for their unexpired terms."

Mr. President, I offer this section simply for the purpose of having a fair and square vote whether this office is to be continued longer or not. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BOYD. I second the call.

Mr. COCHRAN. I do not want to detain the Convention on a distinct proposition of this kind, but I want simply to say that I cannot vote for it as it stands under the circumstances in which we are placed. I believe it would be impossible for us to get along without these associate judges in some of the counties of the State; and that being the case, to abolish them utterly and entirely will deprive several of the counties of the State of that assistance which they need. I was very anxious that this office should be abolished myself, for I do not think it is generally very useful; but there are circumstances in which the services of an associate judge do become necessary and are required, and as we are now situated I cannot vote for an unconditional abolition of the office.

The yeas and nays having been required by Mr. Sharpe and Mr. Gibson, were taken and were as follow, viz:

Y E A S.

Messrs. Alricks, Baer, Baker, Barclay, Boyd, Clark, Corbett, Corson, Darlington, De France, Edwards, Ellis, Finney, Gilpin, Hanna, M'Murray, Palmer, H. W., Patton, Reynolds, Sharpe, Simpson, Van Reed, and Worrell—23.

N A Y S.

Messrs. Achenbach, Armstrong, Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Beebe, Biddle, Bigler, Black, Charles A., Black, J. S., Brodhead, Broomall, Buckalew, Bullitt, Carter, Cochran, Cronmiller, Curry, Curtin, Davis, Elliott, Ewing, Fell, Fulton, Funck, Gibson, Guthrie, Hall, Hay, Horton, Kaine, Lamberton, Landis, Lawrence, Lear, Lilly, Littleton, M'Culloch, Mann, Mantor, Metzger, Palmer, G. W., Parsons, Patterson, D. W., Patterson, T. H. B., Purman, Purviance, John N., Purviance, Samuel A., Read, John R., Reed, Andrew, Rooke, Ross, Smith, H. G., Smith, Henry W., Stewart, Temple, Turrell, Walker, Wetherill, J. M., Wetherill, J. Price, Wherry, White, David N., White, Harry, White, J. W. F. and Wright—63.

So the amendment was rejected.

ABSENT. — Messrs. Addicks, Ainey, Andrews, Baily, (Perry,) Bannan, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Bowman, Brown, Calvin, Campbell, Carey, Cassidy, Church, Collins, Craig, Cuyler, Dallas, Dodd, Dunning, Green, Harvey, Hazzard, Hemphill, Heverin, Howard, Hunsicker, Knight, Long, MacConnell, MacVeagh, M'Camant, M'Clean, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Newlin, Niles, Porter, Pughe, Runk, Russell, Smith, William H., Stanton, Struthers, Woodward and Meredith, President—47.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I move that the article be referred to the Committee on Revision and Adjustment.

Mr. TEMPLE. I second the motion.

Mr. BROOMALL. I ask the gentleman from Northampton to withdraw that motion, while I make a privileged motion.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I withdraw the motion for that purpose.

Mr. BROOMALL. I move to reconsider the vote by which section twenty-four was defeated.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. How did the gentleman from Delaware vote?

Mr. BROOMALL. I voted with the majority.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Is the motion seconded?

Mr. VAN REED. I second the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Did the gentleman from Berks vote in the majority?

Mr. VAN REED. I did.

Mr. LILLY. Upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. This is a debatable motion, since the question to which it applies is debatable.

MANY DELEGATES. Oh, no!

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If there is any doubt about it, I will produce the authority, but I suppose after spending two or three days upon this question—

Mr. DARLINGTON. Is this question debatable, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Chair does not think it is.

Mr. DARLINGTON. It has been decided by the President of this Convention that a motion to reconsider cannot be debated.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Chair does not think the motion can be debated, but if the gentleman from Lycoming has any authority upon the subject, the Chair will be glad to hear it.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. I do not desire to interpose any objection to the gentleman from Lycoming reading any good authority on parliamentary law which bears upon this subject; but I submit as a question of order that this Convention should follow the rule as established by the permanent President of the Convention.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Our own rules are certainly our guide, and in them it is laid down that a motion to reconsider is not a debatable question. It may be, however, that a good authority upon this subject will take a different position, and if the gentleman from Lycoming has any such authority, the Chair will be glad to hear it read.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I do not so understand it. This is a privileged motion.

Mr. STEWART. Read the rule.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I cannot find any such rule, and if the Clerk can refer the Convention to any rule on the subject I shall be glad to hear it. This is undoubtedly a privileged motion, and as it brings up the merits of the whole question, if the original question was debatable, then the motion to reconsider is debatable. I cite as authority upon that point Barclay's Manual:

"A motion to reconsider is not debatable, if the question proposed to be reconsidered was itself not debatable."

So authorities run along holding to that doctrine; but I do not think it necessary to quote them. We have already spent two or three days upon this question, and to reconsider will only be to open the question again for a long and tedious debate upon a matter which this House well understands already.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Chair will decide that the question is not debatable. The question is upon the motion to reconsider the vote by which the twenty-fourth section was rejected.

Mr. H. W. PALMER. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SHARPE. I second the call.

The yeas and nays were as follow, viz :

YEAS.

Messrs. Achenbach, Baer, Baker, Beebe, Biddle, Brodhead, Broomall, Clark, Corbett, Corson, Darlington, Davis, De France, Elliott, Fell, Gibson, Hanna, Hay, Horton, Howard, Kaine, Knight, Lamberton, MacConnell, Mann, Mantor, Parsons, Patterson, T. H. B., Purviance, John N., Purviance, Samuel A., Simpson, Smith, H. G., Temple, Turrell, Van Reed, Walker, White, Harry, White, J. W. F. and Wright—39.

NAYS.

Messrs. Atricks, Armstrong, Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Barclay, Bigler, Black, Charles A., Black, J. S., Boyd, Buckalew, Carter, Cochran, Cronmiller, Curry, Curtin, Edwards, Ellis, Ewing, Fulton, Funck, Gilpin, Guthrie, Hall, Landis, Lawrence, Lear, Lilly, Littleton, M'Murray, Metzger, Palmer, G. W., Palmer, H. W., Patterson, D. W., Patton, Purman, Read, John R., Reed, Andrew, Reynolds, Rooke, Ross, Sharpe, Smith, Henry W., Smith, Wm. H., Stewart, Wetherill, J. M., Wetherill, Jno. Price, Wherry, White, David N. and Worrell—48.

So the motion to reconsider was rejected.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Addicks, Ainey, Andrews, Bailly, (Perry,) Bannan, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Bowman, Brown, Bullitt, Calvin, Campbell, Carey, Cassidy, Church, Collins, Craig, Cuyler, Dallas, Dodd, Dunning, Finney, Green, Harvey, Hazard, Hemphill, Heverin, Hunsicker, Long, MacVeagh, M'Camant, M'Clean, M'Culloch, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Newlin, Niles, Porter, Pughe, Runk, Russell, Stanton, Struthers, Woodward and Meredith, President—46.

SEVERAL DELEGATES addressed the Chair.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I now renew my motion to refer the article to the Committee on Revision and Adjustment.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The gentleman from Luzerne (Mr. H. W. Palmer) is recognized as having the floor.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I only withdrew my motion to accommodate the gentleman from Delaware.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Luzerne.

Mr. H. W. PALMER. I offer the following amendment, to come in at this place as a new section;

"In counties where associate judges shall be authorized by law, such judges shall be chosen in the year 1877, and every fifth year thereafter, in the same manner as inspectors of elections under this Constitution. Any casual vacancy in the said office shall be filled by the Governor by the appointment for the unexpired term of an elector of the proper county who shall have voted for the officer whose place is to be filled."

I do not suppose that anything short of an earthquake or a thunderbolt could arrest the attention of this Convention now. You have decided to retain the associate judges. Now, let us reduce the nuisance to the lowest possible minimum by applying the same principle in their election that has been adopted for commissioners and county auditors. It is provided by this section which I have offered that after the year 1877—thus providing for the expiration of all the terms of the associate judges now in office—the associate judges shall be elected as inspectors of election are to be chosen under this Constitution. That is to say, every citizen is to have the privilege of voting for one of these officers, thus securing a representation of two political parties on the bench and transforming the associate judges from mere partisans, possibly to something better. The section further provides that in case of a casual vacancy occasioned by death, resignation or otherwise, the vacancy shall be filled by the appointment by the Governor, the appointee to be taken from the same party as the officer whose term is vacant. The principle of this amendment has been sufficiently discussed. It is doubtless thoroughly understood, and I trust that the Convention will adopt and apply it to the election of associate judges.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is upon the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I now again move that the article be referred to the Committee on Revision and Adjustment.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Chair does not think it to be in his power to entertain a motion of that kind which might prevent gentlemen from proposing new sections. Several gentlemen are on the floor apparently with sections to offer.

Mr. ANDREW REED. I move a reconsideration of the vote by which the twenty-third section was adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. How did the gentleman vote?

Mr. ANDREW REED. I voted in the affirmative.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Is the motion to reconsider seconded?

Mr. STEWART. I second the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Did the gentleman from Franklin vote in the affirmative?

Mr. STEWART. He did.

The motion to reconsider was rejected.

Mr. HALL. I offer the following amendment, to come in as a new section:

"SECTION.—The parties, by agreement filed, may in any civil case dispense with the trial by jury and submit the decision of such case to the court having jurisdiction thereof, and such court shall hear and determine the same. The evidence taken and the law as declared shall be filed on record, with right of appeal from the final judgment as in other cases and with like effect as appeals in equity."

Mr. BOYD. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BROOMALL. I second the call.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I would like to make one inquiry. This is exactly the principle of the existing referee law in this State, which has been applied in many counties. The parties may select as a referee the judge of an adjoining district as they often do, and he hears the case, and a writ of error goes direct from him to the Supreme Court.

Mr. HALL. You cannot compel the judge to hear the case.

Mr. BUCKALEW. The gentleman says you cannot compel him to hear it, but the principle is the same. By consent of both parties the judge, a man learned in the law, shall hear the law and the facts, and a writ of error shall go to the Supreme Court. What possible objection is there to this, if both parties agree and file their agreement in writing, and thus permit a summary trial of the question before a judge, saving an enormous consumption of the public time and the expense of a lawsuit which may be more or less protracted? I cannot see any objection to it and I cannot comprehend why any man in or out of the Convention should object to it.

Mr. PURMAN. I differ with my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Columbia, (Mr. Buckalew,) for I do see some reasons why persons in the Convention and out of the Convention should object to this proposition. It compels judges to find the facts. It is a responsibility which has heretofore never been placed on the judicial office. The discrimination between the powers of the judge and the powers of the jury has been well defined and well preserved. The jury comes from the country at large, and nobody knows who they are until their names are called. They vanish again and no man knows who they were. The judge must make his daily round among the people. He must ascertain the facts and determine upon them. He must in his official capacity meet all these parties, and this places the judge in such relations to the suitors that he ought not to be called upon to perform such duties. There are many other considerations that I might adduce against this proposition, but I believe that it is unnecessary to take up the time of this Convention with them. I trust that the section will be voted down.

Mr. BROOMALL. I trust that the Convention will adopt this section. I see no reason why, if the parties in the case should agree, a judge may not find the facts, saving the delay and the expense and the uncertainty in many cases of a jury trial. If the parties are willing, nobody else ought to object. The only trouble is now that although the court may find the facts at the request of the parties, the case cannot go up on that finding. This is a provision making it legal for the judge to find the facts and also making it his duty to find the facts, where the parties unite to ask it to be done. I cannot see any reason in the world why the people should not have this privilege. It would be a great saving of expense and time.

Mr. H. W. PALMER. I think that I can suggest a reason why this section ought not to be passed. The Convention seems desirous to load down the judges of this Commonwealth and to transform them from officers of judicial dignity to mere arbitrators and auditors. Now, in addition to what we have done, put the duty of finding facts on the judge, and how long will it be before one-half of the citizens of a county will hate and despise their judge, because in the performance of his duty he must believe one and disbelieve another. In the performance of the duty of finding facts he will decide for one man and against another, and in this way enmity will grow up between the people and their judges, and hatred will be engendered, and the judges, instead of enjoying the confidence and respect of the community, will be hated and despised. That, I think, is a good reason why this section should not pass.

Mr. BEEBE. I just wish to say that this is one of the much needed reforms which our section of the country elected delegates to hold a Convention for the purpose of accomplishing. This subject has been well considered, and in the minds of our community it is looked upon as a desired and absolutely needed reform, as much so as any before us.

Mr. DARLINGTON. If there has been any question which has been well discussed, thoroughly considered, and finally settled by this Convention, this is that very one. It has been over and over again rejected by this Convention, and there has been no new light thrown upon the subject now. I do not know what has been done with gentlemen in the way of changing their minds, but this is the same project so often defeated, and in its bold and naked form is intended to compel a judge to decide the facts of any case instead of the jury; to compel the judge to take the trouble of deciding the facts, reducing the testimony to writing and give his decision. Then the Supreme Court are to decide upon that as upon an appeal in a case in equity. It requires them again to go over all the facts of the case, unless, indeed, they should say that the finding of the court below is conclusive as to facts. But the great objection is that you are throwing upon a law judge the decision of facts, for which he is not particularly qualified and for which an unlearned man is better qualified.

Mr. W. H. SMITH. I appeal to the gentleman who calls for the yeas and nays on this question to withdraw that call. I do it in the interest of progress in this business. We can certainly settle this question without an appeal to the time-consuming process of the yeas and nays. I hope the call will be withdrawn, and that we shall settle this question.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Clerk will call the names of delegates.

The question was taken by yeas and nays with the following result:

YEAS.

Messrs. Achenbach, Armstrong, Baer, Barclay, Beebe, Boyd, Brodhead, Broomall, Buckalew, Bullitt, Carter, Cochran, Corbett, Corson, Cronmiller, Curry, Curtin, Davis, De France, Dunning, Edwards, Fell, Finney, Fulton, Gilpin, Guthrie, Hall, Howard, Landis, Lear, Lilly, MacConnell, M'Clellan, M'Culloch, Mantor, Patterson, D. W., Patterson, T. H. B., Patton, Reynolds, Ross, Simpson, Smith, Wm. H., Turrell, White, J. W. F. and Wright—45.

NAYS.

Messrs. Alricks, Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Baker, Biddle, Black, J. S., Brown, Clark, Darlington, Elliott, Ellis, Ewing, Funck, Gibson, Hanna, Hay, Horton, Kaine, Lamberton, Lawrence, M'Murray, Mann, Metzger, Palmer, G. W., Palmer, H. W., Parsons, Purman, Purviance, John N., Read, John R., Reed, Andrew, Rooke, Sharpe, Smith, Henry W., Stewart, Van Reed, Walker, Wetherill, J. M., Wetherill, Jno. Price, Wherry, White, David N., White, Harry and Worrell—41.

So the amendment was agreed to.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Addicks, Ainey, Andrews, Baily, (Perry,) Bannan, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Bigler, Black, Charles A., Bowman, Calvin, Campbell, Carey, Cassidy, Church, Collins, Craig, Cuyler, Dallas, Dodd, Green, Harvey, Hazzard, Hemphill, Heverin, Hunsicker, Knight, Littleton, Long, MacVeagh, M'Camant, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Newlin, Niles, Porter, Pughe, Purviance, Sam'l A., Runk, Russell, Smith, H. G., Stanton, Struthers, Temple, Woodward and Meredith, President—47.

Mr. FUNCK. I offer the following as a new section:

"SECTION —. The Legislature shall have authority to abolish the office of associate judge after the term of office of the present incumbents shall have expired."

I voted, Mr. President, in favor of retaining the office of associate judge, because I conceived that officer indispensable in counties in which no president judge resides. For instance, in judicial districts composed of more than one county, the members of the bar are unable to get along without the advantage of an associate judge in a county where the president judge does not reside. In the counties where they have a president judge, I apprehend an associate judge is unnecessary; he can perform no useful office. I have submitted this amendment for the purpose of giving the Legislature authority to abolish that office in all the counties where they have a president judge, and if hereafter each county should have a law judge, the office of associate judge might be entirely abolished. Without a constitutional permission of this character, the Legislature, as the Constitution now reads, would have no authority to abolish the office.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment of the delegate from Lebanon.

The amendment was agreed to; there being on a division yeas thirty-six, noes thirty-two.

Mr. COCHRAN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the twenty-first section of this article was adopted, for the purpose of amending the last clause in the report according to a suggestion which I made this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. It is moved to reconsider the vote by which the twenty-first section was adopted. Who seconds the motion?

Mr. BAER. I second the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Did the gentleman vote with the majority?

Mr. BAER. I did.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Will the gentleman from York indicate the purpose for which he moves a reconsideration?

Mr. COCHRAN. I will do so. I want to make the last clause of that section read as follows:

"All accounts filed in the register's office and orphans' court in those counties in which separate orphans' courts shall be established shall be audited by the court without expense to the parties."

The object is to remove the burden of auditing accounts from those counties in which there are no separate orphans' courts, and where there are separate orphans' courts then the accounts to be audited by the courts without expense.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. CORBETT. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. COCHRAN. I second the call.

The question was taken by yeas and nays with the following result:

Y E A S .

Messrs. Baer, Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Baker, Brown, Buckalew, Carter, Clark, Cochran, Corson, Cronmiller, Curry, Darlington, Davis, Dunning, Ellis, Ewing, Fell, Finney, Fulton, Funck, Gibson, Gilpin, Guthrie, Hall, Hanna, Howard, Kaine, Lamberton, Landis, Lawrence, M'Clean, Palmer, G. W., Palmer, H. W., Patterson, D. W., Patton, Pughe, Purman, Read, John R., Reed, Andrew, Ross, Smith, H. G., White, Harry, White, J. W. F. and Wright—44.

N A Y S .

Messrs. Achenbach, Alricks, Armstrong, Barclay, Beebe, Biddle, Black, J. S., Boyd, Brodhead, Broomall, Bullitt, Corbett, Curtin, De France, Edwards, Elliott, Hay, Horton, Lear, Lilly, MacConnell, M'Culloch, M'Murray, Mann, Mantor, Metzger, Parsons, Patterson, T. H. B., Purviance, John N., Rooke, Sharpe, Simpson, Smith, Henry W., Smith, Wm. H., Stewart, Turrell, Walker, Wetherill, J. M., Wetherill, John Price, Wherry, White, David N. and Worrell—42.

So the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

ABSENT. — Messrs. Addicks, Ainey, Andrews, Baily, (Perry,) Bannan, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Bigler, Black, Charles A., Bowman, Calvin, Campbell, Carey, Cassidy, Church, Collins, Craig, Cuyler, Dallas, Dodd, Green, Harvey, Hazzard, Hemphill, Heverin, Hunsicker, Knight, Littleton, Long, MacVeagh, M'Camant, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Newlin, Niles, Porter, Purviance, Samuel A., Reynolds, Runk, Russell, Stanton, Struthers, Temple, Van Reed, Woodward and Meredith, President—47.

MR. COCHRAN. I now move to amend the section by inserting after the word "court," in the seventeenth line, these words: "In those counties in which separate orphans' courts shall be established."

The idea of this amendment, as I before suggested, is simply to relieve the courts in those districts in which separate orphans' courts shall be established from the unendurable burden which would be imposed upon them of auditing all these accounts. It would be practically impossible for them to do it; and if they were required to do it, the result would be an indefinite postponement of the settlement of decedents' estates. The amendment does not interfere at all with the regulations prescribed or desired for the city of Philadelphia. It simply affects those districts in which these separate orphans' courts shall not be established, and I think it will occur to every gentleman here that it will be impossible for the courts in those districts to discharge this duty.

MR. ARMSTRONG. It is not perhaps worth while to renew the discussion on this question. I wish simply to bring to the notice of the Convention precisely the effect of the amendment. As the section now stands, after full discussion when it was under consideration before, it was determined by the Convention that these accounts should be audited without expense in every county of the State. If I supposed that the Legislature would give no sort of relief and that the judges must personally, and each for himself, hear all the evidence and pass upon the accounts, item by item, as the auditor would do, I should consider it impracticable; but the auditing of the account essentially is the passing upon the account. The evidence might be taken in any manner designated by law, as in equity, or the whole duty might be referred to the clerks who have official connection with the courts as respects these accounts. I do not apprehend the difficulty which the gentleman from York apprehends, or I would be of his opinion. I do not think that practically the difficulties which he apprehends will necessarily grow out of this section. I believe the section to be one of great value, even as modified by the amendment which he proposes, but I believe it is of greater value as it stands. If in any district a judge is over-worked, the remedy is easy by an application to the Legislature, which would not be refused I apprehend, to have a separate orphans' court constituted where undue burden exists. Besides, it preserves the uniformity of the system throughout the State, which has been one of the chief purposes, certainly a prominent purpose, of the Convention to accomplish in our judicial system. I will forbear from any further comment.

MR. CORBETT. I hope this amendment will not prevail. If it be adopted, in populous districts decedents' estates will be audited without any expense to the State, while in the country districts the estates will have to pay the fees of auditors; and let me say those fees are becoming onerous. They have not grown to such enormous amounts as we are told they have in this city; but they are approximating fast towards it, and they are becoming oppressive. I hope this Convention will not adopt a rule in this matter with reference to one part of the State and a different rule as to the other. The judicial force can be increased and this expense can be saved.

MR. BUCKALEW. A remark which has been made in favor of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from York is not satisfactory to me. If we are to adopt this section in its present form in order to force the Legislature to establish these orphans' courts in most of the counties, then indeed we have an argument against its adoption.

MR. CORBETT. I rise to an explanation. I did not say that the courts could be increased, but that the judicial force can be increased, and not by any orphans' court.

MR. BUCKALEW. I was not referring to anything the gentleman from Clarion had said.

Now, Mr. President, with regard to Philadelphia and Allegheny, we have made this arrangement: That the expense of auditing estates shall not be borne by the parties in each case, but shall be borne by the public. We provide that the judge shall receive a salary, to be paid him, instead of fees being paid by the parties to the proceeding. Now, in the interior if there is any abuse in this matter of auditing accounts (of which I know nothing in my section) the Legislature can extend this principle which we have applied where abuses do exist, in Philadelphia and Allegheny, and make it co-extensive with the entire Commonwealth if they choose; but at present it seems to me very improvident to establish this as a uniform rule throughout the State.

This provision is that the judge himself shall audit the accounts. I do not know what meaning will be attached to that; but an auditor, as we understand an auditor at present, is a person appointed by the court who hears all the testimony, who is to pass upon the credibility of the witnesses produced before him, who is to decide all the questions of law and all the intricate questions of fact involved, and who makes his report to the court. Now, when you say that the court shall audit an account I understand that you charge upon the judge himself that whole duty. The gentleman from Lycoming contemplates something very different under legislation at Harrisburg. It is that the Legislature shall relieve the judge from the pressure of this broad duty, that it shall provide that he may appoint examiners who shall hear testimony and who shall make report to him of the evidence taken, and then that he shall simply review that evidence, and probably hear the parties by argument, to make up his judgment. Without this provision the Legislature can do all that, and doubtless, if there be any necessity for it, on application they will do it. They will provide for the interior that these auditors, instead of passing judgment on questions of law and fact involved in hearings before them shall be simply examiners, and the court shall pass final judgment. As there is no necessity for the provision, therefore, I am in favor of leaving it where the gentleman from Lycoming proposes to go at all events; that is, with the Legislature; and I am impressed with the suggestion which he makes that if this section is retained it will compel the Legislature to extend these orphans' courts and thus to increase the number of judges in the State.

Now, sir, I am getting tired of creating new judges, two in the Supreme Court, two in the common pleas of Philadelphia, and additional orphans' court judges in Philadelphia, Pittsburg and Luzerne, and nearly one half of the Convention want us to add from fifteen to twenty more visi prius judges, all these to be quartered upon the treasury at from $4,500 to $7,000 a year. I think we had better not set traps for the Legislature to compel them to further increase our judicial force hereafter.

MR. EWING. I am in favor of the amendment proposed by the delegate from York. I think, in a large portion of the counties, it would be well to leave this matter to the Legislature, who can make provision to remedy any evils or defects that may arise in those counties that have not separate orphans' courts. I will not repeat what has been so well said by some of the gentlemen favoring this amendment as to the impropriety of burdening the courts; but I imagine, in those counties especially where you have not a law judge located in the county, and where a district is composed of two, three, four or five counties, he cannot be present at the times and as often as will be convenient to the parties in attending to an audit before the court. That audit, as I understand it, and as I suppose it is generally understood by the profession, means the taking of testimony, the entire investigation of the account.

Another thing: Unfortunately or fortunately, I do not know which, but a small proportion of lawyers, and I do not know that any larger proportion of judges, are competent accountants. Not one lawyer in ten is competent to take up and unravel a complicated and troublesome account, and probably some of the best lawyers are among the poorest accountants; and I know that a very considerable number of excellent, competent judges are totally unfitted to unravel a complicated orphans' court account. Now, in the counties where we are to have separate orphans' courts I imagine that judges will be selected with special reference to their legal ability, and also to their ability as accountants, and they will be much more competent to audit and pass upon these accounts than the judges who are selected for the common pleas without any reference to their qualifications as accountants. I shall vote for the amendment.

MR. BEEBE. Mr. President: I see no reason why the State should pay for the orphans' court and the orphans' audits in cities, and why in the country the estates, which are generally poor, should have to bear all the burden of the expense. Again, this abuse is not confined to cities alone, but it is becoming an evil all over the land; and that was the reason why this Convention voted largely for the section as it is. Now, why they should reverse this action I cannot conceive. I trust that the amendment will be voted down and the section retained.

MR. HANNA. Mr. President: Just as I anticipated when this special constitution manufacturing was entered into by the Convention, they would before they were through see many practical difficulties in the way of its being a successful machine so as to work satisfactorily to all parts of the Commonwealth.

I opposed this section because it was legislating for the city of Philadelphia and two other sections of the State, and not a general provision applicable to the whole Commonwealth. I am opposed to it upon principle. We have heard very much in considering this report of the duty of maintaining the uniformity of our judicial system, and for that reason I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from York. He sees the difficulty of imposing this burden of clerkships—for it is nothing but clerical duty—on the judges of his district. He sees the difficulty now of making the president judge of his district a mere clerk to audit administrators', executors' and guardians' accounts, and I see the difficulty here. I see why it should not apply to the city of Philadelphia with equally good reason, and for one I cannot consent that the judges of a constitutional court should be reduced to mere clerks.

The gentleman from Columbia (Mr. Buckalew) has spoken against increasing the number of judges, and I wish to correct what I think is a misapprehension on his part when he says that this section will do, because the municipalities will pay the salaries of the separate orphans' court judges. That is a mistake.

MR. BUCKALEW. No, sir, I did not say so.

MR. HANNA. I understood the gentleman to say that the municipality would pay the expenses of these courts, pay the salaries of the judges, and I differ with him because they will be State judges paid by the Commonwealth.

MR. BUCKALEW. Of course they will be paid by the State unless a law is passed imposing that duty on the city.

MR. HANNA. I do not see how that could be done. They will be just as much judges of the Commonwealth and State officials as the judges of the court of common pleas, and we have provided in this very article that the judges of the courts shall be paid by the Commonwealth and receive no salary, perquisite or anything of the kind from any other source. Therefore they must all be paid by the Commonwealth, and now if you establish a separate orphans' court for the city of Philadelphia, ten competent judges will be required.

MR. CORBETT. It says that they shall be paid by the State.

MR. HANNA. It does; but I have just said now that the orphans' court in the city of Philadelphia certainly cannot be managed without at least ten judges, in order to do all the auditing of the hundreds, I might almost say a thousand, of accounts annually filed in the register of wills' office. Just look at that, Mr. President. Those judges will be paid at least five thousand dollars per annum, and ten judges would add an additional sum to the cost of the judiciary of at least fifty thousand dollars per annum. I think it is all wrong. The Commonwealth should not pay for the settlement of decedents' estates. We provide here that they shall be settled without any cost to the parties. I say it is all wrong. The parties ought to pay for it. Why should the Commonwealth at large be at the expense of settling a guardian's account, an executor's account, an administrator's account? I can see no reason whatever for it, but the parties themselves should be at the expense of it, and properly and naturally so.

But, sir, the evil of excessive costs and charges can be corrected. I have no fear whatever on that score. We have our acts of Assembly legislating upon the subject, and the courts do adhere to it whenever their attention is brought to it; and that is the proper plan. They are the proper persons to correct abuses. But here we are now providing for a separate judiciary, expensive to the State, and relieving the proper persons that ought to pay for the expense of settling the estates in which they are interested. I cannot vote for this amendment, because, as I said before, it is destroying the uniformity we have heard so much about; and then, finally, I shall vote against the whole section.

Mr. BAER. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from York will prevail. As much as I was in favor of the clause proposed to be stricken out, originally, I am opposed to retaining it now, because the necessity for it ceased the moment we voted down section twenty-four; and I ask the lawyers of the interior, living in counties where no president judge resides, what would be the effect of this provision, and whether they are willing to change the practice as it now prevails and adopt this; whether this will not necessitate the fixing of a week for the special hearing of auditors' reports at which the same rigid rules will be enforced as are enforced on the trial of cases in the common pleas? A party will go there to have his account audited, and the court will expect him to have all his witnesses there and finish at the first hearing. The purpose of an auditing is that parties shall have ample time and opportunity of being heard and the auditor full time for hearing and eliciting all the facts, and if it becomes necessary it may be adjourned from day to day, that all the facts may be ascertained; but the moment you fix in the Constitution the provision that we have now there the judge will be so burdened with labors when he comes from another county that he will be compelled to ask you to go through your hearing at once, as though you were in a court trying a cause, and the effect will be that cases will not be tried half so well nor results attained half so well as they are by the system that now prevails. That it should apply to cities and to counties where they have separate orphans' courts, I agree, and will vote for so much; but I will vote to strike out all that the gentleman from York proposes to strike out and insert what he proposes to insert, in order that the interior may not be afflicted as it would be by that provision.

If section twenty-four is restored I shall then again approve of the clause proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Mr. President: I move that the hour of adjournment be extended half an hour for the purpose of finishing this article. ["No!" "No!"] If we do not finish this article this afternoon we shall waste the whole day tomorrow on it.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. Do I understand that the delegate from Somerset has concluded?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Chair so understood.

Mr. BROOMALL. I supposed I had the floor, if the motion of the gentleman from Northampton was not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The gentleman from Delaware has the floor.

Mr. BROOMALL. I shall not occupy two minutes. I only desire to say that the section as it stands makes the Commonwealth bear the expense of the auditing of accounts in all the counties of the State. The amendment proposes to make exceptions of certain small counties, among which mine happens to be numbered. Now, I am not willing that my constituents shall bear the expense of auditing their own accounts and shall help bear the expense of auditing the accounts in Philadelphia and Pittsburg also by paying their State taxes.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. ["Question!" "Question!"] I have not been heard on this section, and as it is a matter of the greatest moment possibly to the district in which I reside—and I know it is a matter of the greatest moment to the people at large—I desire to say a word.

I understand the precise question to be on the amendment offered by the honorable delegate from York (Mr. Cochran.)

May I inquire from the Chair the exact technical shape of the question before the Convention?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The shape of the question is to insert after the word "court" the words, "in those counties in which a separate orphans' court shall be established."

Mr. HARRY WHITE. Mr. President: I sympathize entirely with the purpose of the amendment offered by the honorable delegate from York; and in corroboration of that, I would observe that I voted against this section entirely when it was before the Convention on a prior occasion. I voted against it because I was opposed to the principle of allowing the Legislature to impose upon the several counties of this Commonwealth, irrespective of population, a separate orphans' court when it is a matter known to every delegate here that the most important practice before the judges holding our courts of common pleas sitting as orphans' courts are questions arising in the distribution of the estates of decedents. Therefore I was opposed to the principle of the section itself.

I am not, however, here as a dog in the manger, unwilling to afford relief when delegates representing other counties and parts of this Commonwealth come here and say that they must have relief in a particular direction. I am not willing to say that delegates representing the great city of Philadelphia, the great city of Pittsburg, the large and important county of Luzerne and the important counties of Lancaster and Schuylkill and Berks shall not be allowed the privilege of having a separate orphans' court if the business of those localities actually requires it, if the business of the locality actually interferes with the practice of the common pleas so greatly that it is impossible to transact the business there. But for the smaller counties, comprising a population of forty thousand, fifty thousand, sixty thousand, or seventy-five thousand inhabitants, I do pretend to be of opinion and insist that there shall be no gerrymandering, and no bartering should be allowed to obtain in the Legislature by which an act of Assembly is passed imposing a special orphans' court in those counties; and that is one of the reasons why I am in favor of the proposition offered by the honorable delegate from York, which deprives the Legislature of the power of imposing upon the judges of the court of common pleas or upon separate officials the duty—

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The hour of six having arrived, the Convention stands adjourned until to-morrow morning at nine o'clock.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-SEVENTH DAY.

THURSDAY, July 10, 1873.

The Convention met at nine o'clock A. M., Hon. John H. Walker, President pro tempore, in the chair.

Prayer by Rev. J. W. Curry.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

RECONSIDERATION.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I rise to a question of privilege. I move to reconsider the vote by which the action was taken yesterday on the proposition submitted by Mr. Cuyler. I voted with the majority.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. I hope that will not be done until we get to the judiciary article.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Chair will suggest to the delegate to withhold his motion until the article is taken up and before the Convention.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Very well.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. HOWARD asked and obtained leave of absence for a few days for Mr. Beebe, on account of ill health.

INVITATION TO GETTYSBURG.

Mr. CURTIN. Mr. President: I received the following telegram yesterday, which I desire to lay before the Convention, addressed to myself and the distinguished delegate from York (Mr. J. S. Black.)

"Gettysburg offers a suitable hall, desks and chairs, and as good hotel accommodations as in Philadelphia, and our railroad offers free travel. So please come.

"E. HARMAN."

This is in addition to the invitation of the authorities of Gettysburg.

Mr. STANTON. I move that the thanks of the Convention be extended for the invitation.

Mr. TEMPLE. I move that the thanks of the Convention be returned to the person who sent that telegram, and that it be laid on the table.

Mr. COCHRAN. I hope there will be no further notice taken of that communication, for the simple reason that, as I understand it, it proceeds only from an individual. It comes here simply in the form of a telegraphic dispatch, and I do not see how the Convention can properly take notice of that party. It seems to me that there ought to be no further action taken on the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. It is moved that the thanks of the Convention be tendered to the sender of this telegram.

The motion was agreed to.

M'ALLISTER MEMORIAL.

Mr. HAY, from the Committee on Accounts and Expenditures, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Accounts and Expenditures of the Convention respectfully report:

That the committee has carefully examined the account of John Sartain, dated June 23, 1873, for engraving portrait and signature of Hugh N. M'Allister, $77 50; the account of Henry Sartain, for printing five hundred copies of said portrait, $7 50; and the account of William W. Harding, dated July 7, 1873, for printing five hundred copies of the memorial volume to Mr. M'Allister, $225.

That the said accounts are all certified by the Committee on Printing and Binding of the Convention, which committee was authorized to have said memorial volume prepared and printed. The total cost of this volume, five hundred copies, three hundred and ten dollars, it is believed is very moderate, and even less than the memorial volume to Col. Wm. Hopkins, and its appearance, printing and binding are very creditable.

The following resolution is accordingly reported:

Resolved, That the accounts above mentioned are hereby approved, and that warrants be issued to William W. Harding for $225, to John Sartain for $77 50, and to Henry Sartain for $7 50 for the payment thereof.

The resolution was ordered to a second reading, read the second time and adopted.

PAPER ACCOUNTS.

Mr. HAY. I am also directed by the same committee to submit another report.

The report was read as follows:

The Committee on Accounts and Expenditures of the Convention respectfully reports:

That it has examined the account of William W. Harding, dated June 27, 1873, for two hundred reams of paper, amounting to $1,500.

That the contract of said Harding with the Convention required him to furnish paper in such quantities as might be ordered by the Committee on Printing and Binding of the Convention; that the paper mentioned in said account was furnished under the order of the said committee, and the bill approved by them. That the paper has been actually received by the Printer as appears by his receipt.

The following resolution is accordingly reported:

Resolved, That the above mentioned account of William W. Harding for two hundred reams of paper, amounting to $1,500 is hereby approved, and that a warrant be drawn in his favor for the said sum in payment thereof."

The resolution was ordered to a second reading, read the second time and agreed to.

THE STATE CAPITAL.

Mr. NILES. Mr. President: In the absence of the chairman of the Committee on the Legislature, (Mr. MacVeagh,) I am directed to submit a report from that committee.

The report was read as follows:

"The Committee on the Legislature, to which was referred the resolution of the delegate from Fayette, (Mr. Kaine,) instructing said committee to consider and report upon the expediency of incorporating a provision in the Constitution locating the capital of the State permanently at Harrisburg, beg leave to report the following section, with the recommendation that it be adopted:

SECTION —. No law changing the present location of the capital of the State at Harrisburg shall be valid until the same shall have been submitted to the people at a general election and ratified and approved by them.

(Signed,) WAYNE MACVEAGH,

Chairman,

In behalf of the Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The report will be laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

Mr. J. PRICE WETHERILL. I give notice that a minority report will be presented by my colleague (Mr. Dallas.) He is not here this morning, or he would present it.

Mr. KAINE. I believe the President has decided that no minority reports are in order. A minority cannot report an article.

THE JUDICIAL SYSTEM.

Mr. MANN. I move that we proceed to the consideration of the article on the judiciary.

The motion was agreed to, and the Convention resumed the consideration on second reading of the article on the judiciary.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I now renew my motion to reconsider all the votes on the proposition submitted yesterday by the gentleman from Philadelphia (Mr. Cuyler.)

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Only one vote can be reconsidered at a time. The last vote must first be reconsidered.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I desire to reconsider the motion by which it was voted down, as well as the motion by which "Pittsburg" was inserted instead of "Philadelphia."

Mr. STANTON. I should like to ask the gentlemen from Lycoming if it is the additional section he asks to reconsider.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The additional section proposed by the gentleman from Philadelphia (Mr. Cuyler.)

Mr. MANN. We refused yesterday to reconsider one of those votes.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. It is very manifest that the occurrences of yesterday were in some degree unfortunate. I cannot suppose for a moment that any member of this Convention intended anything like disrespect or want of courtesy to the gentleman from Philadelphia.

Mr. MANN. I raise the point of order that one of these votes cannot be reconsidered.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The gentleman from Potter raises the question that the Convention refused yesterday to reconsider the vote by which "Pittsburg" was inserted in the stead of "Philadelphia" and that therefore that vote cannot be reconsidered this morning. The Chair believes that the gentleman from Potter is correct in his statement.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. I ask leave to make a statement at this time. I sympathize entirely with what has been said by the delegate from Lycoming with reference to this matter, and I think the shortest way to get rid of the difficulty, and accomplish the desire of all parties, would be for the Convention to give unanimous consent for the withdrawal of this proposition and for the expunging from the Journal of all proceedings relating thereto. That can be easily done, and I hope unanimous consent will be given. I make a motion to that effect.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President: Is this question debatable?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. It is not debatable.

Mr. HOWARD. Very well, then; I hope it will not be debated.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Chair was trying to ascertain whether a motion to reconsider had not been acted upon yesterday. A motion is made that the Convention consent to a withdrawal of the proposition of Mr. Cuyler, and its expunging from the Journal. Will the Convention give unanimous consent?

Unanimous consent was given.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from York (Mr. Cochran) to the twenty-first section.

Mr. COCHRAN. If in order I wish to modify my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. You cannot now modify it.

Mr. COCHRAN. If I cannot modify it, I move to amend it by striking out all after the word "court," in the sixteenth line, to and including the word "court," in the eighteenth line, and inserting these words:

"When there is any dispute about any account filed, or about the distribution of the estate of any decedent in any separate orphans' court, such dispute shall be determined by such court without an auditor, and shall be audited without expense to parties."

This does not change the practical effect of the section in the least, nor does it interfere with the other part of the section, relating to auditing in the city of Philadelphia. This proposition says that whenever a dispute occurs about an account filed or about the distribution of the estate of any decedent in any of the separate orphans' courts, then such dispute shall be determined by the court without an auditor and without expense to the parties. That is to say, wherever there is a separate orphans' court the matter shall be determined without an auditor and without expense to the parties. Where there is no separate orphans' court the matter is not regulated by this amendment, but left to stand on the law as it now is. It is precisely the same in effect as that I offered yesterday.

Mr. TURRELL. As I understand it, it leaves the matter just as it was left yesterday, and the same objection exists to it that it makes one rule for one part of the State and another rule for another part of the State. Where there are separate orphans' courts, the auditing will be done without expense to parties; where there are not, it will be done at the expense of parties.

Mr. TEMPLE. I should like to hear the amendment to the amendment read.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. It will be read.

The CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "court," in the sixteenth line, to and including the word "court," in the eighteenth line, and to insert as follows:

"Where there is any dispute about any account filed or about the distribution of the estate of any decedent in any separate orphans' court, such dispute shall be determined by such court without an auditor," and then follow the words "without expense to parties," &c.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President: It is very difficult to know what the interpretation of the word "dispute," in that connection, would be. It is certainly a word not very familiar, and I think not often used in legal enactments. I should be a little at a loss to know what would be meant by a "dispute." If the section is to be adopted in that way there should be something to make the "dispute" more certain, by saying "in the nature of exceptions," or "when exceptions are filed." But it is worth while to consider that this whole system of auditors is apart from the ordinary exercise of judicial functions. Any matter which is to be audited is a judicial inquiry, and there is no reason why the important matters which are referred to an auditor ought not to go before the court by the same process and in the ordinary mode in which other litigations are pursued. The reference to a master is a matter of convenience, and every lawyer here knows that proceedings in the orphans' court are virtually proceedings in equity, so recognized repeatedly. If, then, a matter of audit should arise upon any estate, the orphans' court charged with the necessity of deciding that question could just as well decide it as they could decide other litigation that might arise. Nor do I see any objection to requiring the court to pass directly upon those questions. It does not involve the necessity of the judge, in every instance, hearing all the evidence or figuring upon mere matters of account. There are clerical duties which the court can delegate to its clerks, or, in instances requiring it, refer to a master, and without at all impinging upon the principle that the audit shall be without expense to the parties, in the same sense that the trial of any other issue at law or in equity before the court is without expense to the parties.

Mr. HANNA. The gentleman says that matters arising in the distribution may be referred to masters. Now, if that is so, how shall the master be paid?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I said that it might be referred to a master, but the master designated has official connection with the court and is designated in the section, by which the register is made ex officio the clerk of the court, and therefore the master to that extent, and always under the supervision and direction of the court. The section provides for it specifically and in terms and amply.

I think the whole system of auditing by which important questions, which are really of judicial consideration, have been taken by a false and injurious practice and vested in persons outside, who come into court to present their notions on the question, and which must be afterwards passed upon by the court, is of itself a blot upon our judicial system. It is to be noticed that the judicial system of Pennsylvania has been a growth, and it has grown up with its good and with its evil mingled together. This is the first time in the history of Pennsylvania that we have attempted to systematize and organize the judicial system of the State into something like harmony and symmetry, and I think we ought to persist in that attempt. We have had this system of auditing growing and growing until it is an abuse of monstrous proportions in the city, and it is growing every day in the country. Now I believe that the section is right as it stands, and that there is no evil connected with it that a little experience and a little legislation from time to time as needed, will not fully correct, at the same time that it leaves the judicial system of Pennsylvania in harmony with itself and complete. The sooner we blot out this system of independent auditing the better on all accounts.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I think the debate on this point has continued about long enough, and I therefore move the previous question. Otherwise we shall spend another day on this subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Eighteen gentlemen must rise to sustain the call for the previous question.

Mr. BEEBE. I suggest to the gentleman to withdraw his motion, inasmuch as no one seems desirous to speak, and we are ready for a vote.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I am afraid if the previous question is not ordered we shall waste another day, mostly by the same parties, on the same subject-matter.

SEVERAL DELEGATES. Let us take a vote on the amendment.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I will withdraw the call in case a vote can be taken.

Mr. BOYD. I object to conditions.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the proposed amendment of the delegate from York (Mr. Cochran) to his original amendment.

The yeas and nays were required by Mr. Cochran and Mr. Landis, and were as follow, viz:

Y E A S .

Messrs. Achenbach, Baer, Baily, (Perry,) Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Barclay, Black, Charles A., Buckalew, Carey, Carter, Cochran, Corson, Cronmiller, Curry, Curtin, Davis, De France, Ellis, Fulton, Funck, Gibson, Gilpin, Green, Hall, Horton, Lamberton, Landis, Lawrence, MacConnell, M'Clean, M'Culloch, Patterson, D. W., Patton, Purviance, John N., Reynolds, Rooke, Ross, Smith, H. G., Smith, Henry W., Wetherill, Jno. Price and White, Harry—40.

N A Y S .

Messrs. Alricks, Armstrong, Beebe, Biddle, Bigler, Boyd, Brodhead, Broomall, Brown, Bullitt, Clark, Corbett, Dallas, Darlington, Edwards, Elliott, Guthrie, Hanna, Howard, Kaine, Lear, Lilly, Long, M'Murray, Mann, Mantor, Niles, Palmer, G. W., Palmer, H. W., Parsons, Patterson, T. H. B., Pughe, Purman, Purviance, Sam'l A., Reed, Andrew, Sharpe, Simpson, Smith, Wm. H., Stanton, Stewart, Temple, Turrell, Van Reed, Walker, Wetherill, J. M., Wherry and White, David N.—47.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Addicks, Ainey, Andrews, Baker, Bannan, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Black, J. S., Bowman, Calvin, Campbell, Cassidy, Church, Collins, Craig, Cuyler, Dodd, Dunning, Ewing, Fell, Finney, Harvey, Hay, Hazzard, Hemphill, Heverin, Hunsicker, Knight, Littleton, MacVeagh, M'Camant, Metzger, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Newlin, Porter, Read, John R., Runk, Russell, Struthers, White, J. W. F., Woodward, Worrell, Wright and Meredith, President—48.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question recurs on the original amendment of the delegate from York (Mr. Cochran) to insert after the word "court" in the seventeenth line the words "in those counties in which separate orphans' courts shall be established."

Mr. COCHRAN. I wish to make just one remark. There were some gentlemen who voted against the amendment to the amendment under the impression that where separate orphans' courts were established and where there were no exceptions filed, there the court could refer the account to an auditor for action. That was the objection to the amendment to the amendment on the part of several gentlemen. Now, this proposition, it will be observed, is at least clear of that objection. The clause would then read:

"All accounts filed in the register's office and orphans' court, in those counties, in which separate orphans' courts shall be established, shall be audited without expense to the parties."

That would remove entirely the objection that an account to which no exceptions were filed could, in those counties, be still referred to an auditor by the court and the parties put to expense.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. My impression is that when the section was before the Convention before it was so modified in the seventeenth line, that it reads now, "all accounts to which exceptions have been filed." ["No." "No."] I think it was so modified.

Mr. DARLINGTON. I tried to get it in, but it was refused, and the section was not so modified.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. That modification was not made.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Then I am in error in that, and I stand corrected. I now recall that that amendment was rejected upon the ground that it would leave it open to the courts to refer accounts to which no objections were filed. I supposed that the amendment on which we have just voted was the substitute offered by the gentleman from York (Mr. Cochran) for the one just now pending. Doubtless I was in error on that subject, but it involves the same question. I suppose the Convention is ready to vote upon it as involving only the question and no more nor less than that on which we have just voted.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment of the delegate from York (Mr. Cochran.)

Mr. COCHRAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. D. W. PATTERSON. I second the call.

Mr. M'CLEAN. Does it not require ten members to second the call for the yeas and nays?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. It does.

Mr. CORSON. We certainly do not understand this question.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. It requires ten members to second the call for the yeas and nays. Ten have not risen to second the call.

Mr. CORSON. I trust that we shall leave this matter of auditors alone. It seems to me that we—

Mr. D. W. PATTERSON. I rise to a question of order. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Do ten gentlemen rise to second the call for the yeas and nays?

More than ten gentlemen rose, and the yeas and nays were taken with the following result:

YEAS.

—Messrs. Baily, (Perry,) Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Black, Charles A., Buckalew, Carey, Carter, Cochran, Corson, Cronmiller, Curry, Davis, Ellis, Fulton, Funck, Gilpin, Green, Hall, Horton, Kaine, Lambertson, Landis, Lilly, M'Culloch, Palmer, G. W., Palmer, H. W., Patterson, D. W., Patton, Pughe, Purviance, John N., Read, John R., Reynolds, Ross, Wetherill, Jno. Price and White, Harry—34.

NAYS.

Messrs. Achenbach, Alricks, Armstrong, Baer, Barclay, Beebe, Biddle, Bigler, Black, J. S., Boyd, Brodhead, Broomall, Brown, Bullitt, Campbell, Clark, Corbett, Dallas, Darlington, De France, Dunning, Edwards, Elliott, Guthrie, Hanna, Howard, Lawrence, Lear, Long, MacConnell, M'CLean, M'Murray, Mann, Mantor, Newlin, Niles, Parsons, Patterson, T. H. B., Purman, Purviance, Samuel A., Reed, Andrew, Rooke, Sharpe, Simpson, Smith, Henry W., Smith, Wm. H., Stanton, Stewart, Temple, Turrell, Van Reed, Walker, Wetherill, J. M., Wherry, White, David N. and White, J. W. F.—56.

So the amendment was rejected.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Addicks, Ainey, Andrews, Baker, Bannan, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Bowman, Calvin, Cassidy, Church, Collins, Craig, Curtin, Cuyler, Dodd, Ewing, Fell, Finney, Gibson, Harvey, Hay, Hazzard, Hemphill, Heverin, Hunsicker, Knight, Littleton, MacVeagh, M'Camant, Metzger, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Porter, Runk, Russell, Smith, H. G., Struthers, Woodward, Worrell, Wright and Meredith, President—43.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question recurs on the section.

Mr. M'CLEAN. I desire to so amend this section as to abolish the office of register of wills by striking out, in the first line, down to and including the first four words of the second line.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The words proposed to be stricken out will be read:

The CLERK read as follows:

"A register's office for the probate of wills and granting letters of administration, and."

Mr. M'CLEAN. I can see no necessity for the office of register of wills. I cannot see why all the business of that office cannot as well, and better, be transacted by the orphans' court through the clerk or clerks thereof. Why should all this circuitry, of which every gentleman in the Convention is so well aware, continue to exist? Every one knows that if the settlement of an account goes into the register's office it has to be copied and certified to the office of the orphans' court, and in that way gets into the orphans' court. I would ask gentlemen why the orphans' court cannot take charge of the estate of a decedent from the moment he is dead until the distribution of the estate among those who are entitled to it. Parties are unnecessarily burdened with costs by the existence of these two separate offices. There is no need for their existence, and I hope my proposition will receive the consideration of the Convention, and that the amendment may be adopted. The section as already adopted has abolished the register's court. This is taking one step toward the end at which I am aiming. The register's court has been found to be superfluous and useless. Why not abolish the office of register itself?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President: I think it is necessary to retain that office. Gentlemen of the Convention will bear in mind that there are judicial districts composed of several counties and that it is necessary there should be an office always open in those counties. It is not necessary to discuss it; the matter was discussed before.

Mr. M'CLEAN. I ask the gentleman if there is not a clerk of the orphans' court in every county, and if he might not as well transact the business as the register?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. That would be a distinction without a difference, I think.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment of the delegate from Adams (Mr. M'CLean.)

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HANNA. I move to amend the section in the fifth and sixth lines by striking out the words, "wherein the population shall exceed 150,000 shall, and in any other city or county," so as to read:

"In every city and county the Legislature may establish," &c.

Mr. TEMPLE. That has been voted down.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. That amendment is not now in order.

Mr. SIMPSON. I rise to a point of order. That very amendment has been voted down in the Convention.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The amendment was proposed heretofore and voted down in Convention, and it is therefore not in order now.

Mr. J. M. BAILEY. Mr. President: If the chairman of the Judiciary Committee desires to preserve the entire symmetry of the system, I would suggest to him whether it would not be well to make some provision for the auditing of accounts filed in the court of common pleas. They are just as liable to pass upon the auditing system as those filed in the orphans' court; and if he wants to make this system entirely complete he should make some provision for them. I have no amendment to offer, but I merely suggest it to him.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I suppose it would be difficult to distinguish as a matter of mere principle in any way that would exclude the accounts suggested; and yet I think it is not judicious to introduce such an amendment in this place and at this time. It pertains to the duties of the common pleas court; and if the system works well under this section, as we believe it will, the Legislature can add that duty at their discretion.

Mr. SIMPSON. An objection to the suggestion of my friend from Huntingdon is this: That in the courts of common pleas there are generally creditors alone interested, who are always vigilant in looking after their interests, while in the orphans' courts it is dead men's estates that are to be settled in which widows and orphans are interested, who are not always able to look after their interests.

Mr. CORSON. Is it in order now to move an amendment to this section?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. It is.

Mr. CORSON. I move to strike out all after the word "court," in the sixteenth line.

Mr. MANN. That motion was made yesterday and voted down.

Mr. CORSON. That is the reason I make it to-day. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The amendment is not in order, having been offered hitherto and voted down.

Mr. CORSON. I would like to know what is the exact amendment before the Convention.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. There is no amendment.

Mr. CORSON. Is the question upon the section?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is upon the section.

Mr. CORSON. I wish to say just two words. I do trust that this Convention will have the good sense either to adopt some such provision as was proposed this morning by the gentleman from York, or to vote down this section, because we are treading upon very dangerous ground. We cannot undertake to regulate estates by a constitutional provision, and the poor people of the State by this section will be compelled to pay for the auditing of rich men's estates. We cannot afford to do that, and I for one will never agree to a proposition of that kind. I trust the section will be voted down.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the section.

Mr. HANNA. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. D. W. PATTERSON. I second the call.

The section was read as follows:

SECTION 21. A register's office, for the probate of wills and granting letters of administration, and an office for recording of deeds, shall be kept in each county. The register's court is hereby abolished, and the jurisdiction and powers thereof are vested in the orphans' court. In every city and county wherein the population shall exceed one hundred and fifty thousand the Legislature shall, and in any other city or county may, establish a separate orphans' court, to consist of one or more judges who shall be learned in the law, and which court shall exercise all the jurisdiction and powers now vested in, or which may hereafter be conferred upon, the orphans' court, and thereupon the jurisdiction of the judges of the court of common pleas within such city or county in orphans' court proceedings shall cease and determine. The register of wills shall be compensated by a fixed salary to be paid as may be provided by law. He shall be clerk of the orphans' court and subject to the direction of said court in all matters pertaining to his office. Assistant clerks may be appointed by the register, but only with the consent and approval of the court. All accounts filed in the register's office and in the orphans' courts in those counties in which separate orphans' courts shall be established, shall be audited by the court without expense to parties, except where all parties in interest in a pending proceeding shall nominate an auditor, whom the court may, in its discretion, appoint.

The yeas and nays were taken with the following result:

YEAS.

Messrs. Achenbach, Alricks, Armstrong, Baer, Baily, (Perry,) Barclay, Beebe, Biddle, Black, Charles A., Boyd, Brodhead, Broomall, Buckalew, Bullitt, Campbell, Carey, Carter, Corbett, Curry, Dallas, De France, Dunning, Edwards, Elliott, Ellis, Finney, Guthrie, Horton, Howard, Lamberton, Lilly, Long, MacConnell, M'Murray, Mann, Mantor, Newlin, Niles, Palmer, G. W., Palmer, H. W., Parsons, Patterson, T. H. B., Patton, Pughe, Purman, Purviance, John N., Purviance, Samuel A., Read, John R., Sharpe, Simpson, Smith, Wm. H., Stanton, Stewart, Temple, Turrell, Van Reed, Walker, Wetherill, J. M., Wetherill, Jno. Price, Wherry, White, David N., White, J. W. F. and Wright—63.

NAYS.

Messrs. Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Black, J. S., Brown, Clark, Cochran, Corson, Cronmiller, Curtin, Darlington, Davis, Funck, Gilpin, Green, Hall, Hanna, Kaine, Landis, Lawrence, Lear, M'CLean, Patterson, D. W., Reed, Andrew, Reynolds, Ross, Smith, Henry W. and White, Harry—26.

So the section was agreed to.

ABSENT—Messrs. Addicks, Ainey, Andrews, Baker, Bannan, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Bigler, Bowman, Calvin, Cassidy, Church, Collins, Craig, Cuyler, Dodd, Ewing, Fell, Fulton, Gibson, Harvey, Hay, Hazzard, Hemphill, Heverin, Hunsicker, Knight, Littleton, MacVeagh, M'Camant, M'Culloch, Metzger, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Porter, Rooke, Runk, Russell, Smith, H. G., Struthers, Woodward, Worrell and Meredith, President—44.

MR. PARSONS. I offer an amendment as a new section.

MR. ARMSTRONG. I ask the gentleman to allow me to perfect the phraseology of the eighth section, which I trust may be done by unanimous consent.

MR. PARSONS. Certainly.

MR. ARMSTRONG. In the third line of the eighth section the words "criminal courts" are used. I propose to strike it out and insert the words, "courts of oyer and terminer and the courts of quarter sessions," for the reason that there are certain duties pertaining to the court of quarter sessions which are not technically criminal, and therefore the phraseology should be changed.

The amendment was agreed to.

MR. PARSONS. I now offer the following amendment as a new section:

"Whenever a county shall contain forty thousand five hundred inhabitants it shall be constituted a separate judicial district and shall elect one judge learned in the law, and the Legislature shall provide for additional judges as the business of said districts may require. Counties containing a population less than is sufficient to constitute separate districts shall be formed into convenient single districts, or if necessary may be attached to contiguous districts as the Legislature may provide. The office of associate judge not learned in the law is abolished, excepting in counties not forming separate districts, but the several associate judges in office when this Constitution shall be adopted shall serve for their unexpired terms."

MR. BAER and Mr. Parsons called for the yeas and nays on the amendment, and ten delegates rising to second the call, the yeas and nays were ordered.

MR. ARMSTRONG. This seems to me very much as though it were "Monsieur Tonson come again." I should like the gentleman who has offered this amendment to indicate to the Convention where in it differs from that which has been voted down.

MR. MANN. I rise to a question of order. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and debate is not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Chair sustains the point of order.

MR. ARMSTRONG. I rise to a point of order?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. What is your question of order?

MR. ARMSTRONG. I inquire of the Chair whether the number forty-five thousand was not voted upon. Forty thousand was, and fifty thousand and fifty-five thousand.

MR. PARSONS. This is forty thousand five hundred.

MR. ARMSTRONG. And that is all the difference?

MR. PARSONS. Yes, sir.

MR. ARMSTRONG. Very well, sir. I suppose it is understood.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The same principle has been voted upon, but not the same number.

The question was taken by yeas and nays, and resulted as follows:

YEAS.

Messrs. Achenbach, Addicks, Alricks, Baer, Beebe, Biddle, Boyd, Brodhead, Brown, Bullitt, Campbell, Carey, Clark, Corbett, Corson, Dallas, Darlington, Davis, De France, Dunning, Edwards, Elliott, Ellis, Finney, Green, Hanna, Hay, Horton, Howard, Kaine, Lamberton, Lear, Long, MacConnell, Mann, Mantor, Newlin, Niles, Palmer G. W., Palmer, H. W., Parsons, Patterson, T. H. B., Pughe, Purviance, John N., Purviance, Samuel A., Read, John R., Simpson, Smith, H. G., Smith, Wm. H., Stanton, Temple, Turrell, Van Reed, Walker White, Harry, White, J. W. F., Worrell and Wright—58.

NAYS.

Messrs. Armstrong, Baily. (Perry,) Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Barclay, Bigler, Black, Charles A., Black, J. S., Broomall, Buckalew, Carter, Cochran, Cronmiller, Curry, Curtin, Fulton, Funck, Gilpin, Guthrie, Hall, Landis, Lawrence, Lilly, M'Clean, M'Culloch, Patton, Purman, Reed, Andrew, Reynolds, Rooke, Ross, Sharpe, Smith, Henry W., Stewart, Wetherill, J. M., Wetherill, J. Price, Wherry and White, David N.—37.

So the amendment was agreed to.

ABSENT. — Messrs. Ainey, Andrews, Baker, Bannan, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Bowman, Calvin, Cassidy, Church, Collins, Craig, Cuyler, Dodd, Ewing, Fell, Gibson, Harvey, Hazzard, Hemphill, Heverin, Hunsicker, Knight, Littleton, MacVeagh, M'Camant, M'Murray, Metzger, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Patterson, D. W., Porter, Runk, Russell, Struthers, Woodward and Meredith, President—38.

Mr. STEWART. I offer the following as a new section:

"SECTION —. No election to fill a vacancy in any court of record shall be for a longer period than the unexpired term."

Mr. President, the Convention seems to have definitely determined to leave to the Legislature the business of districting the State. Now, the purpose of this amendment is to have all the commissions of the judges expire at the same time, so that when the Legislature does come to district the State judicially it will not be embarrassed by any such consideration as the unexpired terms of judges, but may district the State with such freedom of action as it ought to have when it undertakes a business of this character. I think the amendment ought to commend itself to the judgment of the Convention.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. A section of this importance ought not to pass without consideration. The principle involved in it has been very often considered; and, without being able to speak from the record, my impression is that it is not adopted in any of the States, or, if in any, certainly in very few. It is evident that an appointment for an unexpired term may be for any time greater than two months and any time between two months and the entire length of term. The effect of it will be that men of such character and standing as would adorn the position would refuse to take it for so small a term. There is no advantage in it, and it is inconsistent with the provision which we have already made as to the Supreme Court. Its judges hold their office for the entire term. There is no advantage in this idea unless it be as a mode of laying the ground work for the cumulative vote by having the terms of two or three or more necessarily expire at the same time so as to create the necessity of electing two or three or more at the same time. I may say that the question is one of those which were deliberated upon and passed upon by the Judiciary Committee with very great care and with a conclusion that it was not a judicious section to adopt.

Mr. ANDREW REED. Mr. President: I am in favor of the section proposed by the member from Franklin. It places the judges in accordance with all the other officers of the State. We elect a Senator for the unexpired term, and so on. It is well known that we cannot legislate a judge out of his office. That has been tried in the district from which the chairman of the Judiciary Committee comes; and if we do not pass this, just see the effect that will be produced. The Legislature will never be free to district the State on account of the different times at which the terms of the judges will expire.

Owing to the development of some parts of the State in wealth or from some other cause, there may be a great increase of population in those parts which will require a districting of the State; and yet there may be a judge there whose term of office will not expire with the rest of the judges of the State. You cannot legislate him out; and there is a bar to the free districting of the State. I can see that it may be a question of great moment, and this will leave the Legislature free every ten years to district the State in accordance with the necessities of population or the judicial business of the people.

Mr. BROOMALL. I desire to say only that this question was fully discussed when the amendment to the Constitution providing for the election of judges came up before the Legislature and before the people. It was then thought advisable that the terms of the judges of the Supreme Court should be adjusted just as this provision requires those of all the judges of the courts of common pleas to be; but the disadvantage of allowing a judge to be elected for so short a time as two or three months under certain circumstances, the disadvantage of allowing such unequal terms to men of equal capacity, was such that whatever conveniences might arise from the plan were waived then, and I believe we have no new lights upon the question that would induce us to try now an experiment which was not considered judicious then. The Committee on the Judiciary debated this question and, I think, were unanimous in concluding that our predecessors in 1850 were right in what they did, and I trust that this Convention will conclude the same thing.

Mr. TURRELL. I cannot see any reason for this amendment. Why should we limit the term of a man who goes into a president judgeship simply because his predecessor's term has been shortened by his decease? What reason is there in that for shortening the term of the successor? If you want to elect a good man, a competent lawyer learned in the law, he would often be willing to take the office for a full term when he would not accept it for a year or a few months. Therefore there is no reason in the case. There is no reason why we should not elect every man to a full term on the bench as well as his predecessors. This section is founded on a fallacy.

MR. ANDREW REED. I would move to amend the amendment by making it apply only to judges of the court of common pleas and not to the Supreme Court.

MR. STEWART. I accept that modification.

MR. TURRELL. Then I wish to say further that there might be some possible reason for such an amendment, where the court is constituted as the Supreme judges are, all going out at different periods, so as to keep the equality between them in their time of service. But the president judges of the courts of common pleas are not so constituted; they do not start at one time; and therefore the reason for this section, as far as they are concerned, does not exist.

MR. SIMPSON. If I am not very much mistaken in the article reported by the Committee on Suffrage, Election and Representation, there is a section which provides that all vacancies in the offices of the State shall be filled for the unexpired term; and if I am not mistaken in that it settles this whole question, and this section is unnecessary.

MR. CAMPBELL. Allow me to explain; that section was reported by the Committee on Suffrage, Election and Representation, but was voted down when the report of that committee was considered in committee of the whole, with the intention of taking it up again after the other reports had been gone through with.

MR. SIMPSON. Then I am to understand that the section was voted down.

MR. CAMPBELL. It was voted down temporarily.

THE PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment of the delegate from Franklin (Mr. Stewart.)

The amendment was rejected, the ayes being twenty-four, less than a majority of a quorum.

MR. ELLIS. I offer the following amendment, to come in as a new section:

SECTION —. The Legislature shall not create any court, other than those expressly authorized in the Constitution, with civil jurisdiction in cases exceeding $300, or criminal jurisdiction and powers in crimes the punishment of which exceeds a fine of $100 or imprisonment for thirty days.

I will not detain the Convention with any lengthened remarks, but simply desire to say that this restriction is the substance of the first section of this article and what the committee itself reported to the Convention, with a slight difference in limiting the power of the Legislature to create criminal courts. We should not have high courts of any other character or nature than constitutional courts. Wherever the Legislature has undertaken to create other courts the experiment has in almost every instance been a failure. During our experience of one hundred years there has not been one instance in which a high court was created by the Legislature that it was not a failure. It may be answered that the district court of Philadelphia and that of Pittsburg was not a failure. Measurably they were not, but still, notwithstanding these courts have served a useful purpose, the present Convention have determined to do away with them; and the fact that the district court of Philadelphia had equity powers one year and the next year had not equity powers illustrates that these courts, though performing high functions, have been at the beck and nod of the Legislature at all times. In order that we should preserve the balance of judicial power in the Commonwealth the judiciary should be as independent as possible; and under the present system, if we allow it to continue, the Legislature will have the power to dot the whole State with legislative courts superceding the powers and jurisdictions of the constitutional courts. I shall not urge the matter further than this. It ought to be evident to the judgment of this Convention that such a provision ought to be established in the Constitution.

MR. ARMSTRONG. The section places a restriction on the power of the Legislature which under the Constitution, as we are now framing it, I think would not be judicious. It is demonstrated beyond all doubt that the Convention will not relieve the Supreme Court in any other manner or to any other extent than it has already done, and particularly upon the ground that the Constitution leaves it in the power of the Legislature to furnish relief if it shall become necessary. This section would be an unnecessary restriction, whilst all that I believe to be necessary to be done is already covered by the section to which I have referred.

It is the fifth section, and provides:

"That the Legislature is hereby prohibited from creating other courts to exercise the power vested in the Constitution in the said courts of common pleas and orphans court."

The gentleman now proposes to extend this so as to take in criminal cases, and that is his point. I do not see that there is any necessity for it. The only instance in which such power has been exercised is in the creation of a criminal court having jurisdiction in Schuylkill, Lebanon and Dauphin.

Mr. ELLIS. I would ask the gentleman a question. Does he not know that a few years ago the Legislature created, in the city of Philadelphia, courts of exclusive criminal jurisdiction which lasted a year or two, and were abolished?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Such was the case, but the good sense of the Legislature put those courts down, and they have never been renewed except in the instance referred to, and in that particular case, I believe, with eminent advantage to the suitors, particularly of Schuylkill county. I see no necessity whatever for this section.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. ELLIS. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ROSS. I second the call.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The yeas and nays have been demanded, and the Clerk will proceed with the call.

Mr. DARLINGTON. I rise to a question of order. This being not a section reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, but an amendment moved by the gentleman from Schuylkill, it requires ten gentlemen to second the call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Do ten gentlemen rise to second the call for the yeas and nays?

More than ten gentlemen rose.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The call for the yeas and nays is sustained, and the Clerk will proceed with the call.

The yeas and nays were taken with the following result:

Y E A S .

Messrs. Alricks, Baer, Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Boyd, Brodhead, Brown, Buckalew, Campbell, Corbett, Curry, Dallas, Dunning, Elliott, Ellis, Gibson, Guthrie, Hall, Hay, Lamberton, Lear, M'Murray, Metzger, Niles, Palmer, H. W., Parsons, Patton, Purman, Reed, Andrew, Ross, Smith, H. G., Temple, Turrell, Wetherill, J. M. and Worrell—34.

N A Y S .

Messrs. Addicks, Armstrong, Baily, (Perry,) Baker, Barclay, Beebe, Biddle, Bigler, Black, Chas. A., Broomall, Bullitt, Calvin, Carey, Carter, Cochran, Corson, Cronmiller, Cuyler, Darlington, Davis, De France, Edwards, Ewing, Finney, Fulton, Funck, Gilpin, Green, Hanna, Horton, Howard, Kaine, Knight, Landis, Lawrence, Lilly, Long, MacConnell, M'Clean, M'Culloch, Mann, Mantor, Newlin, Palmer, G. W., Patterson, D. W., Patterson, T. H. B., Purviance, Jno. N., Purviance, Samuel A., Reynolds, Rooke, Sharpe, Simpson, Smith, Henry W., Smith, Wm. H., Stanton, Stewart, Van Reed, Walker, Wetherill, John Price, White, David N., White, J. W. F. and Wright—62.

So the amendment was rejected.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Achenbach, Ainey, Andrews, Bannan, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Black, J. S., Bowman, Cassidy, Church, Clark, Collins, Craig, Curtin, Dodd, Fell, Harvey, Hazzard, Hemphill, Heverin, Hunsicker, Littleton, MacVeagh, M'Camant, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Porter, Pughe, Read, John R., Runk, Russell, Struthers, Wherry, White, Harry, Woodward and Meredith, President—37.

Mr. KAINE. I move to reconsider the vote by which a section was adopted to this article, yesterday, providing that the Legislature may abolish the office of associate judges.

Mr. EDWARDS. I second the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Did both gentlemen vote in the affirmative.

Mr. KAINE. The yeas and nays were not taken.

Mr. STANTON. I would suggest that the whole matter be referred back to the Judiciary Committee. [Laughter.] We are amending, striking out and inserting, and it had better be recommitted.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the motion to reconsider, made by the delegate from Fayette.

Mr. KAINE. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HANNA. I second the call.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The section which it is proposed to reconsider will be read.

The Clerk read the section as follows:

SECTION —. "The Legislature shall have authority to abolish the office of associate judges after the term of office of the present incumbent shall have expired."

Mr. COCHRAN. I do not know whether it would be in order, but I should like to have the gentleman from Fayette permitted to state his object in moving a reconsideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. That is not in order. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken by yeas and nays with the following result:

Y E A S.

Messrs. Addicks, Baily, (Perry,) Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Black, J. S., Brodhead, Broomall, Buckalew, Carey, Clark, Curry, Curtin, Darlington, Davis, De France, Edwards, Elliott, Ellis, Gibson, Green, Hanna, Horton, Kaine, Lamberton, Lilly, Long, Mann, Patterson, T. H. B., Read, John R., Ross, Sharpe, Smith, H. G., Wetherill, John Price, White, David N., White, Harry, White, J. W. F. and Wright—36.

N A Y S.

Messrs. Achenbach, Alricks, Armstrong, Baer, Baker, Barclay, Biddle, Bigler, Black, Charles A., Boyd, Brown, Bullitt, Calvin, Campbell, Carter, Corbett, Corson, Cronmiller, Dallas, Dunning, Ewing, Fulton, Funk, Gilpin, Guthrie, Hall, Hay, Howard, Knight, Landis, Lawrence, Lear, MacConnell, M'Clean, M'Culloch, M'Murray, Newlin, Palmer, H. W., Parsons, Patterson, D. W., Patton, Pughe, Purman, Purviance, John N., Purviance, Samuel A., Reed, Andrew, Reynolds, Rooke, Simpson, Smith, Henry W., Smith, Wm. H., Stanton, Stewart, Temple, Turrell, VanReed, Walker, Wetherill, J. M., Wherry and Worrell—60.

So the motion to reconsider was not agreed to.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Ainey, Andrews, Bannan, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Beebe, Bowman, Cassidy, Church, Cochran, Collins, Craig, Cuyler, Dodd, Fell, Finney, Harvey, Hazzard, Hemphill, Heverin, Hunsicker, Littleton, MacVeagh, M'Camant, Mantor, Metzger, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Niles, Palmer, G. W. Porter, Runk, Russell, Struthers, Woodward and Meredith, President—37.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Yesterday I called the attention of the Convention to the fact in reference to a clause in the fifth section, which will be found on the third page, that the position in which it stands renders it doubtful, whether it is not limited to the cities of Philadelphia and Pittsburg, which is not the intention of the Convention. I then moved to transpose the clause to the end of the twenty-fifth section. Objection was made by the gentleman from Schuylkill (Mr. Ellis) and the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. Harry White.) Both of those gentlemen inform me that they have no further objection, and the gentleman from Indiana that he objected under a misconception of the proposition. I now move, and I trust it will be done by unanimous consent, to transpose to the end of the twenty-fifth section the clause which I shall ask the Clerk to read. Before it is read I will call the attention of the Convention to the language as it stands now in the fifth section:

"And the Legislature is hereby prohibited from creating other courts to exercise the powers vested by this Constitution in the judges of the courts of common pleas and orphans' courts."

I propose to transfer that to the end of the twenty-fifth section, striking it out in the fifth.

The CLERK. The numbers of the sections have been changed. At the end of the section beginning "All laws relating to courts shall be of general and uniform operation," it is proposed to transfer from the fifth section the following clause:

"And the Legislature is hereby prohibited from creating other courts to exercise the powers vested by this Constitution in the judges of the courts of common pleas and orphans' courts."

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Will the Convention unanimously agree to this transposition? The Chair hears no objection and it is agreed to.

Mr. BUCKALEW. This is a matter of arrangement and detail, and I desire to call attention to the apparent inconsistency between this proposed addition to the twenty-fifth section and the prior section, in which we provide expressly that the Legislature shall or may make two orphans' courts in various parts of the State. It seems to me that that section and this would be inconsistent as far as the orphans' courts are concerned.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The effect of it, I will state to the Convention, is simply to prevent the Legislature from vesting the same powers in other courts. It does not interfere at all with the enlarging of the powers either of the common pleas or orphans' courts, and they may make more courts of the same kind; but it prohibits them from creating Nicholson courts or any other anomaly of that kind.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I am not particular about it if the gentleman is satisfied that he has all the sections harmonious.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I think so.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. Yesterday I made opposition to this proposition under a misapprehension.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question has been disposed of and the transposition made.

Mr. CORSON. I move that the article be referred to the Committee on Revision and Adjustment.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I have an amendment which I have attempted to offer about five times. I submit that the reference to the Committee on Revision and Adjustment must be of the entire article—

The PRESIDENT pro tem. It is of the entire article.

Mr. BUCKALEW. And as long as the article is not finished and the question submitted upon transcribing it to third reading, the motion is not in order. Heretofore such a motion has never been received until the question of ordering the article to third reading has been put.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I trust the gentleman will be permitted to offer his amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Chair supposed that all the proposed new sections had been offered.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I desire to offer an amendment as a new section.

Mr. CORSON. I made a motion, and I suppose that motion will have to be voted upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Chair must receive the amendment. It will be read.

Mr. MANN. I should like to make an inquiry. My inquiry is whether it will be possible for the majority of this body ever to dispose of this article?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. They can do so by ordering the previous question.

The amendment of the delegate from Columbia will be read.

The CLERK read as follows:

"SEC. —. The commissions of all common pleas judges learned in the law, in judicial districts containing less than one hundred thousand inhabitants, shall expire with the year 1883, and every tenth year thereafter. Within ten years after the organization of the General Assembly, at the session next prior to the expiration of the judicial terms aforesaid, the two Houses shall meet together in joint convention and by open vote appoint ten commissioners, who shall have power to divide the State into judicial districts, assigning to each one or more judges, as may be required, such apportionment to remain unchanged for a term of ten years. In choosing said commissioners each member of the joint convention shall vote for not more than five persons, and the ten highest in vote shall be elected. No city or county shall be divided in the formation of districts, and no district shall be formed to elect more than two law judges, unless in the case of a county containing over one hundred thousand inhabitants. The said commissioners shall be duly sworn, (or affirmed,) and shall be ineligible to election to the office of judge under an apportionment made by them; and any such apportionment shall be agreed to by at least seven commissioners."

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. President: I have been a participant in the debate upon various questions regarding the organization of the courts of the State, but have proposed nothing myself until this moment.

Now, let us look back at what we have done, or rather what we have not done. A proposition to establish a circuit court was elaborately debated and voted down. A proposition to divide the Supreme Court into two working bodies was also debated and voted down. A proposition in several forms for making plural common pleas districts was also considered and voted down. A proposition to make most of the counties of the State single judicial districts was rejected a few days since, and this morning an amendment was agreed to with reference to the arrangement of single county districts, which has but slight operation. Therefore we are now approaching the end of our consideration of this article without having done anything material with regard to the organization of the nisi prius courts of the State presided over by law judges, except that we have increased the judges in Philadelphia, Allegheny and Luzerne, an orphans' court judge in each, and two common pleas judges in Philadelphia in addition to those which now exist.

Now, the question is upon the Convention, shall you leave this tangled system of nisi prius courts and nisi prius districts in the State as it is at present? Will you leave this confused system to such imperfect action and regulation as the Legislature of the State can give to it under the terms of the Constitution? I hope not. I hope that to this abundant confusion you will restore order, or will at least provide that at some future time—I do not care very much whether it is in the year 1883, or 1890, or at the commencement of the next century—some time or other order and regularity shall be restored to our system of courts of record of original jurisdiction. Sir, the only mode by which you can reach that object is to provide that all the districts of the State, (save a few of the larger ones, which will always of course be separate,) where you are forced to combine counties, shall at one and the same time be under the hand of some proper apportioning power by which districts can be formed and judges assigned to them.

The difficulty, the insurmountable difficulty, now encountered by the Legislature, is that the commissions of the common pleas judges expire at different times in adjoining districts. There is no regularity or system with regard to their expiration. You cannot make new districts, you cannot reorganize districts without turning judges out of office—always a thankless task to the law-making power, and repugnant to that sense of justice which is common among our people.

Now, sir, the amendment which I have offered is double, and I shall ask for a division in voting upon it. The first branch of it is, that with the year 1883, that is, at the end of it, and at the expiration of every period of ten years thereafter, the commissions of the common pleas law judges in districts composed of less than one hundred thousand inhabitants shall expire. If you adopt that, and it stands alone, the result will be that the Legislature every tenth year can arrange, reorganize, equalize the judicial districts of the State. With the year 1883 you will have commenced a new and orderly system which will adapt itself to the necessities of our people in all future time.

The second branch of the amendment provides that these districts shall be made by a commission of apportionment selected by the Legislature itself in a fair and impartial manner, so as to secure a tribunal that will perform this duty with unquestionable fidelity. They are to be placed under oath, the ordinary oath of office that we have already provided (and a very stringent one) in the Constitution, and the members of that commission are not to be eligible to election to the office of law judge under any apportionment which they may make; and then it is provided that no district shall have assigned to it more than two law judges, unless in case of counties that have more than one hundred thousand inhabitants.

The practical result of the arrangement provided is this: Philadelphia, Allegheny, Luzerne, Schuylkill, Lancaster, and Berks as at present they exhibit populations, will be separate districts, and will remain such for all future time, and other counties that shall rise above 100,000 inhabitants of necessity will constitute separate districts, and in those districts the number of judges may be more than two; but as to districts under 100,000 inhabitants, where you are compelled to unite counties, as you will for two-thirds of the counties of the State, they will be in a reasonable, regular, orderly and proper manner. I prefer to have them made by this proposed board of apportionment, the plan of which I have copied mostly from the plan presented by the gentleman from Philadelphia (Mr. Simpson) in reference to another provision in the Constitution; but at all events I beg members of the Convention to pass the first branch of the amendment, whether they accept the second branch of the amendment or not.

MR. FUNCK. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question?

MR. BUCKALEW. Certainly.

MR. FUNCK. It is whether there is any dissatisfaction with the judicial districts as now constituted?

MR. BUCKALEW. Certainly, a great deal.

MR. FUNCK. Where?

MR. BUCKALEW. Westmoreland, Indiana and Armstrong have been complaining for years. Their complaints have been echoing in both Houses of the Legislature year after year.

Mr. FUNCK. We know of none in the district I come from.

Mr. BUCKALEW. That is but an illustration of a great many cases. The Tloga district has a second law judge there, supposed to be about as necessary as a fifth wheel to a wagon. There is a second law judge in Bradford county, who, I insist, is altogether unnecessary. We have been patching this system in the Legislature, worrying over it, and not knowing what to do with it, giving assistant law judges here and there as best we could and stumbling along. Any man who has served in the Legislature during the last ten years does not need any argument from me to show that some change of this sort is necessary to extricate the Legislature from difficulty.

Well, now, what the Legislature does on this subject is done hap-hazard; it is done under pressure; it is done according to the popularity of some particular members who want something done for their districts. There is no system of regularity.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The delegate's time has expired.

Mr. BROOMALL. Mr. President: I am surprised that the gentleman from Columbia should introduce at this late period of our proceedings a provision as complicated and as new as that which has just been read. However proper it might have been two months ago or three months ago to be submitted to a proper committee and to be digested and examined, I submit that it is too late to take up such a proposition now. I think there are grave defects in it. I think there may probably be some good in it. But the point that I make is this, that in the position in which we now find ourselves we shall do damage by going into a proposition so new and so complicated as that; and I hope that if the gentleman wants it considered he will even, late as it is, introduce it and have it referred to a select committee if he chooses, or to the Judiciary Committee if he choose, or any other proper committee, and have it fairly digested and considered before it is brought here. Certain I am that here it will not be considered, but will either be adopted or rejected without examination and without that consideration which it probably deserves, certainly without that consideration which the ability and position of the gentleman who offers it deserve to have for any measure that he offers.

I hope that it will be now voted down and if introduced will be introduced regularly and referred.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President: If I understand this proposition I do not know that there is anything very new in it. I think it is the cumulative plan for districting the State, and then the cumulative plan for electing afterwards, though it is perhaps in different language from that in which that plan has been before submitted, and I supposed we had got about ready for a vote. After working upon this article until I supposed I saw the last end of the tail, the delegate from Columbia, according to his habit, draws from that capacious pocket of his, that is chock full—and I do not believe it is half empty now—this long section. After we supposed we had got through with a section or article he always comes in with his long string and tries to tie it to the end, and we have sometimes to renew the fight for a week. He has a perfect right to do it, but it is a peculiar way of doing things that an important section of this description and this length shall be kept back in the breast of that gentleman and brought forward at this time and thrust upon the Convention, not even printed.

It seems to me it ought to be disposed of summarily, and for that purpose I call for the previous question, and I hope that the call will be sustained and that we shall dispose of it one way or the other.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Is the call for the previous question sustained?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I think we ought not probably to spend much time upon this complicated question and one which this Convention cannot understand in its bearings upon the hasty consideration which they can now give it. It occurs to me as an insuperable objection to it in view of the fact that we have already voted not to allow commissions.

Mr. HOWARD. I rise to a point of order. Is the question debatable whether we shall have the previous question? I called the previous question. Is that debatable?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. It is not debatable; but eighteen gentlemen did not rise to second the call and therefore the call for the previous question was not sustained. The gentleman from Lycoming is now entitled to the floor.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I do not intend to insist on the floor because I should have been done by this time if not interrupted. I only wanted to finish my sentence. I was saying that we have already decided that vacancies shall not be filled for unexpired terms. It follows, of course, that vacancies will be filled for the full terms, and there never will come a time when the commissions will all expire at the same time, and under the proposition now suggested it would happen that judges throughout the State would have their commissioners summarily cut off, some in ten years, some in nine, and so on clear down to one year or less. In that view of the case, it is wholly impracticable and I think ought not to be adopted.

Mr. H. W. PALMER. It seems to be evident that the Convention is not in a temper of mind to consider this proposition further, and because I am desirous of giving to a proposition emanating from this source the consideration due to it, I move that this article be now referred to the Committee on Revision and Adjustment, and I understand the parliamentary effect of that motion will be to carry this amendment with it, and it can be reported back by the Committee on Revision and Adjustment printed, and in such shape that the Convention can understand it.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Chair does not understand any such parliamentary rule as that.

Mr. H. W. PALMER. That, I think, is the parliamentary rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Chair does not understand how the Committee on Revision and Adjustment has anything to do except with what passes the House.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. President: I suggest—

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The delegate has spoken once.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I am not going to speak, but I rise to suggest that our practice has been to refer a proposition to a committee with instructions to consider and report; but at this stage I agree with the Chair on the question of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Columbia.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I ask for the division I indicated.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. What is the first division?

Mr. BUCKALEW. At the end of the first clause.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The first division will be read.

The CLERK read as follows:

"The commissions of all common pleas judges learned in the law in judicial districts containing less than one hundred thousand inhabitants shall expire with the year 1883, and every tenth year thereafter."

Mr. BOYD. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I second the call.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Clerk will call the names of delegates.

Mr. DARLINGTON. It requires ten.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Gentlemen seconding the call will rise.

Ten delegates rose to second the call; and the yeas and nays were taken with the following result:

YEAS.

Messrs. Achenbach, Bailly, (Perry,) Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Barelay, Boyd, Brodhead, Buckalew, Campbell, Cassidy, Curtin, Dallas, De France, Dunning, Ellis, Fulton, Gibson, Gilpin, Kaine, Lilly, Long, Niles, Palmer, G. W., Palmer, H. W., Parsons, Patton, Read, John R., Sharpe, Smith, H. G., Stewart, Van Reed Wherry and Wright—32.

NAYS.

Messrs. Addicks, Alricks, Armstrong, Baer, Baker, Biddle, Bigler, Black, Charles A., Black, J. S., Broomall, Brown, Bullitt, Calvin, Carey, Carter, Clark, Corbett, Corson, Cronmiller, Curry, Cuyler, Darlington, Davis, Edwards, Elliott, Ewing, Fell, Finney, Funk, Green, Guthrie, Hanna, Hay, Horton, Howard, Knight, Landis, Lawrence, Littleton, MacConnell, M'Clean, M'Culloch, M'Murray, Mann, Mantor, Patterson, D. W., Patterson, T. H. B., Purman, Purviance, John N., Purviance, Samuel A., Reed, Andrew, Reynolds, Rooke, Ross, Simpson, Smith, Henry W., Smith, Wm. H., Stanton, Turrell, Walker, Wetherill, Jno. Price, White, David N., White, Harry, White, J. W. F. and Worrell—63.

So the first division of the amendment was not agreed to.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Ainey, Andrews, Bannan, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Beebe, Bowman, Church, Cochran, Collins, Craig, Dodd, Hall, Harvey, Hazzard, Hemphill, Hoverin, Hunsicker, Lamberton, Lear, MacVeagh, M'Camant, Metzger, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Newlin, Porter, Pughe, Runk, Russell, Struthers, Temple, Wetherill, J. M., Woodward and Meredith, President—36.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I do not ask a vote on the second branch, except a formal re-ec-tion.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The second division is before the Convention.

The division was rejected.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If there be no further amendments to offer, I now move to refer the article to the Committee on Revision and adjustment.

Mr. SHARPE. I have an amendment to offer.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Then I will wait.

Mr. SHARPE. I offer the following amendment, to come in as a new section :

"SECTION —. The Supreme Court shall sit in banc for the hearing of causes that come up by writs of error or appeal in the city of Harrisburg, but may for adequate reasons adjourn its sessions for a single term, or less than a term, to any other suitable and convenient place."

Mr. ALRICKS. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. STEWART. I second the call.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Is the call sustained?

More than ten members rose.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The call is sustained, and the Clerk will proceed with the call.

The yeas and nays were taken, and were as follow, viz :

YEAS.

Messrs. Achenbach, Alricks, Baer, Baily, (Perry,) Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Barclay, Calvin, Cochran, Curry, Curtin, Dunning, Finney, Funck, Gibson, Gilpin, Kane, Land s, Lilly, M'Clean, M'Culloch, M'Murray, Metzger, Palmer, G. W., Palmer, H. W., Patterson, D. W., Reed, Andrew, Reynolds, Sharpe, Smith, Henry W., Stewart, Van Reed, Walker, Wetherill, J. M., Wherry, White, Harry and Wright—36.

NAYS.

Messrs. Addicks, Armstrong, Baker, Biddle, Bigler, Black, Charles A., Black, J. S., Boyd, Brodhead, Broomail, Brown, Buckalew, Bullitt, Campbell, Carey, Cassidy, Clark, Corbett, Corsen, Cronmiller, Cuyler, Dallas, Darlington, Davis, De France, Edwards, Elliott, Ellis, Ewing, Fell, Fulton, Green, Guthrie, Hall, Hanna, Hay, Horton, Howard, Knight, Lawrence, Lear, Littleton, Long, Mann, Mantor, Niles, Patterson, T. H. B., Patton, Purman, Purviance, John N., Purviance, Samuel A., Read, John R., Rooke, Ross, Simpson, Smith, William H., Stanton Turrell, Wetherill, John Price, White, David N., White, J. W. F. and Worrell—62.

So the amendment was rejected.

ABSENT. — Messrs. Ainey, Andrews, Bannan, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Beebe, Bowman, Carter, Church, Collins, Craig, Dodd, Harvey, Hazzard, Hemphill, Haverin, Hunsicker, Lamberton, MacConnell, MacVeagh, M'Camant, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Newlin, Parsons, Porter, Pughe, Runk, Russell, Smith, H. G., Struthers, Temple, Woodward, and Meredith, President—35.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I now move that the article be engrossed and referred to the Committee on Revision and Adjustment.

The motion was agreed to.

THE STATE CAPITAL.

Mr. DALLAS. I ask leave to offer at this time a minority report from the Committee on Legislature.

Leave was granted, and the minority report was read as follows :

The undersigned, members of the Committee on the Legislature, respectfully dissent from the report of the majority of the committee upon the subject of the location of the capital of the State, and respectfully recommend that the word "Philadelphia" should be substituted for "Harrisburg" where it occurs in the section which accompanies said report of the majority of said committee.

GEO. M. DALLAS,

JNO. PRICE WETHERILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The minority report will lie on the table.

RAILROADS AND CANALS.

Mr. COCHRAN. I move that the Convention proceed to the second reading and consideration of the article on Railroads and Canals reported from the committee of the whole.

The motion was agreed to ; and the Convention proceeded to the consideration on second reading of the article (No. 17) "On Railroad and Canals."

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The first section of the article will be read.

The CLERK read as follows :

SECTION 1. Any individual, company or corporation organized for the purpose, shall have the right to construct a railroad or canal between any two points in this State. Any railroad may intersect and connect with any other railroad, and no discrimination shall be made in passenger and freight tolls and tariffs on persons or property passing from one railroad to another, and no unnecessary delay interposed in the forwarding of such passengers and property to their destination. The Legislature shall, by general law, prescribing reasonable regulations, give full effect to these powers and rights.

MR. T. H. B. PATTERSON. I move the following amendment to the first section, to come in in the fourth line after the word "railroad," "and may pass its cars, empty or loaded, over such other railroad."

I will just state to the Convention that this is an amendment which covers about one line and includes section fourteen, which was adopted and reported by the committee of the whole. Section fourteen, as we find it in this report, is, I think, materially included in this one line of the amendment that I have proposed and I have offered it with the consent of the delegate from Fayette, (Mr. Kaine,) who moved section fourteen as an amendment to the report of the Committee on Railroads and Canals. I do this in order to abbreviate our work, and I ask the delegate from Fayette if this is not satisfactory and does not cover the ground.

MR. LILLY. I think this amendment ought not to be put into this section, and I think the last section ought to be voted down for this reason: Cars may be brought from one road to another in entirely unfit condition to be passed over that road. This may do an immense deal of damage, may cause a great deal of difficulty and destruction of property. My experience upon this subject, and I have had something to do with railroads for the past thirty-five years, brings me strongly to the conclusion that it is impossible to carry out any such provision as is here contemplated. It is not at all practicable and ought not to be entertained. Different roads may be of different gauge and a physical impossibility be thus added to the objection which I have already raised. I think the amendment should be by all means voted down. It has no place in a Constitution. It is entirely impracticable and should not be tolerated, and I hope the good sense of the Convention will see this matter as I do. Let us vote the amendment down here, and then when the fourteenth section comes up for consideration, let us vote that out.

MR. BIGLER. Mr. President: It seems to me that this first section requires grave consideration at the hands of the Convention. If we propose that the Legislature shall pass a general free railroad law, we ought to do that in the most distinct terms, and do it at length. For my own part I think it is much better than what is attempted in the section before us, and on that I desire to have the sense of the Convention. I have prepared an amendment to supercede this first section, and indeed it would supercede a number of the sections in the article, and I shall submit that as an amendment to the amendment, proposing to strike out the amendment, together with the section, and insert that which I send to the desk to be read.

The CLERK read as follows:

1. The Legislature, at its first meeting after the adoption of this Constitution, shall enact a general railroad law, open to the use of all persons or companies who may see proper to accept and comply with its provisions, based on and embodying the principles hereinafter set forth, and which law shall be so constructed as to embrace within its operation, as far as practicable, railroad corporations heretofore created.

2. Railroad corporations may intersect, connect and cross their respective roads, having due regard to the safety and convenience of the public. They shall receive from each other and make provision for the prompt transmission of cars, whether empty or loaded, from one road to another; and their charge for the transportation of passengers and tonnage over their respective roads per mile shall be the same, except that a reasonable discrimination may be made because of difference in the original cost and in the grades and curvatures of their several roads. The said general law shall provide for settling differences that may arise under this section.

3. Railroad corporations shall have the right to construct, equip and operate railroads between the points named in their respective charters, and shall have the right to construct engines, cars and all other machinery and equipage used on their roads, and they shall be common carriers; but they shall engage in no other business, and shall have no right to hold lands, real estate, freehold or leasehold, except to the extent necessary to the construction, equipment and effective working of their respective roads.

4. Railroads shall be public highways on which all individuals, companies, cor.

porations and associations shall have the right to have persons and tonnage transported thereon, and in fixing the charges for such transportation equal rates per mile, to all, shall be the general rule; but a reasonable discrimination may be made between passengers transported fifty miles and a less distance, as compared with those transported a greater distance; and provision may be made for annual or commutation tickets for passengers; and so, also, in fixing the rates on tonnage, a reasonable discrimination may be made between the rates on roads or parts of roads of heavy grades and short curvatures as compared with the charges on roads or parts of roads of better characteristics, and between different kinds of tonnage; and such corporations as may transport tonnage from other States through this shall make no unjust discrimination in their charges, against tonnage shipped within as compared with tonnage shipped without the State, and the said general law shall protect the public against all such unjust discriminations.

5. Railroad corporations may hold the stock and bonds of each other, and to make a longer road, in the direction of the connecting roads, may consolidate; but they shall not hold the stock or bonds of other corporations; nor shall any railroad corporation hold a controlling interest in the stock or bonds of another railroad corporation owning or operating a competing line of road. The purpose of this section being to maintain free competition between railroads, its spirit shall be effectively carried out in the details of the general law hereinbefore provided for.

6. Railroad corporations shall not take or appropriate or damage private property without first making compensation or giving ample security for the same; but in ascertaining the value of the property and the amount of the damages by a jury or in court, the direct and indirect benefits of the railroad to the owner or owners of the property taken or damaged shall be considered in mitigation of the amount to be paid.

7. The property of railroad corporations, except the road-bed, shall be liable to taxation the same as the property of other corporations, and the Legislature shall not release this liability.

8. Companies composed in part or in whole of officers and managers of a railroad corporation, shall have no right to transport tonnage over the roads with which said officers and managers are connected without the consent of the holders of a majority of the stock of such corporations; nor shall they be charged lower rates for transportation, or be furnished greater facilities than other person or companies engaged in the same business.

9. It shall be the duty of the Legislature, in addition to enacting the principles of the foregoing article into a general law, to provide also for the construction and connection of lateral railroads, not exceeding twenty miles in length, which may be constructed by mining and manufacturing companies to convey their own products to market.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Clearfield (Mr. Bigler) to the amendment of the gentleman from Allegheny (Mr. T. H. B. Patterson.)

Mr. J. PRICE WETHERILL. I rise to a point of order. It seems to me that is rather a lengthy amendment to this section and hardly in order. I merely throw out the suggestion that for an amendment to section one it is rather long, and it seems to me that instead of being an amendment to a section it is an amendment to the entire article. It is an entire scheme by itself, and it is virtually impossible for this Convention to properly deliberate upon an article of that sort as offered as an amendment to the section. Therefore I raise the point of order that it is not really an amendment, but that to be properly considered we should resolve ourselves into committee of the whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Chair cannot sustain the point of order. If adopted this certainly will supercede the greater part of the article; but that is not a question of order for the Chair.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I rise to a point of order that it is not an amendment to the amendment. There is an amendment pending to the section now.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. There is more in the point of order made by the gentleman from Philadelphia (Mr. Campbell.) This is hardly an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Allegheny (Mr. T. H. B. Patterson.) It is more properly an amendment to the section.

Mr. BIGLER. If gentlemen will hear me for a very few minutes they will discover—

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Chair will state that when the vote is taken on the amendment of the delegate from Allegheny, whether favorable or unfavorable, then the amendment of the gentleman from Clearfield will properly be in order.

Mr. BIGLER. Mr. President: I shall shape this business in any way to get a full and complete consideration of this subject. I regard it as of great importance.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Was not my point of order sustained?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The point of order taken by the gentleman from Philadelphia was sustained.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The question, then, is on the amendment of the gentleman from Allegheny.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. That is the question.

Mr. BIGLER. The question is on the amendment; I understood the point of order; but I believe I have the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The gentleman from Clearfield has the floor.

Mr. BIGLER. And it is due that I should explain what I intended. This proposition of mine has been in print for some time, but I did not circulate it because I supposed, like most measures of this kind, it would be mislaid if I did.

Now, sir, I did not intend to offer this and press it to supercede the article as it stands, but I intended to say to the chairman of the Railroad Committee that if he preferred that the original text as it stands should be passed through with, I was willing to go through with that and endeavor to amend it. That is a clear parliamentary right on his part. If the chairman of the committee desires to amend the text he has the right to do that and to a vote upon it before the vote is taken on a proposition which would supercede it. I did not intend for a moment to attempt to strike out the entire article without its being considered by the Convention, but, sir, as it seems to be more agreeable to the body to pass first upon the article as it is, I shall yield to that; but I desired to impress upon the Convention this form of doing whatever we do on this subject, of requiring of the Legislature a general free railroad law, open to the use of all who will embrace and comply with its terms; for, Mr. President, in my judgment, that is the first indispensable step to what this Convention desires on the subject of railroads. There is more of relief to what is complained of now, more of safety to the rights of the people in competition, than in any other measure you can adopt. I would induce that competition as far as possible by offering to the capital of the world the opportunity of coming in and constructing roads from the Atlantic to the great West, that shall have an influence upon the rates which we are required to pay.

And, sir, I desire the members of the Convention to determine, each one for himself now, whether we shall attempt to put this kind of legislation in the Constitution, or whether we shall lay down great principles to govern legislation, and then leave the details to the Legislature, for that is the point of difference between the two propositions—the article as it stands and that which I propose.

For myself I cannot see how this Convention is to give full expression to its views. Take, if you please, the first section. There ought to be provision, as required in the amendment submitted by me, for some tribunal to settle differences that will arise between railroad corporations under this first section, and surely to the public there is no graver question than that of great leading railroads crossing each other at grade. We cannot do this in detail. Why, sir, that single section would require a space equal to all that is now occupied by the article under consideration, and the details necessary for a free railroad law would be longer than the Constitution ought to be. Therefore I have regarded it as impracticable to say what the Convention ought to say on this question in detail, and have thought it would be wiser and safer to lay down the general principles and rules by which railroads should hereafter be governed and require the Legislature to attach thereto the details. That was the object of my interposing this proposition at so early a moment, that my purpose might be understood by the Convention.

With these remarks, I shall listen to the amendments proposed, if there are any, by the chairman, and follow him through, and hope that the section may be greatly improved.

Mr. COCHRAN. I desire merely to say, as the only question now pending before us is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Allegheny, (Mr. T. H. B. Patterson,) that I am perfectly satisfied that amendment should be inserted in this section, for the reason which he assigns, that it obviates the necessity of passing the fourteenth section separately. I hope, therefore, that the amendment will be inserted here, and that we shall not throw it out and have an entirely different section for the purpose of accomplishing the same point which a few words will accomplish in this section. This is all that I need to say with regard to that at present. I shall not say anything with regard to the remarks that fell from the gentlemen from Clearfield.

Mr. CORBETT. Mr. President: I sincerely desire to restrict railroads reasonably; but, as was said by the gentlemen from Clearfield, it ought to be done by laying down general rules or general principles. I hope this amendment will not prevail. What is it? Just look at it for an instant. It provides that one railroad company shall have the right to pass its cars over the road of another company. How? In what manner? By putting its own locomotive on that other road and taking charge of a train and running it over it, interfering with its timetable and schedule and endangering the lives of passengers? Is that the meaning of this amendment?

SEVERAL DELEGATES. No.

Mr. CORBETT. It is not? Well, I apprehend that it may be claimed under the amendment as offered. It proposes to allow one company to pass its cars over the road of another. Is it to take charge of the cars and pass them over the other road, or is it merely to deliver them over to the other road and that road to do it? I apprehend it may claim the right to run over any other road at any time and at all seasons, interfering with schedule time, and endangering not only property, but life.

Mr. SHARPE. I refer the gentleman to the last few lines of the section, which say that the Legislature shall prescribe the regulations.

Mr. CORBETT. Well, suppose they may prescribe the regulations.

Mr. SHARPE. The language is that they "shall" prescribe.

Mr. CORBETT. Are you going to put a clause in the Constitution merely allowing regulations to be prescribed?

But in addition to that, in principle it is wrong. What right has any company to take possession of the railroad track of another corporation and run its cars over it? If a corporation has the right to do it an individual ought to have the right to do it; and the necessary consequence is that by allowing every person to run cars over a road, it does not control the running stock at all. I am entirely opposed to any such thing. I am willing to limit and restrict railroads reasonably, and desire to do so in everything with regard to which restrictions ought to be put upon them, but I cannot vote for this amendment and I will not.

Mr. T. H. B. PATTERSON. I will simply say, in reply to the gentleman from Clarion, that this section provides that the Legislature shall, by general law, prescribe reasonable regulations for carrying into effect these powers and rights; so that these are not arbitrary rights, but the section itself provides that they shall be only exercised under a general law providing for all emergencies and contingencies necessary to be provided for.

Mr. BEAR. Before the vote is taken I wish to call attention to the fact that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Allegheny does not justify a corporation in putting a locomotive upon another road and running it over it, and therefore the argument of the gentleman from Clarion will have no effect. It gives the right to pass cars over that road, but of course they cannot be passed unless the company owning the road attach their locomotive to them. Therefore there cannot be any interference. I think the amendment is entirely right.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I should like to ask the gentleman how will they pass their cars over the road if they do not have a locomotive connected with them?

Mr. BAER. Then they cannot pass them unless the company owning the road attach their locomotives to them, and therefore it cannot injure that company.

Mr. BIGLER. It is evident that many members of the Convention do not understand the effect and purpose of this first section. It is to regulate the relations between the railroads themselves where they connect. It often happens that there are serious differences between them. One railroad will stand up and make an imperious demand upon another and defeat connections. This is for the purpose of regulating those connections and the intercourse between railroads; but I think it is very deficient because it ought to provide for some arbitration. All that, it is true, is left to the Legislature, and it may be done properly. I have alluded to one of those difficulties, the passing at grade—

Mr. HOWARD. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The delegate will state his question of order.

Mr. HOWARD. The question of order is that the delegate from Clearfield has spoken on this amendment once.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. KANE. This is a very important provision, in my opinion. The principle of it is contained in the last section of the article as it is now before the Convention, which was offered by me in committee of the whole and adopted. The amendment now offered by the gentleman from Allegheny embraces everything that is material in that section, and it should be adopted here. It will be more uniform and better than where it is now.

I have not spoken before on this question, and I shall take up the subject just exactly where the gentleman from Clearfield left it. Great difficulty is experienced by the people from the disagreements of railroad companies, from one requiring of another things that are utterly impossible. Such things have occurred in my section of the State over and over again. There is a case now where two railroads run side by side together for a mile, and one company refuses to allow the cars of the other to run upon its road. They run together there, and the freight has to be unloaded from one car to the other. Now, sir, these are corporations created by the Commonwealth, and for the use and benefit of the people, and not for the exclusive benefit of the corporations themselves.

Mr. HOWARD. I desire to say to the gentleman that I am in favor of the amendment, and shall vote for it.

Mr. KANE. I am much obliged to the gentleman. I thought he was opposed to it.

Mr. HOWARD. No, sir, I am not.

Mr. KANE. It is just for the purpose of putting in the Constitution a provision that will require these companies, under suitable regulations made by the Legislature, to transfer each others cars upon their roads. Such an idea as not running a locomotive upon another road under a provision of this kind, as suggested by the gentleman from Clarion, is very strange to me.

Mr. CORBETT. Will the gentleman allow himself to be interrupted?

Mr. KANE. Not now.

There are a number of railroads in this State now being operated by companies whose charters contain a provision that individuals shall have a right to run their cars upon the roads, and I doubt not that the charters of the railroads, or some of them, in which the gentleman from Northampton (Mr. Brodhead) is interested, contain provisions of that kind, for all railroad charters granted prior to 1847 contain such a provision. I have just been handed a section of the railroad law of New Jersey, which provides:

"That companies whose railroads shall be constructed under provisions of this act shall have the right to connect their roads with any railroads within this or any other State, upon such terms as may be agreed upon by those who have the management of said roads; and in case of a failure of an agreement on the part of those having the management of said roads within this State, then and in that case either of said parties may apply to the Supreme Court within the jurisdiction in which said connection is proposed to be made, whose duty it shall be to appoint three disinterested citizens wherein provided for the condemnation of land, who shall determine and fix said terms, which, when approved by said court, shall be conclusive, and thereupon said companies shall be required to carry said terms into effect; and all companies whose railroads are or shall hereafter be crossed, intersected or joined shall receive from each other and forward to their destination all goods, merchandize and other property intended for points on their respective roads, with the same dispatch and at a rate of freight not exceeding the local tariff rate charged for similar goods, merchandize and other property received at and forwarded from the same points for individuals and other corporations."

Now, sir, under the provisions which we propose here the Legislature can pass a law similar to that, which will carry them into effect. It is absolutely necessary in Pennsylvania that something of this kind should now be adopted. It will not do to let large railroad corporations set up for themselves to the injury of other companies and to the injury of the people.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment of the delegate from Allegheny (Mr. T. H. B. Patterson.)

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I move to amend the section in the second and third lines by striking out the words, "between any two points." I imagine it would be rather difficult to have a railroad without building it from one point to another. I think the words are surplusage.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I move further to amend, in the fourth and fifth lines, by striking out the words "in passenger and freight tolls and tariffs." The omission of those words will make better grammar and better sense. The words are entirely unnecessary, and the requirements of the section are fully met by the sentence as it will read with those words excluded.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President: I move to amend the section in the first line by striking out the word "company," and inserting the word "partnership," and also by inserting the words "and operate" after the word "construct" in the second line, so as to read:

"Any individual, partnership or corporation organized for the purpose shall have the right to construct and operate a railroad or canal between any two points in this State."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCHRAN. I move to change the word "and," at the close of the fourth line, to the word "or," so as to read "and no discrimination shall be made in passenger or freight tolls," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CORSON. I move to amend by striking out the word "prescribing," in the eighth line, and inserting "prescribe," and inserting after the word "regulations" the word "and," so as to read:

"The Legislature shall by general law prescribe reasonable regulations and give full effect to these powers and rights."

Mr. T. H. B. PATTERSON. That would destroy the meaning of the sentence. If the delegate from Montgomery will notice, the sentence as punctuated should have a comma after the word "law" and after the word "regulations." It would then read:

"The Legislature shall by general law, prescribing reasonable regulations, give full effect to these powers and rights."

It is right as it is now.

Mr. CORSON. "And give full effect."

Mr. T. H. B. PATTERSON. No; it is right as it is now, with a comma after the word "law," and after the word "regulations."

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment of the delegate from Montgomery.

Mr. T. H. B. PATTERSON. I hope it will not be adopted.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question recurs on the section.

The section was agreed to.

The second section was read as follows:

SECTION 2. Every railroad or canal corporation organized or doing business in this State shall maintain an office therein for the transaction of its business, where transfers of its stock shall be made and books kept for the inspection, by any stock or bondholder, or any other person having any pecuniary interest in such corporation, in which shall be recorded the amount of capital stock subscribed or paid in, and by whom, the names of the owners of its stock, and the amounts owned by them respectively, the transfers of said stock, and the names and places of residence of its officers.

Mr. J. R. READ. I move to strike out the words "or any other person having any pecuniary interest in such corporation," in the fourth and fifth lines.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That was very fully debated in committee of the whole, and the Convention after mature consideration inserted those words. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I move to strike out the last "or" in the first line and insert the word "and," so as to read "organized and doing business in this State."

The difficulty with this section is that, having that word "or" there, it will include all foreign corporations and require them to keep an office in this State for the transfers of their stock. I do not believe this was the design of the committee or is the design of the Convention. There are quite a number of foreign corporations doing business here; and to ask them to do this would be asking rather too much. I think by striking out that word and making it "and," it will not include them.

Mr. COCHRAN. I must differ with the gentleman from Northampton on this subject. I do not see why any corporation having rights under the legislation of Pennsylvania and authorized to do business in this State should have superior immunities over corporations which reside in the State and are composed of our own citizens. If we grant an advantage to parties living outside of the State, allowing them to come in and transact business here and make money in this State, shall we not subject them to precisely the same regulations in this regard to which we subject our own people? The section was drawn in this form with a view just exactly to meet that point and to include all alike and put them on an equal footing, so that we might have the same control over foreign as over domestic corporations in regard to this subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment of the delegate from Northampton (Mr. Brodhead.)

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. J. M. WETHERILL. I offer the following amendment, to be added to the section :

"The chief officer or directors of every such corporation shall annually make a report, under oath, to the Secretary of Internal Affairs, which report shall include a detailed statement of its receipts and expenditures, assets and liabilities, as well as the receipts and expenditures, assets and liabilities, for or on account of any property leased or operated by it, and such other matters relating to its business as are now or hereafter may be prescribed by law."

Mr. President, a portion of the language of the amendment was embodied in the report of the Committee on Corporations, but not so fully as at present introduced. There are a great many railroads leased by the different corporations now in existence from which no report, or but a mere semblance of a report, is presented by the Auditor General to the people of the State. I have received through the post-office to-day, as have most members of the Convention, the detailed statement in the report of the Auditor General, and in glancing over it hastily I perceive that no report whatever is rendered to the people of the State, or at least but the semblance of a report, from a large number of railroad companies. These are the Allentown, Bald Eagle Valley, Barclay Coal Company, Bedford and Bridgeport; Buffalo, Bradford and Pittsburg; Catawissa, Chartiers, Chester Creek, Chester Valley, Chestnut Hill, Cleveland and Pittsburg, Cowanesque Valley, Colebrookdale, Columbia and Port Deposit, Connecting; Danville, Hazleton and Wilkesbarre; East Brandywine and Waynesburg, East Nahanoy, East Pennsylvania, Ebensburg and Cresson, Elmira and Williamsport, Erie and Pittsburg, Fayette County; Harrisburg, Portsmouth, Mount Joy and Lancaster; Hempfield, Jamestown and Franklin, Jefferson, Lawrence, Lehigh and Lackawanna, Lehigh and Susquehanna, Lewisburg Centre and Spruce Creek, Littlestown, Little Schuylkill Navigation and Railroad, Lykens Valley, Mifflin and Centre County, Mill Creek and Mine Hill, Mine Hill and Schuylkill Haven, Mount Carbon and Port Carbon, Mount Pleasant and Broad Ford, Nesquehoning Valley, New Castle and Beaver Valley, Newry Branch, Pennsylvania and Delaware, Perkiomen railroad, Philadelphia and Baltimore Central, Philadelphia and Erie; Philadelphia, Germantown and Norristown; Philadelphia and Trenton, Pickering Valley; Pittsburg, Cincinnati and St. Louis; Pittsburg and Connellsville; Pittsburg, Fort Wayne and Chicago; Plymouth, Reading and Columbia, Schuylkill and Susquehanna, Schuylkill Valley Navigation, Shamokin Valley and Pottsville, Southwark, Sunbury and Erie, Sunbury and Lewistown, Tyrone and Clearfield, Wellsboro' and Lawrenceville, West Chester and the Western Pennsylvania.

All these railroad companies having been leased by corporations who own the charters of other roads, the reports of the receipts and expenditures, the assets and liabilities, and all matters relating to them, are lumped in the reports of the existing corporations by which they are leased, and hence the people of the State receive no information whatever, or but exceeding meagre information, on these subjects. I offer this amendment compelling the companies that operate these roads to make detailed statements and give the facts of their management to the public in the same manner that they do as to the roads the charters of which they own and operate themselves. I trust my amendment will pass, as I think that it will be a great advantage to the community.

Mr. TURRELL. Mr. President: The thirteenth section of this article, it seems to me, provides sufficiently for this. It provides for annual reports and provides that the Secretary of Internal Affairs may at any time call for special reports; so that this amendment is not necessary.

Mr. J. M. WETHERILL. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. TURRELL. I am not on the floor.

Mr. J. M. WETHERILL. I call for the yeas and nays on the amendment offered by me.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Do ten gentlemen rise to second the call?

Ten gentlemen rose.

Mr. COCHRAN. Before the yeas and nays are called, I wish to say that, so far as the amendment is concerned, I entirely agree with its intention and design. The only difficulty I had about it was—and that I suggested to the gentleman from Schuylkill—that I supposed it was covered by the provision of the thirteenth section as suggested by the gentleman from Susquehanna (Mr. Turrell.) If it is I should rather not add unnecessary matter; but if it is not so satisfactorily covered by that, I am perfectly content that it shall go in here. I certainly do not oppose any information which is intended to develop fully the condition and management of these special corporations to the people of the State.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Clerk will call the names of delegates on the amendment of the delegate from Schuylkill (Mr. J. M. Wetherill.)

The yeas and nays were taken and were as follow, viz:

Y E A S.

Messrs. Achenbach, Alricks, Armstrong, Bailly, (Perry,) Baker, Black, J. S., Brodhead, Buckalew, Bullitt, Calvin, Campbell, Carey, Carter, Cochran, Curry, Dunning, Ewing, Finney, Funck, Gibson, Hay, Landis, Lear, MacConnell, Metzger, Palmer, G. W., Patterson, D. W., Patterson, T. H. B., Patton, Purman, Purviance, Samuel A., Reynolds, Ross, Sharpe, Smith, Henry W., Van Reed, Wetherill, J. M., White, David N. and White, Harry—39.

N A Y S.

Messrs. Baer, Biddle, Bigler, Black, Charles A., Boyd, Broomall, Cassidy, Corbett, Corson, Cronmiller, Darlington, Davis, De France, Edwards, Elliott, Fulton, Gilpin, Green, Guthrie, Hall, Harvey, Horton, Howard, Kaine, Lambertson, Lawrence, Lilly, Littleton, Long, M'Clean, M'Culloch, Mann, Mantor, Niles, Pughe, Purviance, John N., Read, John R., Reed, Andrew, Rooke, Simpson, Stanton, Turrell, Walker, Wherry, White, J. W. F. and Worrell—46.

So the amendment was rejected.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Addicks, Ainey, Andrews, Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Bannan, Barclay, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Beebe, Bowman, Church, Clark, Collins, Craig, Curtin, Cuyler, Dallas, Dodd, Ellis, Fell, Hanna, Hazzard, Hemphill, Heverin, Hunsicker, Knight, MacVeagh, M'Camant, M'Murray, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Newlin, Palmer, H. W., Parsons, Porter, Runk, Russell, Smith, H. G., Smith, Wm. H., Stewart, Struthers Temple, Wetherill, Jno. Price, Woodward, Wright and Meredith, President—48.

Mr. COCHRAN. The word "the," in the clause "for the inspection," is surplus. The words ought to be "for inspection." I move to amend by striking out the word "the."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FELL. I move to amend by striking out, after the word "therein," the words "for the transaction of its business." That will make the section read: "Every railroad or canal corporation organized or doing business in this State, shall maintain an office therein, where transfers of its stock shall be made and books kept for the inspection by any stock or bondholder, or any other person having any pecuniary interest in such corporation," &c. It gives all the power for inspection that is required, but does not force the company to maintain an office for its business in the State. There are companies which have their offices in New York and Boston, where the transaction of their business is conducted, but they have offices for the transfer of stocks within the State. There is a feeling that there ought to be an office in the State where you can go and inspect what has been done in regard to the stock and who are the stockholders. That is very proper, I think; but if you were to force these companies to maintain an office for the transaction of their business within the State, it might cause a great deal of trouble without doing any good to the people of the State.

On the question of agreeing to the amendment proposed by Mr. Fell, a division was called for, which resulted fifty-two in the affirmative, and twenty-one in the negative. So the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question recurs on the section as amended.

The section as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The third section will be read.

The CLERK read as follows:

SECTION 3. The property of railroad and canal corporations, or other corporations of a similar character, doing business in this State, and other joint stock companies now existing or hereafter created, shall forever be subject to taxation; and the power to tax the same shall not be surrendered or suspended by any contract or grant to which the State shall be a party.

The section was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The fourth section will be read.

The CLERK read as follows :

SECTION 4. No railroad, canal or other corporation, nor the lessees, purchasers or managers of any railroad or canal corporation shall consolidate the stock, property or franchises of such corporation with, nor lease, purchase, or in any way control any other railroad or canal corporation owning or having under its control a parallel or competing line; nor shall any of the officers of such railroad or canal corporation act as an officer of any other railroad or canal corporation owning or having the control of a parallel or competing line; and whether railroads or canals are parallel and competing lines shall always be decided by a jury in a trial, according to the course of the common law.

The section was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The fifth section will be read.

The CLERK read as follows :

SECTION 5. No railroad, canal, or other corporation, doing business as a common carrier, shall either directly or indirectly hold, guarantee, or endorse shares in the capital stock, bonds, or other indebtedness of any other corporation, individuals, or partnership, except those doing the business of common carriers.

MR. JOSEPH BAILY. I move to strike out all after the words "section five," and insert: "No railroad or canal corporation shall have the right to invest in, or purchase, or hold shares in the capital stock, bonds, or other indebtedness, or purchase, hold or lease the franchise and property or other estate of any other railroad, canal or other corporation, either in its corporate name, or by its officers, or through the intervention of trustees or other agents holding the same for its use."

I would now like the attention of this Convention for a few minutes. I have never occupied any of the time of this body until now, and I desire very much to be heard in what I have to say on the subject. I think it will take me more than ten minutes, and I hope my friends will indulge me until I am through.

MANY DELEGATES. Go on; take all the time you want.

MR. LILLY. I desire to say before the gentleman commences that I shall not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The gentleman from Perry will proceed.

MR. JOSEPH BAILY. Mr. President: If the people of Pennsylvania are to have such safe-guard's incorporated in the Constitution as to afford them protection from the dangerous power of railroad monopolies, then other remedies will have to be adopted than those contained in the report of the committee of the whole. It is true there are many salutary provisions in that report, but they are all rendered nugatory by the sweeping powers contained in the last clause of the fifth section. The section reads as follows:

"No railroad, canal or other corporation doing business as a common carrier shall, either directly or indirectly, hold, guarantee or endorse shares in the capital stock, bonds or other indebtedness of any other corporation, individuals or partnerships, except those doing the business of common carriers."

If gentlemen will examine the section carefully they will perceive that if the eight last words were not there the section would contain a direct prohibition to deal in each others stocks and bonds by railroad and canal companies, but the insertion of them changes entirely the character of the section.

This power to purchase the stocks of each other, together with the power to purchase or lease the chartered franchise of each other, has been the fruitful cause of building up the great monopolies which now stretch themselves like great giants across our fair Commonwealth. With such power these great companies can prevent the construction of rival roads by simply purchasing a majority of their stock, thereby changing the ownership and direction. The fourth section of the report prohibiting the consolidation of parallel or competing lines is rendered a nullity by this power to purchase each others stocks. Before a competing line can be built and in operation, a majority of its stock will be secured by its more fortunate neighbor, and absorption will be the consequence.

If the Convention deem it wise to legalize monopolies, then the proper plan has been adopted in this fifth section. But if, on the other hand, this Convention considers the rights of the people as paramount and the rights of corporations as subordinate to those of the people, then this fifth section should be amended by a provision prohibiting railroad and canal companies from purchasing each others stocks, or chartered franchise or leasing the same.

I offer this amendment with the view of protecting the rights of the people and in no spirit of hostility to any company. I will never consent to deprive any railroad or canal company of any right essential to their usefulness as public institutions; but to confer powers injurious to the well-being of the institutions of the Commonwealth is another thing, and, so far as I am concerned, will be resisted.

I believe the amendment will operate as an effectual remedy for many of the evils complained of. It contains nothing new; nor is it the radical and dangerous measure that many persons believe it to be. It only restores the provisions of the original charters of all the older railroad companies. The Philadelphia and Reading, Lancaster and Harrisburg, Cumberland Valley, Minehill and Schuylkill Haven, West Chester Valley, and many smaller railroad companies, had no grants of power in their original charters to buy the stocks or franchise of each other, but on the other hand such grants were scrupulously withheld. These are the oldest railroad companies in the State. The Pennsylvania railroad company, chartered in 1846, had no such grants of power in its original charter, nor could it have obtained such a grant at that time. These grants have been insidiously obtained from time to time by special legislation, and have been the fruitful source of the corruption and demoralization of legislators and other public men, and not until 1870 did the Legislature so far forget its duty to the people as to confer, by a general law, the full and unrestrained power on railroad companies of purchasing each others stocks and chartered franchise and also to lease. Since then all the smaller roads worth anything have been purchased or leased by the larger and more fortunate ones, and the construction of rival lines, by the extension of some of these smaller roads, absolutely prevented. And now we have the extraordinary spectacle of almost all the transporting and carrying power of the State, being virtually under the control of one vast monopoly.

Was such legislation, granting such extraordinary powers to corporations, enacted in the interest of the people? No honest man can, I think, entertain such an opinion. What equivalent have the people of Pennsylvania received for the concession of such unlimited powers? Has there been any reduction in rates of tolls? I think not, but on the other hand they have been increased. It is true the people living beyond the boundary of Pennsylvania, where the influence of the Baltimore and Ohio and the New York railroads come in competition with the Pennsylvania railroad, have their persons and property transported at greatly reduced rates.

This fact clearly and indisputably proves the advantages to be derived from rival lines, and ought forever to close the mouths of the advocates of one grand non-competing line. The section proposed by me prohibits railroad and canal companies from dealing in the property of each other. It provides as follows:

SECTION —. No railroad or canal corporation shall have the right to invest in, purchase or hold shares in the capital stock, bonds or other indebtedness, or purchase, hold or lease the chartered franchise and property or other estate of any other railroad, canal or other corporation, either in its corporate name, or by its officers or through the intervention of trustees or other agents holding the same for its use.

It will be observed that the amendment contains an explicit denial of the right to purchase or lease the franchise or to purchase shares in the capital stock of each other. By this provision the stockholders of each corporation will be protected in the ownership and control of their respective lines of improvement, and the continued fear of being absorbed by companies more powerful than themselves will be removed. Each company, being owned by individual stockholders, will always be under their control, and in the management of its pecuniary and internal affairs will be independent of all other companies; but being connected together, as provided in section fourteen of this article, and obliged to pass all cars, passengers and freight from each others roads at uniform rates, these separate and independent corporations, in their business operations, will furnish the people with a complete system of local and through transportation, and will be built wherever and whenever the wants of the people demand their construction. I cannot see why a net work of railroads all over the State, under such a system, will not be far more economical and advantageous to the people than any system under the management and control of one great monopoly.

The national banking system is somewhat analogous, and I refer to it to illustrate this independent system of railroad transportation. The old United States bank, with a capital of $30,000,000, was destroyed by President Jackson for the supposed political power wielded under the management of one head. But the national banking system, with a combined capital of near $400,000,000, distributed all over the country, under the control of corporations with small capital, each company being managed by its own board of directors, and in its business operations entirely independent of all the rest, affords the people a system of banking and currency far superior to anything of the kind the old United States bank could have furnished; and the isolation of the individual banks entirely deprives the system, as a whole, of the power to wield serious political influence. Would any sane man ever have proposed the incorporation of one bank with a capital of $400,000,000, to be located in any one of the large cities? The idea is preposterous. Yet, scattered all over the country and divided into a great number of isolated banks, the system furnishes the people with a sound and uniform currency, and the stockholders of this immense but divided capital are favored with a profitable investment.

In the place of one great national bank, with its vast political power, we have a system of national banks so separated in their business operations as to be incapable of combining together for any political purpose. In a similar way I propose a system of railroad corporations without power to purchase each others rights, but so connected together as to afford every facility for transportation, yet so independent and separated from each other as to prevent the possibility of a combination calculated to interfere with the institutions of government, instead of one great railroad corporation capable from its very nature of seriously impairing the whole fabric of government itself.

The population of Pennsylvania is increasing very rapidly, and her great interest in agricultural, manufacturing, mining and commercial purposes are expanding and developing far more rapidly than the calculations of the most sanguine have indicated.

In twenty years our population may very nearly reach ten millions of souls. Who can predict the business necessities of such a population. Will it be wise to subject such numbers and such vast interests to the transporting power of one great monopoly.

Yet this will inevitably be the result if the last clause in the fifth section should unfortunately become a part of the Constitution. Rivalry in transportation will be impossible, for the greater will always absorb the less corporations in any attempt to establish competing lines.

The Pennsylvania railroad, with all the efficiency and wisdom of its present management, is certainly very nearly worked to its profitable capacity. To run many more trains will deprive them of the power to keep the road in repair. There is a limit to the carrying capacities of any railroad from this cause. Workmen always avoid danger from passing trains, and their repair force, from this cause, lose at this time a very considerable percentage of time.

Suppose two more tracks be added to that road, it will scarcely double its present capacity, on account of the increased difficulty and danger of keeping the inside tracks in repair. I think it cannot be successfully denied that the policy of that company has been exerted to discourage and prevent the building of rival roads. In the single case of the Cumberland Valley railroad this policy is fully illustrated. That company had extended its road to form a connection with the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, thereby with the Connellsville railroad in the west and the Reading railroad, by its Harrisburg branch, in the east, was prepared to furnish the people with a competing line from Philadelphia to Pittsburg; but the project has been defeated by the Pennsylvania railroad company purchasing a majority of the stock of the Cumberland Valley road, and converting that old and well-established road into a division of the Pennsylvania railroad. By this shrewd operation the ownership of near one hundred miles of this new line to the west is now lodged in the Pennsylvania railroad company, and the people have been deprived of the advantage of a rival line to the west. If the amendment proposed by me had been part of the present Constitution this thing could not have occurred. I speak of the Pennsylvania railroad company with no feelings of hostility. I know the gentlemen who control that great and wonderful organization to be honest, and are actuated, most probably, by motives of patriotism. In the course of things they must pass away, and their places may be filled by others actuated by more sordid purposes than those gentlemen now having control of that company. I only war with the power conferred upon a single vast corporation to monopolize and control the whole carrying trade of the Commonwealth. In my judgment it is the duty of this Convention to give to this question of transportation all the consideration that a subject of so much importance deserves. The movements of the people all over the country warn us to the task. In the west they are banded together by hundreds of thousands to effect reform in this particular; and the influence of these organizations will soon be felt in the east.

The necessity for such organizations is greatly to be deplored, and a corrective should at once be adopted which will avoid the necessity of their longer continuance. Why should the friends of the great corporations of this State oppose this amendment?

Let us see whether its adoption will not, in the end, be advantageous to them. An opposition line is about being built from New York to Philadelphia; and this road, supported by a combination of the great capitalists of the country hostile to the Pennsylvania roads, may soon be extended across the State to the west. By the power and ingenuity of such a combination the stocks of our present companies may be ruinously depressed and a majority of it purchased by the new and more powerful company, until the Pennsylvania and other great corporations may become mere divisions of a greater than themselves. The new company would only be following the teachings of those it had absorbed. The adoption of the amendment offered by me will secure these companies from absorption by this new and more powerful combination, and save the people of Pennsylvania from the infliction of a greater monopoly than now exists, and the stockholders of those companies from ruinous losses by depreciation in the price of their stock.

If this monopoly policy should unfortunately be adopted and supported by constitutional sanction, then we shall ever be cursed with this continually recurring warfare of the greater absorbing the weaker companies, in order to prevent competition in the transporting and carrying business of the country.

The stronger will not permit the weaker to exist as rival roads, but will absorb them by this power to purchase their stocks or franchise. In such a warfare between these soulless monopolies to circumvent and absorb each other, demoralization of the people and their business interests will be the inevitable consequence.

Will it be wise to legalize, by constitutional provision, such a dangerous policy; fraught, as it must be, with ruin to the industrial and free institutions of the State?

In addition to the evils I have portrayed, by reason of the existence of such absorbing monopolies, let us dwell for a moment upon the political effect which will inevitably result. The Legislature and high officials of the Commonwealth will be selected and elected by this one power. The legislation will be framed under its dictation and in its interest; step by step it will encroach upon the liberties and rights of the people until this process of absorption will reach its final culmination in the destruction of the present institutions of government, and the Commonwealth will then only exist in name.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The hour of one o'clock having arrived, the Convention takes a recess until three o'clock.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention re-assembled at three o'clock P. M.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. DARLINGTON asked and obtained leave of absence for Mr. Hemphill for a few days from to-day.

RAILROADS AND CANALS.

The Convention resumed the consideration, on second reading, of the article on railroads and canals.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. When the Convention took its recess, the pending question was on the amendment of the delegate from Perry, (Mr. Jos. Baily,) to strike out all of the fifth section, after the word "section," and to insert in lieu thereof what will now be read.

The CLERK read as follows:

"No railroad or canal corporation shall have a right to invest in, purchase or hold shares in the capital stock, bonds or other indebtedness, or purchase, hold or lease the franchise and property or other estate of any other railroad, canal or other corporation, either in its corporate name, or by its officers or through the intervention of trustees or other agents holding the same for its use."

Mr. JOSEPH BAILY. On that amendment I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, ten delegates rising to second the call.

Mr. COCHRAN. Before the yeas and nays are taken, I only wish to say that I am in entire harmony with the gentleman from Perry in the views which he expressed here this morning, and so far as I am individually concerned—I suppose I cannot answer for others—I am in favor of the amendment which he has offered and shall vote for it.

Mr. BIDDLE. Before the vote is taken I ask the chairman of the Committee on Railroads whether the section was not originally reported without the eight last words which this amendment proposes to strike out?

Mr. COCHRAN. The section as originally reported did not contain the last eight words.

Mr. BIDDLE. Then the amendment makes it in harmony with the report of the committee.

Mr. BAER. I wish simply to call attention to the fact that the amendment does not bring the section in harmony with the original report. Those eight words make it quite different from the amendment adopted. This precludes the leasing or purchasing of a small road, which the original did not. I hope the amendment will be voted down, as it will effectually close all enterprise in the interior of the State. It will be the death-blow to the making of railroads in the interior. I trust it will be voted down.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The yeas and nays will be taken on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were taken and resulted as follow, viz:

Y E A S .

Messrs. Alricks, Baily, (Perry,) Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Biddle, Broomall, Buckalew, Calvin, Campbell, Carter, Cochran, Funck, Guthrie, Landis, Lawrence, Lilly, MacConnell, M'Clellan, M'Culloch, Mantor, Newlin, Palmer, G. W., Patterson, T. H. B., Purviance, Samuel A., Reynolds, Sharpe, Smith, Henry W., Temple, Wherry, White, David N., White, Harry, White, J. W. F. and Wright—32.

N A Y S .

Messrs. Armstrong, Baer, Bigler, Black, Chas. A., Boyd, Brodhead, Brown, Cronmiller, Cuyler, Darlington, Davis, De France, Edwards, Elliott, Ellis, Fulton, Gilpin, Hall, Hay, Heverin, Horton, Howard, Kaine, Long, Mann, Metzger, Niles, Purman, Purviance, John N., Reed, Andrew, Rooke, Ross, Smith, Wm. H., Stewart, Turrell, Van Reed, Walker, Wetherill, J. M. and Wetherill, Jno. Price—39.

So the amendment was rejected.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Achenbach, Addicks, Ainey, Andrews, Baker, Bannan, Barclay, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Beebe, Black, J. S., Bowman, Bullitt, Carey, Cassidy, Church, Clark, Collins, Corbett, Corson, Craig, Curry, Curtin, Dallas, Dodd, Dunning, Ewing, Fell, Finney, Gibson, Green, Hanna, Harvey, Hazzard, Hemphill, Hunsicker, Knight, Lamberton, Lear, Littleton, MacVeagh, M'Camant, M'Murray, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Palmer, H. W., Parsons, Patterson, D. W., Patton, Porter, Pughe, Read, John R., Runk, Russell, Simpson, Smith, H. G., Stanton, Struthers, Woodward, Worrell and Meredith, President—62.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question recurs on the section.

Mr. COCHRAN. I move to amend by striking out all after the word "partnership," in the fourth line.

This clause of the section was not in the report of the committee which had this subject in charge, but was introduced into the section in opposition to the friends of the article. It is in fact an almost entire destruction of the whole aim and object contemplated when this section was drawn. With this clause in it there is very little substance in the section, very little left of it. It simply prevents railroad companies from investing in the stocks and bonds of corporations other than railroad companies. That is to say, it may prevent them from investing in the stocks and bonds of mining companies and manufacturing companies; but it does not prevent the evils which flow from the combination and absorption and uniting together of the different railroad companies throughout the State, and so building up and combining an overwhelming and overshadowing influence against which there is no power left in the State or among the people to resist.

Now, sir, railroad companies, of course, act under privileges granted by the Commonwealth, and each railroad company that is incorporated receives its charter for the purpose of building a specific road from one point to another designated in its charter, and this is the power which has been conferred upon it by the people through the Legislature of the State. But such has been the operation and effect of the policy which has been pursued and of legislation which has been superadded that this original idea which was included in the legislation of the State has been entirely departed from, and there has been an aggregation of power by combinations through the purchase of a controlling influence by one railroad in the stock of another that the State has become in effect unable to resist it.

This is secured in many ways, sometimes with and sometimes without the knowledge of the stockholders of the particular railroad which is thus affected, and we have had illustrations of it time and again. One was given by the gentleman from Perry (Mr. Joseph Baily) this morning, in regard to the Cumberland Valley railroad and the result and the effect of the policy which was pursued in that particular case; and there are numerous other cases which might be cited in all parts of the State, showing the detrimental effects of permitting a policy of this kind to continue.

There is no reason why the railroad companies should become dealers and brokers in the stock of each other. There is no reason why they should become alienees and purchasers, as railroad companies, of stocks in this Commonwealth. That is not the design for which they were incorporated. The design of their incorporation was to be transporters on the particular lines of road which they were incorporated to build; but instead of that they become traffickers in the stocks of one another, the whale swallowing the minnows, and in this way we have aggregated a power in this State which there is no power outside of it shortly which will be able to overthrow.

Now, sir, the policy is a dangerous one. It is a dangerous one in various points of view, and it is one which it would be well for gentlemen here to consider in view of the facts of which we are apprised from day to day in the history and events of the times in which we live; and it is not politic nor wise for us to allow this system to go on and continue any longer.

The time has come when it must be stopped here, or it will be stopped in some other way which I should be very loth to see applied to it.

I hope, Mr. President, that this portion of this section will be stricken out and that it will be left to stand on the same footing which it occupied when it was reported by the Committee on Railroads and Canals, and, with that done, I believe that most of the advantages which would have been secured by the passage of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Perry (Mr. Joseph Baily) will be realized, and that you will adopt a wholesome system for the management of railroads in the future.

Mr. NILES. I hope the Convention will pause before they pass the amendment suggested by the chairman of the committee. He is right when he tells us that the Committee on Railroads are not responsible for this provision. That is true. The committee of the whole are responsible for it, after a long and interesting debate upon the question. While I do not pretend to represent anybody's railroad here to-day, I undertake to say that we ought not by our policy put into the Constitution a system that will serve to build up a Chinese wall around the State as far as improvements are concerned, or which, in effect, will go far towards tearing up the railroad tracks of the Commonwealth. We ought to treat the railroad interests of this State precisely as we treat all other interests.

Sir, what is this proposition? It simply says that no existing railroad shall endorse the bonds of any other struggling railroad in this Commonwealth. That subject was all gone over in the debate in committee of the whole. The portion of the State from which I come has a deep interest in this question. We have lived during the whole existence of this State outside of the great railroad interests of Pennsylvania, and the only aid that we have ever had and the only aid that we expect is that the railroads that are in existence to-day will aid us and assist us in the development of our section of the State. There is no struggling railroad in existence to-day trying to build itself that is not asking the aid of corporations of this State and the capitalists of the Old World to buy its bonds; and shall the roads that have simply an existence on paper be debarred from the advantages that the roads that are now in existence have had? Why, sir, the first great railroad that was built in this State, from Columbia to Philadelphia, was built upon the credit of the State. The Philadelphia and Erie railroad, that has opened up the way to your beautiful city, has been built by the endorsement of its bonds by the State and certain railroad companies. The Allegheny Valley railroad, with its short lines and easy grades, is being built to-day by the endorsement of its bonds by the other railroads of the State. It has been so in the past. It has been one of the great means by which the different sections of the State have been opened up and developed. And shall we say here to-day in the hard lines of the Constitution that these advantages that we have had in the past, and which have worked so admirably, shall not be extended in the future? I hope that in our crusade against corporations we will pause and reflect before we put a provision in the Constitution of the State which, if adopted by the people, will prevent any aid in the future to the struggling railroads of the State.

Mr. MANN. I desire to add a few words to what my colleagues has said on this subject. These few lines which the chairman of the committee desires to strike out are of vital importance to northern Pennsylvania, especially to that portion of Northern Pennsylvania from which the gentleman from Tioga and myself come. The Buffalo, New York and Philadelphia railroad is already constructed from the city of Buffalo to the Philadelphia and Erie road at Emporium. It is a leading, vital and active road, and it has brought the only railroad advantages to the counties of M'Kean and Potter that they have ever received. We have received no benefit whatever from our own State, and if this section is to be adopted, in all probability we never shall receive any such. It will not only prevent us from receiving any aid from the railroads of our own State, but it will prevent the Buffalo and Washington Railroad from doing what it desires to do. It has secured authority from the Legislature of New York to guaranty the bonds of the Pine Creek railroad to the extent of $10,000 per mile, and they are ready to extend aid to the construction of the Pine Creek railroad, extending from Port Allegheny, in M'Kean county, to Linden Bridge, in Lycoming county, a distance of one hundred and six miles, whenever a certain amount has been expended upon it beyond that which has already been expended.

Now, sir, if this section be inserted in this Constitution it will be an entire bar to any such assistance as this company is desirous of giving to us. The Pine Creek road and the Buffalo road, in connection with the Reading, will make the shortest route from tide-water to Buffalo. It will bring Philadelphia nearer to the city of Buffalo than New York is; and yet you propose in the Constitution of the State to prevent the construction of that link which is now needed to bring the great city of the lakes nearer to your city than it is to the city of New York. Already the Pennsylvania railroad company has put upon its own road and its connections, and over the Buffalo and Washington railroad, a train that takes passengers from Philadelphia to Niagara Falls quicker than they can be taken from New York city to Niagara Falls, and it is by means of this Buffalo road, which stands now ready to assist in building this other connecting link that shall bring it twenty-eight miles nearer still. Now, this is but a single instance. There are various companies constructing railroads in northern Pennsylvania in the same situation. The Pine Creek railroad has been located; work has been commenced upon it at both ends, and with such help as it can obtain under existing laws it will be constructed within a few years, and will develop more of Pennsylvania than any railroad proposed to be built—I mean of the remaining undeveloped portion of the State.

What possible harm can come from this construction of extending lines? Is there any objection to making one line from Philadelphia to Buffalo under one management, one control, thereby economizing time and money, and cheapen the cost of carrying passengers and freight from Philadelphia to Buffalo? One company, under one organization, can carry both passengers and freight at least fifteen per cent. cheaper between these two points than three or four companies can; and what harm comes of it? None whatever. The idea that there will be any more power in the hands of one company extending between two points than if is divided up between three or four companies is entirely imaginary. The railroad interest, whatever it may be, however the number of companies may be enlarged or diminished, is one interest; it can as easily consolidate if there are twenty of them as if there be but one, as to their effect upon legislation.

Now, then, for the sake of the undeveloped portions of Pennsylvania, I beg gentlemen not to strike out these lines at the closing part of this section. You have stood coldly by long enough; you have refused by legislation all assistance to help northern Pennsylvania in any particular, except by the building of the Philadelphia and Erie railroad, which strikes a few of the northern counties. Now, do not put your hands on the rest of them and say they shall neither be developed by your own companies nor by the railroad companies of the State of New York who may be willing to do it; for every mile of railroad from Buffalo towards the city of Philadelphia, which may be constructed by the aid of the Buffalo and Washington railroad, is a direct contribution to the business, wealth and prosperity of Philadelphia, and it will be paying into the Treasury of the Commonwealth large amounts of revenue. Why put obstacles in the way of it? Simply because there has grown up in the minds of some men the idea that every additional railroad is an additional danger to the liberties of the people. A greater fallacy, it seems to me, never entered into the mind of man.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. It appears to me that the words which the gentleman from York proposes to strike from the section are of great value to it. The section as it stands, with these words in it, imposes all the restrictions which ought to be imposed, for it prevents railroads from engaging in business foreign to the purpose of their organization, which is transportation, or in other words, the business of common carriers. Now, the northern counties of this State, beginning at Warren and extending to Bradford, are effectually cut off from the central portions of the State by a line of hills which can be pierced only in certain places, and it happened not many years ago that they were so effectually cut off from intercourse with the lower part of the State that the social sympathies and inclinations of the people of that portion of the State were far more intimate with New York than with Pennsylvania.

Mr. NILES. They are now.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The gentleman from Tioga says that they are now. Now, this line of territory embraces valuable coal, iron and lumber interests which ought not to be diverted either in its transportation or manufacture from the State of Pennsylvania. The roads which are necessary to pierce this line of hills and to bring these northern counties into closer intimacy with the State must be built with the assistance of other railroad corporations having an interest in their transportation.

We are now getting, in my judgment, too far upon this question. The whole framework of the article seems to be based upon the idea that the railroad interests antagonize the interests of the State. I do not so regard it. Railroads require some restriction, but we have gone so far that there is every great danger that we have already so crippled and trammelled their business, that we greatly impair their usefulness, and I believe that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from York to this section ought not to be adopted. As the section stands, it will prevent a railroad corporation from engaging in business not germane to the objects of their organization, but will still leave them at liberty to assist such corporations as cannot live without such assistance. It is the interest of the people everywhere that those portions of the State, sparsely settled and poor because they lack the necessary facilities of business, shall be built up, and we ought to throw no embarrassment around such assistance as great corporations able to render assistance may be willing to render. Capital is always sufficiently cautious to guard well its own investments and to care for its own interest well. The discretion is soundly left to great corporations when we trust it to the timidity which is proverbial in the investment of capital.

Mr. TURRELL. I have never been accused of any particular friendliness to railroads in this Convention, but rather the reverse, having been considered as going to the verge of insanity in opposition to them. But this is a practical question, and I desire to look at it as such. I will not go over the ground which has already been taken in the argument. I say this, a demonstration of which has come under my own observation and which will commend itself to the mind of every man who will stay to think about it. There are all along in the vicinity of the main lines of railroads in this State communities which are mainly agricultural, which have no mineral wealth or anything that will attract the capital there to invest in and build railroads, aside from the capital which already exists in those communities. They are too poor to build the roads themselves, and they are deprived of communication with the outer world by railroads on that account.

Now, sir, as it has occurred under my own observation, a community of that kind have had this said to them by the main line: "You raise money enough to do the grading of this road, and we will furnish the means to put on the superstructure and the rolling stock." Their interests are joined, and they go to work and they build that road in that way. The inhabitants raise money enough to do the grading; the superstructure and the rolling stock are furnished by money from the stockholders of the main line, and the road is built and they both enjoy the advantages of it. One has the advantages of being brought into connection with the markets of the State; the other has the additional business brought on to its line, and they are both benefited, and I should like to know who is harmed.

Now, sir, this amendment if you adopt it, destroys the right to so build railroads, prevents it; and there are thousands of these communities all along the main lines just in these circumstances, which would be deprived of the advantages that are thus given if you adopt this amendment.

I will not spend words upon it. As I said before, it is a practical thing, and every man who looks at it will see that these circumstances exist everywhere in the State, and we ought not to prevent the mutual assistance which is thus rendered and by which both parties interested are benefited.

Mr. BIGLER. Mr. President: In confirmation of what has been so well said by the delegate from Susquehanna, I will state that through Centre county at this time a railroad is being constructed precisely on the principle which he has set forth. The agriculturists there are unable, they cannot command the means to construct a railroad and put down the iron and equip it. It was on this principle that a railroad was constructed to my own town, and that road is now intended to be extended to what is known as the low grade on the Mahoning. In truth, sir, off the main lines all railroad facilities in the northwest have been secured in that way.

Now, sir, I agree that local interests and especially personal interests must give way if there is a great public necessity, especially if there be something that endangers the liberty of the country or the rights of the people; but, with the delegate from Susquehanna, I ask in all this what harm has been done? So far from adding to the power of the great corporations that carry it through, it rather diminishes their power; and yet I know no effort that any corporation put forward which could bestow such vast blessings upon this great Commonwealth.

I am only anxious that those general principles shall be laid down which will in the future advance these great enterprises and bestow upon the people these unequalled blessings, and this can be done without hazarding any interest. I am familiar with, and for thirty years I have listened to, this kind of alarm. I had something to do with the organization of the great corporation that has bestowed, I do not hesitate to say, a larger share of physical development and general prosperity on this State than any other that ever existed or probably ever will exist. Understand, I do not say or pretend to say that its policy has been faultless; I do not pretend to say that they should for that reason have undue power; but I will say that so far as the head of that company is concerned this day, I would not hesitate to trust the welfare of every man, woman and child in this country in his hands. I believe him to be pure and honest, and that he would not usurp a solitary right. But, sir, this great power may go into other hands. For that reason I would have all the restrictions and restraints and safeguards that can be laid down consistent with the public welfare.

But I only rose, sir, to say that these two sections, four and five, and indeed the general spirit of all this article, is to lock the stable after the horse has been stolen. It is to contribute to the power and influence of corporations now in existence, instead of the wiser and broader and better policy of facilitating the construction of competing lines.

Sir, I happen to know that just at this time a question of furnishing capital to construct great lines from the Atlantic to the Great West is a matter of agitation, in order that there may be a greater restraint upon the railroad power that now exists. I desire to see that movement facilitated and encouraged. Hence it is that I prepared what I thought, as a whole, would be for our State a wiser policy than that found in the article before us. I did that in great sincerity and I trust with becoming humility, although I had no position in connection with the subject. Yet I have had some experience and some observation in railroad affairs. I contended against their power. I stood alone against the power of this corporation. I stand alone against it anywhere, but what is dictated by my sense of true policy and duty I will do again, though I may stand alone in this body; and I say, sir, that it would be wiser for this Convention to lay down great leading principles to direct a railroad policy in the future and allow the Legislature to attach the details, because it is not possible to do that here.

Furthermore, some of this article which remains to come before us, I do not hesitate to say, is utterly impracticable. What it asserts cannot be carried out by the best practical railroad men in this country. You cannot, on any business principles or principles that lead to success, lay down arbitrarily that per mile tonnage shall be charged the same rate. Everybody knows that who has ever had anything to do with this business.

And now, sir, I hope not only that the amendment will not prevail, but that the section will be voted down also.

Mr. J. PRICE WETHERILL. I desire to occupy the time of the Convention but for a moment upon this subject. I entirely agree with the remarks of the delegate from Clearfield and believe that we should be extremely careful how we vote for an amendment of this sort, because I believe it will probably defeat the very object the gentleman from York has in view. His great objection to the railroad companies seems to be this: That by their ability to endorse bonds, and to buy stock, they will therefore monopolize the carrying trade of this State; but, sir, he has overlooked the fact that possibly just the reverse result will be secured by the scheme he proposes.

Now, sir, let me examine the effect of the position he assumes. There is to-day a great coal road in the State of Pennsylvania, which, by privileges which this section would have deprived them of, has been enabled to build a road and to control a road from the coal mines of this State to Lake Erie. Thereby they have a through line and secure in a measure the monopoly of that trade. Another great coal road, by the simple building of a hundred miles of road, will gain the same advantages and will secure to the State of Pennsylvania the same privileges.

There you have one road, without this section, which has been, and will be perhaps for years to come, quite a monopoly; but if you do not pass this section, another coal company by the simple building of a hundred miles of road, or helping to build it by endorsing its bonds, will secure you a competing line, which would of course be a great benefit to this State, if competing lines are an advantage.

Another illustration has been cited in regard to the Philadelphia and Erie road. After having raised thousands upon thousands of dollars, it was only by the Pennsylvania railroad agreeing to endorse its bonds and to carry it through that it was completed to Lake Erie. That road would not have been built if this section had been in operation at that time, the time of its trouble.

Another point. I have no doubt that every man here has been proud of the American steamship company's work. Nearly all the delegates on this floor have visited those magnificent steamers. There is not a gentleman on this floor who will not say that that was a noble undertaking. The commerce of New York is now controlled by English capital; the commerce of Baltimore in its steamship lines is in a measure controlled by English capital; and yet, sir, by the assistance of the Pennsylvania railroad the American steamship company was established here, and that great line has been brought to a successful issue, and to-day we are all proud, not only in this State, but throughout the country, that we are enabled once more to sail under the protection of the American flag. That has been secured, not by this section, which would have prevented the building of a single ship, but by the liberal policy heretofore pursued by the Legislature in allowing railroad companies in their proper discretion and by the vote of a majority of the stockholders, to say what they shall do with their surplus means and their surplus credit. What harm has been done by it? As the gentleman from Clearfield has said, none that I can see. But what good has been done? Surely the balance is in favor of the good side of the scale and not of the bad.

For these reasons I do hope that we shall be extremely careful before we adopt any such provision as this. Sir, this is a vital question to the State of Pennsylvania. Gentlemen favoring this section have spoken in eloquent terms of our manufacturing, agricultural and mining interests. They are proud because we are the second, and should be the first, manufacturing State in the Union. What has made us so? Not such a policy as this section would indicate. If this section had been in operation twenty years ago, we would have had a far different result from the magnificent result which this State presents to-day. Our success has been owing to a liberal, broad and comprehensive policy, and the prudent use of the surplus means and surplus credit of the railroad companies of the State. Now, let us be careful, and I think as prudent men, after fully understanding this matter, we will be satisfied that this amendment is not a proper one and will vote it down.

Mr. HOWARD. I do not understand that the chairman of the committee in proposing this amendment, or in any suggestion that he has made about this section, undertakes to speak for the Railroad Committee. I suppose he is at perfect liberty to take whatever course he may think proper in regard to it. So far as I am concerned, as it now stands, I cannot support it. If it had limited railroad corporations to taking no more than say one-third or two-fifths of the stock of another, I might perhaps have supported it; but in this form I am unwilling to support it, and I think it will be far better for the Commonwealth if this entire section is swept away.

Here I will remark that I believe, if adopted, it will come in conflict and do away in a great measure with the virtue of section four. That section is one of vital interest to the people of this Commonwealth. It undertakes to protect parallel or competing lines so that the people may have the benefit of competition, and they have a right to have it. If this section is adopted, then one common carrier company may buy all the stock and bonds of any other common carrier company, and if that is so, it might be the stock or bonds of a parallel or competing line, and while under the fourth section they might be prohibited from directly officering it, yet indirectly, necessarily, they would control it.

Mr. President, with the safeguards provided by the fourth section and the sixth section (for remember those are restrictions that the people of the Commonwealth have never yet had the benefit of) I think this section is unnecessary. We have provided in the sixth section that the officers and managers of these roads shall not be engaged in mining or manufacturing business connected with their companies. We have taken away the motive and the inducements for them to act fraudulently against the public in these matters. I can see no reason why one railroad should not build another. I do not see why the credit of one railroad should not be used to endorse the bonds of another railroad, and thus go on and build railroads all over the Commonwealth to such an extent as shall be permitted by the Legislature. But there are reasons, strong, good and valid ones, why, when the people have a parallel or competing line, that line shall continue to be a competing line and the public shall have the benefit of it. Therefore I am opposed to this fifth section as reported from the committee of the whole, and I hope it will all be voted down. I do not regard the section as the work of the Committee on Railroads in any sense whatever.

Mr. CUYLER. Mr. President: It is a source of infinite delight to me that I should be able upon a single section to stand on the same platform with the distinguished gentleman from Allegheny who has just spoken (Mr. Howard;) and that that should occur on a question relating to railroads fills me with as much amazement as delight. (Laughter.) What sudden influence has operated to convert the gentleman, what light has fallen upon his pathway as he has journeyed and has brought him to stand where he now stands and to see as he now sees, I am at a loss to comprehend; but I am infinitely delighted that I am able to endorse all that he said—no, not all that he said, but all that he said with reference to the impropriety of this section.

I did not rise for the purpose of going into an extended discussion of this article or of its policy, but simply for the purpose of saying a word or two with regard to this section; a section which, more than any other, is calculated, if it stands in this article, to put a knife right into the heart of the prosperity of the State of Pennsylvania; a section which is based upon ignoring the experience of mankind for the last twenty years, which is designed to undo all that we have done, and to blot out all that we have accomplished hitherto and throw away the whole benefit of the experience we have derived from it. If you look over the statute book of Pennsylvania with reference to railroads, you will perceive that the great aspiration of the people of this State has been for the expansion of the railroad system. It has been to entice by every possible inducement that could be suggested the expansion of existing lines of railway and the investment of the capital which had been invested previously in railroads to assist in other railroad enterprises. Two-thirds of all the legislation of the State of Pennsylvania on the subject of railroads for the last twenty years has been precisely of that character; and I take that legislation to be some indication of the current of the popular mind and the conviction that existed in the heart of the people of Pennsylvania that it was a wise policy.

Now, sir, if you pass outside of the State of Pennsylvania, I hazard nothing when I say that the same remark is true of every other State in the Union. All their railroad laws have pointed to consolidation, to extensions, to enticements to railroad companies already existing to extend their lines and to invest their capital for the purpose of creating other roads. The same thing is true of England. Consolidation, extension, aid from existing railways to other railway enterprises is shown by the British statute book to have been the current of the British mind and to have been the demand of the British people. And yet we stand here gravely this day in this Constitutional Convention, with one hundred and thirty-three representative gentlemen, selected, I suppose, for peculiar intelligence and peculiar devotion to the interests of this State, to roll back all this current, to say it is all unwise, it is all foolish, it never should have existed, that which the common heart and judgment of the people of Pennsylvania and the people of every other State of this Union, and the people of England, and I fear nothing when I say the people of every country where a railroad system has existed, has declared to be a necessity, is wrong, and we want to write an iron rule in our Constitution so that it shall never exist for the future. Can it be possible that such an absurdity as this is to be perpetrated by this Convention? What mischief has resulted? A State grander in her development today, confessedly, than any other State in the Union, a State having more miles of railway than any other State in the Union, and thousands of miles of railway built by the operation of the very system that this section is intended to condemn —all this grand development of the State of Pennsylvania, the result of the very thing that we are seeking now to stop! What argument can gentlemen urge in support of any such thing? I have heard none urged. I have seen gentlemen rise here, and almost trembling like aspens and filled with that insane apprehension of the growth of corporate power that seems to distress the minds of so many people; but beyond vague declamation on that subject I have not heard a solitary argument urged which could support the wisdom of such a section.

I cannot believe, therefore, that we are going to shut our eyes to all the experience of this and of other States, that we are going to close our eyes to the vast prosperity which exists in our own State by reason of the very system that this section seeks to condemn and write into the Constitution an iron law that shall paralyze, for future time that very instrumentality which has been grander than any other for the development of the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. CURTIN. Mr. President: At the risk of wearying the Convention, I desire to say a very few words on the amendment offered by the chairman of the Railroad Committee.

Mr. President, there is no doubt that we are here to restrain the power of railroads as one of the reasons for calling this Convention. But the people of Pennsylvania, if remarkable for any quality, are distinguished for their steady fixed common sense; that is to say, we are a level-headed people in Pennsylvania; and while we should restrain railroads, the people of Pennsylvania do not desire us to arrest the development of the vast wealth which nature has been pleased in her bounty to pour within the territory of the State. Sir, I live in a part of Pennsylvania just in process of development. The Briarean arms from the sea coast are just reaching the rich minerals in our mountains, and our productive valleys are beginning to be so near the market that agriculture remunerates and rewards the labor of the husbandman.

If you look at the topography of the State you will find that the long lines of railroads passing east and west necessarily pass around that part of the State known as the central section, in which I live, and the people of which I pretend in some measure to represent on this floor. The consequence has been that for many years we were without the means of communication by railroad. The people of that central part of Pennsylvania subscribed liberally, too liberally in many instances, expended their means, so far as they could, to reach the markets of the east and the west, and their contributions were supplemented by the assistance of the older railroad corporations that had gathered means and money from the trade of the richer and more fully developed portions of the Commonwealth. At present, as has been said by the delegate from Clearfield, there are railroads making through the county in which I live. The means of the people are exhausted. They are assisted by two railroad companies, one east and one west.

Now, what principle is it which should be put into the organic law by which in the feeble effort of remote parts of this Commonwealth to make highways to the market and the means of inter-communication, the rich and the powerful should be forbidden to give them assistance? Ask for bread and get a stone. And the part of the State in which the delegate from Potter county (Mr. Mann) lives is yet without the means of communication by railroad; it is a mountainous district, and is far from market. The products of labor, land and mines do not yield as they do to the people of the eastern portion of the State and nearer to market, and they, alike with us, are struggling for the means of rapid transit and communication; and yet we are asked to put into the fundamental law of the State, not an act of Assembly which can be repealed, but to put in as a great living principle of government, that the poor and feeble parts of the Commonwealth shall not be assisted by the rich and powerful and hold in check capital willing to relieve them.

Mr. President, representing a people who require the means of communication, I cannot give my assent to any such proposition. I am not carried away by the wild flight of ideas which are hurled against railroads and other corporations. I know their power, and I am here to assist in placing limitations on that power by any reasonable and just restraints; but it is a reasonable and just ambition to desire our work to be approved by the people of Pennsylvania. We have made reforms now which should commend themselves to the approbation of the sensible people of the Commonwealth, and I have no doubt they will be ratified and approved; but if we choose to load down our work with restraints upon the riches and power of the great centres of trade and commerce to assist the remote and poor and necessitous parts of the State, I fear very much that we shall add weights and multiply enemies that may encumber us in receiving the approbation of our constituents when our work is finally submitted to their will.

I sincerely trust that the good sense of the Convention will come to the conclusion so justly and forcibly insisted upon by the delegate from Potter. For the many reasons offered in opposition which, with all due respect, I do not believe have been answered, I cannot give the amendment offered by the chairman of the Committee on Railroads my approbation.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment of the delegate from York (Mr. Cochran.)

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question recurs on the section.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I hope the section will pass. We had one of the longest debates in committee of the whole on this section that we had on any of the sections of the report; and after that long debate it was finally amended so as to make it read in its present form, on the motion of the gentleman from Dauphin, who is not here to-day, (Mr. MacVeagh,) and then it passed by a pretty large vote. I do not see that there is any reason why we should reconsider our action and vote the section down at the present time. The sense of the Convention seemed to be against the amendment just now offered by the chairman, but as the section stands there can be no harm in having it passed. I do not propose to go over the arguments that we had in committee of the whole, but hope that we will sustain our previous action.

Mr. T. H. B. PATTERSON. I just wish to recall to the recollection of the Convention the debate on this question in the committee of the whole, and I shall not detain them one moment. They will remember, if they will cast their minds back to the time when this section was under consideration before, that the able president of a great railroad, who has left us, boldly opposed this section on the ground that it simply prevents railroad companies from going into manufacturing enterprises and mining business and other concerns along the line of their road and becoming partners in those concerns and endorsing the bonds and the obligations of such manufacturing and mining concerns. And he boldly took the position in this Convention that that was right and that it was to the interest of the people of Pennsylvania so to transact their business as to allow the great common carrier corporations of this State to go into private manufacturing and mining concerns; and in that debate other gentlemen of the Convention boldly took the position that that was not to the true interests of the people of Pennsylvania. The question was fully discussed and this was the result of the discussion.

The effect of the section as it stands and as now worded would be—and it was contemplated that this would be the only effect it would have—that it would not interfere with the development of the railroads themselves. This has been so ably debated by gentlemen here that I need not refer to it. I will only say that the section is correct as it is without any amendment whatever. It only prevents railroad corporations from going into private business and controlling the private business alongside of their line, and overshadowing and crushing private citizens, and I ask every gentleman on the floor of this House before he votes against this section to look at it carefully. As it now stands before us, it was adopted by the committee of the whole; the results of its adoption were ably discussed, and the section was adopted after full consideration. Let us adopt the section as it stands, because it will not interfere at all with the development of railroad corporations. It does not interfere with the healthy development of the country, and simply leaves the question of private manufacturing and private mining open to equal competition among the various private citizens of this State.

MR. BROOMALL. Before voting on the section I desire to know what it is I am asked to vote for. By reading it, I find that by its terms no corporation can hold the indebtedness of any individual. If the section means that no individual is to be allowed to become indebted to a corporation, the section ought to have some little more explanation before we vote for it. I find, too, that it provides that no such corporation shall endorse any indebtedness of an individual. If it means by that that if I become indebted for freights to the amount of $1,000 to a railroad company, and am obliged to give them my note or my check, or any evidence of indebtedness of that kind, that they cannot endorse it over and get the money on it, I want to know something more about it before I vote for it. It looks to me very much as if this section has been very carelessly drawn, or as if it embraces too much. Indeed I have very great doubts whether or not we are not undertaking to cripple future railroad enterprises without at all correcting evils in the management of the present ones, in the most of this railroad article. I have all my life been trying to get the lands of my county covered as far as possible with railroads. I own no stock in any railroad thirty miles long. I am not the solicitor of any railroad, and I have recovered in more suits against railroads than I have ever brought for them, but I have always believed in railroads. I think there are some lands in Pennsylvania that are worth more to build railroads on than for any other purpose. For the first time in my life I find myself in the presence of a community that seems to have had enough of railroads. I never meet any such spirits in every day life. I am afraid we have been frightened with the bug-bear of the Pennsylvania railroad company until we are inclined to hinder twenty other Pennsylvania railroads from rising up in the State to prevent it from being such a monopoly as it is.

Now, sir, the first section guarantees free railroads, and that is right. Let us secure unlimited competition, and it looks to me as if that is about all we can do in the direction of reform in this department. The third section prevents the Legislature from fooling away our right to tax railroads. That is right and wise. The tenth section provides for the payment of full damages for all injuries done by railroads both in their construction and operation, and that of course is wise and proper. I look upon the rest of the article as a part of it unfit for legislation and part of it tolerably good legislation, but none of it adapted to the organic law. I trust that we will not allow ourselves to be frightened out of our propriety, and be induced to prevent the development of the resources of the State by any power that, under proper guards, can develop them, by anything that may have been said against the enormous power of the Pennsylvania railroad company.

The power of the Pennsylvania railroad company is only temporary. It will go to pieces and dissolve itself into a dozen small companies, and the State will be the better for it. It is but a work of time. Those interested in that railroad may laugh at the prophecy as much as they will, but it will go to pieces, and let it go, but do not let us keep that day off and keep the power in the hands of the present monopolies by preventing future combinations of new enterprises. When we have opened the entire State to railroads everywhere upon equal terms and untrammelled, we have done about all we can do toward restraining and governing the present monopolies.

I trust that this section will be voted down as well as several other sections of the article.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the section.

Mr. COCHRAN. I call for the yeas and nays on that question.

Mr. CUYLER. I second the call.

The question being taken by yeas and nays resulted as follows:

YEAS.

Messrs. Alricks, Baer, Biddle, Buckalew, Calvin, Campbell, Carter, Cochran, Cronmiller, Ewing, Fulton, Funck, Gibson, Gilpin, Guthrie, Hay, Horton, Landis, McCulloch, Mahtor, Newlin, Palmer, G. W., Palmer, H. W., Patterson, D. W., Patterson, T. H. B., Reynolds, Rooke, Sharpe, Simpson, Stewart, Turrell, White, David N., White, Harry, Worrell and Wright—35.

NAYS.

Messrs.—Achenbach, Armstrong, Baily, (Perry,) Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Bigler, Black, Chas. A., Boyd, Brodhead, Broomall, Brown, Bullitt, Curtin, Cuyler, Darlington, Davis, De France, Dunning, Edwards, Elliott, Ellis, Fell, Green, Hall, Hanna, Howard, Kaine, Lamberton, Lawrence, Lilly, Littleton, Long, MacConnell, McClean, Mann, Niles, Patton, Pughe, Purman, Purviance, John N., Read, John R., Reed, Andrew, Smith, Henry W., Smith, Wm. H., Walker, Wetherill, J. M., Wetherill, John Price, Wherry and White, J. W. F.—48.

So the section was rejected.

ABSENT—Messrs. Addicks, Ainey, Andrews, Baker, Bannan, Barclay, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Beebe, Black, J. S., Bowman, Carey, Cassidy, Church, Clark, Collins, Corbett, Corson, Craig, Curry, Dallas, Dodd, Finney, Harvey, Hazzard, Hemphill, Heverin, Hunsicker, Knight, Lear, MacVeagh, McCamant, McMurray, Metzger, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Parsons, Porter, Purviance, Samuel A., Ross, Runk, Russell, Smith, H. G., Stanton, Struthers, Temple, Van Reed, Woodward and Meredith, President—50.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The sixth section will be read.

The CLERK read as follows:

SECTION 6. No incorporated company doing the business of a common carrier, nor the officers or managers thereof, shall, directly or indirectly, prosecute or engage in mining or manufacturing articles for other persons or corporations for transportation over the works of said company; nor shall such company, directly or indirectly, engage in any other business than that of common carriers, or hold or acquire lands, freehold or leasehold, directly or indirectly, except such as shall be necessary for carrying on its business; but any mining or manufacturing company may carry the products of its mines and manufactories on its railroad or canal not exceeding fifty miles in length.

Mr. FULTON. I move to amend the section by striking out in the second line after the word "carrier" the words "nor the officers or managers thereof."

Mr. HOWARD. We might as well strike out the whole section as strike out those words. That section was made just to cover officers and managers who engage in business.

Mr. FULTON. I do not profess to understand very much about the railroad laws of the State, but in looking over this section I discover that it will very seriously affect the people of my county, and I take it the people of many other counties are in just the same situation. We have a number of branch railroads that our people are very desirous to build. Those roads must be built by the energetic business men of the county taking lead, and it so happens that in a number of instances that I have now in my mind the men who must be the active men and furnish the capital to build these roads are the men who will have most use for them after they are completed.

For example, I know one road now about fifteen miles long that all the people along the line of the road are very much interested in, and in looking around over the people in that country the man whom they all selected unanimously as president of the company is one of the largest manufacturers, owning a large tract of timber with saw-mills upon it on the line of the road, and he will ship more over the road than any other man there. Now, is it reasonable to suppose that after individuals of that kind put their money into the construction of a railroad and after the people unanimously select them as the men that have the energy and the skill to construct and operate this road, they must either abandon their legitimate business or abandon the road in which they have invested their capital? I could name five or six other instances of the same kind; though it is said—I have heard the objection by several gentlemen here—that these men form rings in the company and that they operate against the interests of the company. The remedy there is simple. Let the company displace them if they misbehave in that position. I have no objection to making the law as stringent as possible and allowing equal rights to shippers over all the railroads, whether they be officers or who they may be, as you have a mind to, but not to amount to a prohibition. We have a provision I believe in the eighth section that will correct the evil that is meant to be corrected here, and I hope that the section will be so amended.

MR. ANDREW REED. MR. President: I am in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Westmoreland. This section would do very well for a railroad like the Pennsylvania railroad or the Reading railroad that has already been long built, but look at any new railroad, any railroad that has been built within the last three, four or five years, or any railroad building now. Who build those railroads? Certainly the people who want to use them. They are never built as a speculation to make money out of in the first instance. They are built by men who have mines that they wish to develop, by men who have tracts of timber, the products of which they wish to manufacture into lumber. Five or six energetic men who have large tracts of timber undeveloped in a portion of our State desire to manufacture that timber into lumber and get it to market; they subscribe stock and they build the road; and yet we put in this section a provision that they shall not control their own property; they must go and elect somebody else, another person who was not interested in building the road. It might apply to the large railroads that are already built, and not affect them injuriously, but it will have the effect of crippling every new enterprise in the State.

Men are not going to put their money in a place where they cannot manage it, and if you put stool-pigeons in as managers or other persons who have no great interest to manage these railroads—they are the men who can be controlled by corporations and can be worked in their interest, and who will sell out more readily than if the men who are largely interested had the direction of the road.

Then, again, they are prohibited either directly or indirectly from having any interest in mining or manufacturing articles passing over such road. A director of a railroad living in a town may desire to aid some industry which will benefit the town and build it up, and he is asked to take some shares of stock in it. He cannot subscribe for a single share of stock to any company that would improve his native town, because he must neither directly nor indirectly be engaged in the manufacturing of anything that passes over the road. Thus you will drive some of the best and most active business men of the State from all those enterprises that would build up the State.

I submit to any delegate on this floor in whose district a railroad has been built within the last ten years if the men who own the mines are the men who subscribe to build the road. Are we not crippling them? It may not injure a road like the Pennsylvania railroad, whose officers have enough to do to attend to the road itself, but there are other roads that it will seriously injure. We are indirectly doing that which we would not do directly. As was well said by the delegate from Delaware, the best thing we can do is to make the building of railroads free to all. Then, if a railroad does not act properly, other parties can build another road and we shall have competition. This proposition will shut out such new enterprises.

But it is said by the gentleman from Allegheny (Mr. Howard) that they desire to prevent the formation of "rings" of railroad officers in these fast transportation companies. I am willing to vote for any section that will prevent any person, officer, president or director of a railroad from directly or indirectly shipping freight over that road at a more advantageous rate than any one else. Insert such a clause and you will prevent any such thing as that; but do not prevent men who desire to develop their own property from managing their own business.

Mr. DARLINGTON. I desire to say a word on this section, and only a word. I cannot conceive a more insane policy than this section seems to me to foster. It appears to suppose that gentlemen who have amassed some capital by manufacturing or mining and who are willing to have the region of country in which they live improved by a railroad, and are willing to contribute their means to it, are not fit to manage it. That is precisely what you assume, that they are not fit to be trusted for fear they will give themselves some special advantages!

Sir, take the small railroad in my own county that runs from West Chester to this place. It has been eighteen years since it started, and the construction of it was largely owing to a gentleman of capital and means residing upon the line of it. He has been a director from that time to this without one cent of compensation, for it has but lately for the first time made a dividend. For eighteen years has that gentlemen been a director of that road. Nobody has complained of any impropriety of his ever having had any advantages in any way in reference to it, and yet it could not have been built without the aid of such as him.

Take another road, the Wilmington and Reading road, gotten up and largely fostered by a manufacturing gentleman of our county, of large means, its president, Mr. Hugh Steel, and who transports over the road of the products of his works more than any other man. It enables him to get them to market; but nobody pretends to say that he has any special advantages by it. Would you deprive him of the privilege of being a director in that road, or I should rather say, would you deprive the stockholders of the benefit of his services when half his time is given to them?

Again, take another road, the Pennsylvania and Delaware, also running through my county, and striking the valuable lime quarries of some gentlemen who contributed largely to the road, and without whose aid it could not have gotten along. They, too, were thought proper persons to be directors of that road.

You cannot lay out a railroad in any community without finding just such men as these, the active business men of the country, who have, by their energy and industry, made some money, and are willing to improve the country by the building of roads. You cannot, I say, turn to any railroad company in which you will not find some men who are the best business men that you can pick up, in order to control and manage it. Now, why should they not do so? Restrict them, if you please, as the gentleman from Mifflin (Mr. Andrew Reed) says, so that they shall have no special privileges; limit the vast freight lines and express companies, if you please, and I am willing to go with you in that, from all special privileges in running on railroads; but do not deprive the stockholders and owners, those who contributed their money, those most interested in the road, of the privilege of having the best men in the country to aid in their management.

Mr. H. W. PALMER. What has been said thus far has had reference to the first part of this section, and I quite agree with the views expressed, but I have objections to the latter part of the section also, which provides that no incorporated company shall "directly or indirectly engage in any other business than that of common carriers, or hold or acquire lands, freehold or leasehold, directly or indirectly, except such as shall be necessary for carrying on its business."

The objections are that four or five great railroad corporations now possess the privilege of holding lands and mining coal, of which they cannot be deprived, and to pass this section would be to forever prohibit any competition with them. It would be to secure the monopoly in the hands of these companies and to shut out any other railroads that might be built under our free railroad law from coming into competition with them. The value of those monopolies would be enhanced by the operation of this section an hundred fold. If it is the design of the framers of it to restrict the objectionable operations of railroad companies and to restrain corporations for the public good, I fear it will not have that effect.

It seems to me quite essential for the prosperity of the great coal fields of this State that they should be open and free to the competition of all the world. We look with great anxiety and expectation to the introduction of a branch of the Erie railway into the Lackawanna coal fields. We hope that great corporation, now honestly and fairly managed, will enter into competition there, and that the iron grasp of the companies who have laid hold of most of the lands in that region will be to some extent unloosed. But pass this section and the Erie railroad can never own lands and mine coal there. At the southern end of the Wyoming coal fields we are looking for the advent of the Pennsylvania railroad, and to the time when she shall stretch out a helping hand to that region and come in competition with the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western, with the Delaware and Hudson, with the Pennsylvania coal company, and with other giant corporations that are fast absorbing the mineral lands there, and we expect great benefits from this competition; to enact this obnoxious section would be to strike competition dead. Therefore it seems to me that the interests of the people of these sections and incidentally the interests of the people of the State will not be promoted by the passage of this section. I shall vote against it.

By habit and education I am an enemy of the aggregation and extension of corporate power. I believe no prophetic vision is needed to foretell the time when it will be necessary for the people to strike a sharp and deadly blow at combinations that will be made by corporations to take possession of their government and steal away their liberties. That the railroad kings have assumed the control of the State Legislature and are laying grounds to capture the Congress of the United States seems plain, but it is not, in my judgment, by such measures as this that the swelling and dangerous tide is to be stayed. I would deliver no uncertain and ineffectual blow. When the supreme hour arrives for action, when the servants clothed in their borrowed strength and grown great upon the benefactions granted them shall make their purpose plain, I would send them stripped and shorn into the shades of retirement and restore their misused franchises to the power that gave them.

Mr. COCHBURN. Mr. President: The question immediately pending is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Westmoreland (Mr. Fulton.) The gentlemen who have been discussing the matter have been talking about the section itself, which is not now directly under consideration.

The object of drawing the section in this way was to meet an evil which has been experienced in various parts of the State, and that is this: The departure of the corporations from their legitimate business and engaging in private business, and engaging by their officers also in private business directly in competition with others who are compelled to transport on the lines of these railroads, and who are injured in their property and their affairs by the competition which is brought to bear upon them, and the disadvantage to which they are put by persons who are in the railroad companies and who prevent them from the enjoyment of equal privileges on those roads.

It must be plain to any one, it seems to me, when you present to yourself the case of an individual who has, for instance, a mine on the line of a railroad. He has opened that mine, and is conducting it and working upon it, and transacting his business to an advantage. Then comes some one or more parties who combine and confederate together, and establish mining operations in competition with him, and being inside of a great railroad, being themselves members of that corporation, and having a large interest and control in it, give the preference to the transportation of their own property and throw every impediment in the way of the transportation of the property of the other party. That is the evil which this section was designed to relieve.

We have always encountered here on every great public question the interest of the small railroads. We have on the one side the small railroad companies begging that they shall not be disturbed; but that you should regulate the large railroad companies. Then when you come to the large railroad companies you are met with the argument that they are the great benefactors of the State and you must not throw the slightest obstacle in their way; that they must be left to have their own way in every thing and on every question because they are the greatest blessing to be found in the Commonwealth. That would be a very good argument for a despotism of any kind. There may be such a thing as a beneficent despotism; there may likewise be such a thing as a beneficent monopoly under certain circumstances; but if you are to make a despotism the rule of government or a monopoly the ruler of the Commonwealth, then certainly you do not act upon sound general principles.

Now, this pending section is to meet that particular case, of individuals who are put at disadvantage by the competition of the officers of railroads with their employment and their work, bringing upon them often the destruction of their interests, and causing them not only to suspend business, but often to be involved in insolvency and ruin.

Now, sir, I am assured that this is the state of things which has occurred in various parts of this Commonwealth in relation to such interests, and it is for the purpose of protecting the interests of individuals from this unequal competition with parties who have such decided advantages over them that this section was drawn, and that is the reason why I think the amendment of the gentleman from Westmoreland ought not to be adopted.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. May I ask what is the exact question?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The exact question before the Convention now is the motion of the delegate from Westmoreland to strike out the words "nor the officers or managers thereof."

Mr. HARRY WHITE. I have an amendment in my hand which I will offer if this amendment is withdrawn or voted down. I sympathize entirely with the purpose of the delegate from Westmoreland. May I have the attention of the delegate from Westmoreland? I am going to offer this amendment after the word "carrier," in line two. The amendment of the delegate from Westmoreland is to strike out the words "nor the officers or managers thereof." I propose, if he will withdraw that amendment, to add the words "on a railroad exceeding fifty miles in length."

I will explain that in a word. Gentlemen need not get impatient until they understand the precise effect of this amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The delegate from Westmoreland does not withdraw the amendment.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. I will proceed then. Everything the delegate from Westmoreland has said on this subject is exactly right, and it is the duty of the gentleman from Westmoreland, as well as all others representing that region of country, to seek to protect their material interests. I, in common with the Committee on Railroads, sympathize with the great evil this remedy seeks to strike at. The claim is that by reason of the interest of individual officers managing railroad companies and also interested in the manufacture of certain articles and in mining coal, other miners and other manufactures cannot get justice done in their transportation, that there is discrimination against them. This is a great evil and retards the development of our interests. I sympathize, as I apprehend all fair-minded men, with the efforts of the committee to correct this evil. But it has been well said that in seeking this desirable object we should not retard the legitimate business enterprises of the Commonwealth, we should not repress the energy of business talent and enterprise of the country from building railroads.

If you read the section carefully you will see that this principle has been kept in view. You will find: "The officers or managers thereof shall, directly or indirectly, prosecute or engage in mining or manufacturing articles for other persons or corporations for transportation over the works of said company, nor shall such company, directly or indirectly, engage in any other business than that of common carriers, or hold or acquire lands, freehold or leasehold, directly or indirectly, except such as shall be necessary for carrying on its business; but any mining or manufacturing company may carry the products of its mines or manufactures on its railroad or canal, not exceeding fifty miles in length."

You will observe then here is a saving clause. It was in the minds of the committee of the whole when this provision was placed in the section, that lateral railroads connecting with main lines must be allowed to be owned and constructed by miners and manufacturers. The general railroad law, as far back as 1849, when railroads were in their infancy, allowed the construction of lateral railroads by mining or manufacturing companies, fifteen miles in length. Now, that has been enlarged from time to time, and it seems here that a liberal spirit animated the committee of the whole or the Committee on Railroads, when they authorized a mining or manufacturing company to construct a railroad and transport the products of its own mines on a railroad fifty miles in length. Now, I propose to extend to these kinds of mining companies the privilege of managing their railroads as they may see fit by officers selected from the corporation itself if they desire. This amendment is in entire harmony with the whole spirit of the section, and I apprehend it carries out the idea of the intelligent delegate from Mifflin, who very properly said that if we could stop this thing now and take a new departure in the Commonwealth, it would reach the Pennsylvania railroad or Reading railroad, who are the objects of some complaint in this regard. This is very desirable, but the provision before aims, I fear, a fatal blow at the business enterprises of the Commonwealth. With this explanation, if the delegate from Westmoreland will withdraw his amendment, for I know the persons now engaged in building railroads in his locality will be protected by the amendment I hold in my hand and propose to offer.

MR. LILLY. It strikes at other interests besides fifty miles of lateral railroad.

MR. HARRY WHITE. That may be, sir, but the amendment I allude to will accomplish the object I, as well as the delegate from Westmoreland, have in view.

MR. CUYLER. MR. President: If the gentleman from York, the chairman of the Committee on Railroads, is correct in his view of the purpose of this article then it seems to me the article is very unhappy in the language it uses to express any such purpose. If the purpose of the article is that which the chairman of the committee describes it to be, then the article is simply declaratory of the common law of the State enforced by repeated decisions of our Supreme Court, not doubted by any professional gentleman, so far as I know, in this age of the world, for if there is any one doctrine that is more purely elementary than any other doctrine, with reference to carrying corporations, over and over again affirmed by our Supreme Court, and not doubted by the profession, it is that they are bound to serve all who are similarly situated precisely in the same way. Our law is full of abundant remedies for difficulties when they arise under such circumstances; our citizens have not been slow to demand their protection, and our courts have not hesitated to grant the relief when it has been asked. It is the common law of Pennsylvania; it is the common law of England; it is the common law of every State in the Union, that a carrying corporation cannot discriminate between those who are similarly situated, but must hold out the same terms and give the same service under the same circumstances, and for the same compensation, to all who are in similar circumstances. Nobody doubts that. We need no constitutional provision for that. The law is well settled. Why write in the Constitution of the State that which is only simply declarative of the common law of the State as it is to-day? So that if that be the purpose of this section, as described by the chairman of the committee, it were utterly in vain to write it here. It is the law already. Corporations are not restive under it, and courts are not doubtful of their duty and of the obligation that rests upon them to enforce that law.

But this section is capable of and does naturally bear an interpretation that is very far outside of that which the chairman of the committee states, and that interpretation is one which is largely detrimental to the development and to the prosperity of our State. We want to invite capital by every ingenious art that we can devise and apply; we want to invite capital in the State, its investment in our industrial enterprises and its application to the development of our Commonwealth. We do not want to write in the Constitution something that is to keep it out; we do not want to place in the Constitution something that is to prevent the application of capital at those points within our Commonwealth where capital is constantly wanted. Is there any sin in the fact that one who wants to have his capital invested in a particular enterprise happens to have some invested in another enterprise at the same time? Is there any wisdom in a law that would confine a man to the investment of his capital in one particular line of business and say to him, "when your capital becomes abundant you shall not invest its surplus in any other enterprise?" Why apply to a railroad corporation or any other corporation a different rule from that which wisdom and common sense and sound policy have shown to be proper with reference to individuals? Why say to a corporation, "if you have more capital within your control than is requisite for the mere and simple purposes of your company, you shall not use it in the development of the region of country through which you pass?" Why, sir, the Philadelphia and Erie railroad would have disappeared almost from the map had it not been for wise investments of capital by the lessee of that road in the development of enterprises along the line of the road. Such was the condition of the harbor of Erie and of the relations of that city to the great carrying business of the lakes that the reliance of that road came for a time to be of necessity upon the development of the region of country through which it passed. Shall it be said in the State of Pennsylvania that the assistance granted by the lessee of that road in the development of that region of country was a thing which should not have been, that it ought to have been prevented by a constitutional amendment? A policy so short-sighted, so unreasonable as that should certainly find no defender in this intelligent body of gentlemen.

Take an illustration from our own body. I sit next to one of the most esteemed members of this body, (Mr. Knight,) a gentleman who is president of the American Steamship Company, who has a large manufactory of sugars, who has furnished to the vessel which has gone out and returned, and will furnish to that vessel on her next trip a very considerable portion of her cargo from his own manufactories; and yet this section would have prevented that. What wrong would be done? Who is damaged? What interest is harmed by the ability of this gentleman, who has invested some of his surplus capital in this steamship enterprise; what harm is done to the people of this Commonwealth by his shipping a few hundred casks of molasses or sugar by one of these steamers? Yet this constitutional provision would prevent it.

I ask, then, gentlemen to pause and look at this in the simple light of common sense, and show me where the mischief is. What is there that calls for a remedy? What wrong has been done or can be done to the people of this Commonwealth by the investment of the surplus capital in the development of the great material interests of the Commonwealth; and yet that system is to be stopped by just such a section as this; for that is the natural meaning of the section, or if its meaning be that more restricted interpretation which the gentleman from York puts upon it, and which is not its actual meaning, then I say the section is utterly unnecessary, because that is the common law of the State. Does any man complain? Have we heard that in this Commonwealth there are officers of corporations who are engaged in other business, and who have a personal benefit or profit, denied to others, from the transportation of their own manufactures over the road? I know of no such cases. I have heard of no such cases. I do not believe any such exist.

There is then, Mr. President, no evil which the section is calculated to guard against, and there are vast interests in this Commonwealth upon which its enactment would inflict a most incalculable injury.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The evil which this section is intended to correct is stated by the chairman, the gentleman from York, to be that railroad corporations engage in business in competition with individual enterprise. If this evil exists, as it doubtless does, to a limited extent, let it be corrected in terms and by the Legislature, where its correction properly belongs, and whose power is ample. But the evil which would be perpetrated by the adoption of this section is infinitely great as compared with the evil which the learned chairman suggests would be corrected. There are in Pennsylvania hundreds of thousands of acres of coal and timber and mineral lands which are yet wholly undeveloped, and which must be reached by transportation facilities before they can be of advantage either to individual owners or to the State at large. Now, that which has been will be, and let us learn something from our experience. It occurred to me in thinking over this matter that a vast number of railroads have been built in Pennsylvania based exclusively upon the intent of owners to develop their lands. The Snow Shoe railroad, in Centre county, which was built to the Snow Shoe lands, of which at one time the gentleman from Centre (Mr. Curtin) was an owner, and with which he is perfectly familiar, was built for this exclusive purpose. So also the Millersburg railroad was built for a similar purpose. The Northern Central railroad is a trunk line, but passes within reaching distance of the Shamoken coal region, from which it draws a large percentage of its trade. The Millersburg railroad has been built by the owners of coal lands in order to bring them within the reach of transportation upon the Northern Central railroad, connected as it is both with the lakes and with the seaboard. So also the Shamokin railroad, running from Sunbury to Shamokin, was organized and constructed exclusively by capital interested in the development of lands owned by individuals who became the stockholders in that road. The Williamsport and Elmira railroad, which has now become a through line, was originally built under its charter from Williamsport to Ralston, and Matthew Ralston, of this city, invested in that railroad almost his entire fortune for the purpose of reaching his coal lands, which lay near that point. The Lehigh Valley railroad was built for the purpose of reaching the Lehigh coal fields, and has now extended to a trunk line of great value to the State. If you look at Schuylkill county it would be easy to name twenty or thirty, and possibly forty, railroads which have been constructed there for the sole purpose of reaching its coal fields and bringing them within the limits of transportation on the main line of the Reading railroad. The Delaware, Lackawanna and Western railroad is another line that was constructed to develop private lands and bring their mineral wealth within reach of markets. It was organized and built by the owners of the Delaware and Lackawanna Coal and Iron Company lands. The particular interest of other land owners led to the construction of other railroads to reach the coal and iron which sought development in the great and rich county of Luzerne.

But it is useless to go over the multitude of instances which could be mentioned. These occurred to me on a very cursory examination. Doubtless every gentleman on this floor knows of a great number of cases in which the sole moving inducement to the construction of a railroad has been the intent to develop the private interests which lay at the terminus or along its line and to bring these interests into close connection with transportation upon the main lines. The same influences that have been at work in the past are in full operation now. The same interest, the same motive exists today for the extension of railroads for the purpose of developing private interests in other portions of the State and bringing them into convenient channels for transportation. This process must necessarily go on until the entire mineral regions of Pennsylvania are fully developed.

All this would be greatly embarrassed, if not rendered impossible, by this section, because its effect would be to take away the leading motive for railroad construction. The moment a road is built this section would either prohibit such road from becoming a common carrier in the sense of transporting either the persons or property of other persons, or would confine it to the transportation of the products owned by such railroad company alone, to the great detriment of the public and to their exceeding great inconvenience.

In looking over this section, I throw these ideas out suggestively and not by the way of exhaustive argument, for I bear in mind the stringent limitation of debate. I can see an immense deal of mischief to be wrought by this section, while the amount of good to be accomplished by it, is comparatively small indeed. The evil to be corrected by it is very slight; the evil which it would do would be immense and far reaching.

Then, again, it is to be remembered that the coal lands and mineral lands of various kinds which require development are largely owned by capitalists outside of Pennsylvania. When these lands come to be developed, capital from Boston and the New England States, where there are owners of very large Pennsylvania properties of this kind, and from New York, and from many other quarters, must be employed, and thus you would concentrate this foreign capital in Pennsylvania largely to the development of our taxable property and of the material interests of the State in every regard. I cannot but believe (and I have certainly endeavored to look with candor and fairness upon this subject) that this section has been prepared in view of what was supposed to be the powerful influence of the Pennsylvania railroad company. That company, I would venture to suggest, has been too much in the minds of this Convention in the consideration of this article. It is framed in a mode which is intended to restrain that company, and to restrain them unnecessarily, whilst at the same time it does a vast deal of evil in restricting other interests which perhaps the Railroad Committee did not intend to reach. I believe it is wiser and better to adopt a few restrictive clauses of general and comprehensive character and leave all details upon the subject to the Legislature, where it properly belongs, and that we would act wisely in voting down not only this but some other sections which we shall reach in the progress of the consideration of this article.

I think this whole section ought to be voted down. Then let us come to the consideration of the others with a view to what the great interests of the State require and not as to what particular restraint might be placed upon the Pennsylvania railroad company. Their interests are secured already. We can do but little to touch them; but we can do, in the effort, and if this article be adopted.

as it stands are likely to do, a vast amount of evil to the general interests of the State.

Mr. LILLY. I have but very few words to say upon this subject in addition to what has already been said by the gentleman from Philadelphia (Mr. Cuyler) and the gentlemen from Lycoming (Mr. Armstrong.) They have left very little to be said on this subject, and I think that any one who has listened to their arguments ought to be satisfied that this section should not be adopted by this Convention. There are some things in the first part of the section which I heartily approve, but if the section were adopted the men who have perfected these great improvements in Pennsylvania, not the Pennsylvania railroad alone but a thousand others, will be prevented from participating in the control of their own property. It was simply by allowing in this respect that perfect freedom that always should be given to capitalists in the management of enterprises their own capital has constructed, that so many small railroads have been built in Pennsylvania, and by consolidation and extension have become trunk roads sometimes of three hundred miles in length. These roads, although trunk roads now, still represent the same interests which they represented when originally constructed, and much of their prosperity as main lines depends upon the successful development of these local interests.

If you adopt this section you will so interfere with these particular interests that you will seriously cripple the usefulness of these trunk lines. I speak of this more particularly because I well understand the destructive influence this section would exercise upon the development of the mineral wealth which lies along the route of the Lehigh Valley railroad. With that railroad I am most familiar, and no act of ours could more injuriously affect the mineral wealth of the section through which it passes than the adoption of this section. I know nothing about the Pennsylvania railroad company, and do not know how true are the evils which have been complained of in reference to that company. I suppose they have been greatly exaggerated, but even if they were true I never would consent to attempt to correct them by striking at the material interests of the entire State. I would throw around the management all the safe-guards to prevent favoritism, and make any discrimination in favor of directors, officers or stockholders, and make any infringement of the same a penal offense, punishable as such by law. I will go as far as the farthest in that direction. I cannot, nor will not, give a vote that will cripple the great interest that has made the Commonwealth what it is in material prosperity.

Mr. HOWARD. I have listened to the arguments that have been made against this section in particular and the whole railroad report in general. Very little has been said upon the specific proposition that is now before this Convention, namely, the striking out of this section of the words, "nor the officers or managers thereof."

I regard this section as one of the most valuable, if this Convention will adopt it, that will be presented to the people of the Commonwealth for their ratification. The fact that officers of railroads have become interested in special business along the line of their roads, to the great detriment and injury of other individuals that do not have the facilities enjoyed by these railroad officers, has been a common complaint, coming up from one end of the Commonwealth to the other. Let delegates understand that this section does not strike at manufacturing corporations nor at the coal companies, in which, perhaps, my friend, the delegate from Westmoreland, (Mr. Fulton,) is interested. It simply provides what I believe should be declared, that officers of such companies as are declared to be common carriers, companies engaged in the business of carrying the property of all men, should not be permitted to be engaged in mining and manufacturing enterprises along the line of their railroads. That is simply what is prohibited by this section. The officers and managers of these corporations are prohibited from being engaged in the production of articles that will come directly in conflict with articles produced by citizens outside of these corporations, who have not the facilities which they have under their control.

To permit an officer of a railroad to be engaged in any manufacturing and mining business along the line of that road leads him to be dishonest. It leads him to act dishonestly to the community because the interest which would lead him to deal fairly with the people is brought in contact with his own pocket. It makes him dishonest towards the stockholders of his corporation, and these officials defraud their stockholders just as much as they do the public at large, because a manager gives special favors as an officer of the company to himself as an individual, and the loss both of the stockholders and of the public is his individual profit.

It was only a few weeks ago that I heard the gentleman from Lycoming state upon this floor that he had been very largely engaged in a coal enterprise that was good for nothing. The enterprise was located along the line of a railroad. It had at hand all the facilities for conducting a prosperous business, but they could not procure those facilities because no railroad official was personally interested in the success of the company. As soon, however, as the gentleman from Lycoming sold his stock some of the railroad officers became connected with the enterprise, gave facilities to themselves that they would not give to others outside of their ring, and the enterprise became valuable and its stock rose in the market. We know perfectly well that men have been broken up, have been ruined, and have been driven out of the coal trade west of the Allegheny mountains because they were not in the officers' ring. This is as much a matter of common report as that there is such a city as Paris. The matter was investigated by the Legislature, and an examination made for the purpose of showing under oath how this thing was done, how these special rates were arranged, and how these companies changed their rates, not only every day, but a dozen times a day, upon a mere telegraphic dispatch.

This amendment should be voted down. To strike out these words is to strike down all that is valuable in the section. We create a railroad company for the public benefit. We say it is a common carrier, that is, a carrier for everybody, and yet here it is asked that we shall say its officers may go into business pursuits, mining and manufacturing articles, along the line of the road to come into competition with individuals. It is a stultification on the face of it. It is an outrage, and I am surprised that any delegate upon this floor would defend a doctrine so monstrous and so unjust, upon the miserable plea of bringing money to the Commonwealth. I would like to know if other people have not money, and I do not care how much money individuals may have, if an officer, an executive, official or manager of a railroad company engages in the same business with them he will crush them out. The railroad officers have done it and will always do it, unless prevented by this section of the amended Constitution, and it will be an outrage and a shame if this Convention shall now strike out the vital words of this section and leave the people of this Commonwealth at the mercy of the executive officers of railroads, who will always have as an inducement to oppress the people their personal profit. The people cannot compete with railroad officials when they are interested in manufacturing or mining companies, and these railway officials always become interested in them. There will always be inducements held out to some executive officer of a railroad company to become connected with these private enterprises, and if the matter cannot be arranged in any other way, they will give him an interest in order to induce him to furnish them with special rates and favors in transportation.

These are simply facts, and the Convention knows them as well as I do, and whatever the Convention will do, I hope they will not strike out these words. Let us vote down the amendment and then let us adopt the section.

MR. J. PRICE WETHERILL. I just desire to say that I think we all now fully understand the length and breadth of this section and it is virtually this: That no manager of a railroad shall, directly or indirectly, engage in any mining or manufacturing business. Why should we confine that to mining or manufacturing? Look at it! Allusion has been made to my colleague, Mr. Knight, who is engaged in the manufacture of sugar. He could not ship his sugar over the Pennsylvania railroad because he is a director in that company, yet another director could import sugars from Cuba and ship that article to Pittsburg. What would be lawful for one director would be unlawful for another. Is that logical? Is that proper? Is that right? Is that a correct principle?

Why should you confine the provision of the section to mining and manufacturing? Why not extend it to importing and to every other business where goods are required to be transported to the West, so that every business man engaged in shipping goods to the West upon a railroad or transportation company shall be debarred from being a director in that corporation? If that is the object of this section, I can understand very fully why the members of a Convention containing one hundred lawyers would favor a proposition which would make the position of a railroad director a comparatively easy thing for them to secure. Why, sir, if this section be adopted, you will take from the management of our railroad companies the men who have made these enterprises successful, the best business men of the country, the men who know all about the wants of the railroad companies and the transportation wants of the State and of the country, and you discriminate in that way unwisely against the best business men, in my opinion, to the injury of the corporations. If we want to act fairly we should place all business men upon an equal footing, and extend the operations of this section to every man doing a jobbing or manufacturing business or who is engaged in importing goods which are shipped over any railroad. If you want to extend the effect of this section to one class or to two classes of business men you should extend it to all, and then thereby you will drive all business men out of the railroad direction of the Commonwealth, and you leave the railroads of the State entirely in the management of either professional men or men of leisure. I suppose the one hundred lawyers who compose this Convention would not object to that, but I regret that I hold the opinion that such a result would not be perhaps very desirable.

Mr. BUCKALEW. The argument of the members of the Railroad Committee on this question is based upon the ground that the words which this amendment proposes to strike out of the section are its material part. The amendment proposes to strike out the clause which provides that no officer or manager of a carrying company shall himself manufacture products or produce them for shipment over the road.

Now, sir, I should like to know of what value this provision can be as a check, in view of the plain fact that such person engaged in mining or manufacturing instead of putting himself into the board of management can put his attorney or his friend into the board to serve his interests there. Holding stock of the company, he makes or assists in making the directors and managers by his vote. The check is quite illusory; it amounts to nothing. It can be evaded as easily as a man can turn his hand, and if there be no value in this section except in this clause of it, it is, in my judgment, an unfit one for insertion in the Constitution.

When I propose to strike at corporate bodies to prevent abuses or with the avowed object of preventing abuses, I desire that my blow shall be effectual for the purpose in view. It is the worst policy in the world to simply worry and anger without limiting the power or abuse at which we strike; and that would be simply the effect of this most remarkable and much lauded clause.

Now, sir, there is but one other thing in this section, and that is that the carrying companies shall not engage in the business of mining coal or in any manufacturing business, or any other business except that of common carriers. Sir, I was originally, many years since, when I was concerned in the enactment of laws, in favor of that policy; but matters do not stand now in our State as they stood twenty years ago. The case has entirely changed. I recollect standing for several sessions in the Senate of this State resisting the grants of mining privileges to railroad companies in the county of Luzerne, and succeeded in keeping away from that county legislation of this character. I thought that the great railroad lines should be carrying lines, pure and simple. But, sir, the tide of self-interest or, if you choose, of improvement, has passed over all those limits, and now the very heart of our great coal fields is in the hands of powerful corporations having their seats of organization at the cities of Philadelphia and New York, and it is not proposed to limit them, to place upon them any restriction by so much as the weight of a feather. While the Reading railroad company, penetrating into the mountains of Schuylkill and Northumberland and holding many thousand acres of land, can mine coal from it and ship it to Philadelphia and New York and to all the other points where markets are open to her, while the Lehigh Valley railroad can do the same thing in two of the other great coal fields of the State, and the Delaware and Hudson canal company and the Delaware, Lackawana and Western railroad company in the coal fields of Luzerne, now you propose to take a solemn pause and to lay down a great and salutary principle in the Constitution which will do what? Limit them? No, sir, but limit any competition against them hereafter, and that is introduced to us by the Committee on Railroads as the specific which is to cure all our business ills in connection with the management of railroads in this State.

I do not think you will accomplish anything useful by this section. This section will only be one of irritation, a matter of dispute and discussion. Here we have it. It will be debated before the people, and in the courts of law possibly; and yet out of it, in my judgment, you will get no substantial good, no limitation of abuse, no protection of the business system of the State in connection with the transportation of its products to market.

While I stand, as I have ever stood, entirely free from any connection with corporate bodies in this State, free from their influence or association, owing fealty and fealty alone to that portion of the people represented by me on this floor, I still refuse utterly to give false, hypocritical and buncombe votes upon questions of this kind announcing my hostility to corporate abuses. I refuse to bow my head before any such imposture as this and similar sections in this article.

Mr. T. H. B. PATTERSON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tem. I think the delegate has spoken.

Mr. T. H. B. PATTERSON. No, sir, I have not spoken on this amendment.

Before the Convention votes on this question I wish simply, and I feel called upon after the able arguments that have been made in opposition to it, to ask the Convention for a moment to reflect on the truth that has been stated.

The learned gentleman who has just taken his seat has announced boldly his opposition to all limitations upon common carrier corporations taking part in the private business of this State. He places himself broadly upon that platform, that because in the past common carrier corporations of this State have been allowed to go unlimitedly into all other branches of business against all the former rules of corporation grants in any other country under heaven, it is too late for the remedy proposed in this section.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I rise to explain. I disavow having made any such declaration as that which the delegate imputes to me.

Mr. T. H. B. PATTERSON. I simply refer to the statements that the gentleman made in the debate, and I refer to the report of that as it will appear on the debates. If I have mis-stated him I am mistaken, but I hold that I have not.

The principle that he announces covers the whole ground that I claim it covers. The State of Pennsylvania in the past has made the mistake of granting to corporations the power to go into all sorts of business at the same time. Instead of limiting them to one line of corporate business, as was originally the intent of corporate existence, it has made the mistake with many of these great railroad and common carrier corporations of allowing them privileges in their charters which enabled them to go into branches of business outside of their legitimate object of creation, and has allowed them to interfere with the development of the individual growth and the healthy business of this State.

The gentlemen who have argued the other side of this question—and it has been argued on that side almost exclusively this afternoon—have taken the broad ground that because this mistake has been made, therefore this Convention, and certainly no other power beneath this Convention should ever undertake to check them—if this mistake has been made and certain giant common carrier corporations have grown up with these powers and have got the people of Pennsylvania and the State of Pennsylvania in their grasp, then the position of such gentlemen is that we must not attempt to correct this mistake, because by so doing we shall prevent other corporations from getting similar privileges. That is the logic of their argument. Because we have traveled so far in this dangerous way therefore we must never take a step in the right direction, because in so doing we might unsettle the relations of corporations and might give an existing corporation an advantage over the future one.

Now, Mr. President, I ask this Convention to stop a moment and calmly consider whether that is the real state of this case. Are the advocates of railroads in this House speaking so vehemently and moving earth and heaven as they have been doing to defeat this section because it is futile? Men who have seen as much of human nature as the men who compose this body are not to be deceived by such flimsy pretences as that. Men do not fight shadows; they do not contend against provisions that will not hurt them; they do not get up here and make arguments and bring forth able advocates to represent their case merely to prevent those provisions being adopted which would be futile.

The section here strikes right at the evil. It says that railroad companies and other common carrier corporations shall not go into mining and manufacturing along the lines of their road, which are the main pursuits in which they engage, to the detriment of private enterprise.

Now, Mr. President, we do not propose to interfere with other lines of pursuit, because they are more general and are not generally carried on in such concentrated and powerful corporations as mining and manufacturing. There are no complaints coming up here with regard to railroads engaging in other pursuits, but with regard to their controlling the mineral wealth of this State along both sides of their roads, gradually going into the important branches of manufacture in using that mineral wealth, we have heard from every section of this State the loudest complaints. And this section proposes to remedy that evil, to say to the legitimate common carrier corporations of this State that they shall confine themselves strictly to the object for which the people of Pennsylvania intended to create them, and to say to them that they shall not go on this side and on that to take possession of the wealth and minerals and property and real estate of this State and monopolize them, against individual competition which is healthy and which it is the true interest of this State to foster.

Mr. President, this section was adopted as one of the sections of this article in committee of the whole. The Railroad Committee are not responsible for this any more than every delegate on the floor of this House. It was adopted after full deliberation and debate of days, and it was adopted as one of a system of sections; the twelfth section of which provides that all corporations now in existence in this State shall not have any more beneficial legislation from the State without accepting the provisions of this section. That is where the shoe pinches on the old corporations. That is the section which makes this section efficient in reaching all the corporations in existence in this State to-day. Furthermore, this section provides also that corporations of this character shall not hold real estate for any other purpose than the legitimate object of their own common carrier existence. I should like to ask the gentlemen who say that this section is futile in reaching that object how they get rid of that restriction?

Mr. MACCONNELL. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. T. H. B. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. MACCONNELL. Section six of the article on corporations reads in part in this way: "No corporation shall engage in any other business than that expressly authorized in its charter, nor shall it take or hold any real estate except what may be necessary and proper for its legitimate business." That section we have already adopted. It seems to me unnecessary, therefore, to repeat it here.

Mr. T. H. B. PATTERSON. That section was adopted unfortunately in the language in which it is. It does not cover the ground that it might have covered if the committee that reported it or the Convention had properly amended it. If it had provided that no corporation should go into any other business than one business authorized by its charter, it would have covered a great deal of ground that it should have covered, and would in a great measure have dispensed with the necessity for this section; and if this section should be adopted, we can so consolidate the sections as to reach that object.

But the misfortune of the case is that the Legislature of Pennsylvania, under the enlightening influences that are brought to bear upon that body by these corporations, have authorized corporations to do anything under heaven. They have not limited them to one line of corporate existence, but they have given charters which are in existence to-day which authorize corporations to do anything that a man can do, and more too, because they enable them to do all those things with the advantage of unlimited life; and that is what delegates on this floor must look at. They must remember that these corporations come into competition with individual enterprise without limit of life at their back, and they can pile up dollar after dollar, build railroad after railroad, mill after mill, manufactory after manufactory on to eternity. There is no end to corporation existence, and the corporations in Pennsylvania have been chartered to do every kind of business under the same corporate existence. I say this is an evil, and we must stop it somewhere and by some means. No other nation under heaven has ever given this power to corporations, and no other nation is now suffering under their power as the people of the United States are to day. There must some stop put to it.

Now, we do not propose to interfere with the stockholders of these corporations going into any business they please, but we simply say that it is for the healthy interests of this State that the management of these public corporations should be conducted by men who make it a business, and that they shall keep their hands off the other businesses of the State.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. COCHRAN. I ask for the yeas and nays on the pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Westmoreland (Mr. Fulton.)

The yeas and nays were ordered, ten delegates rising to second the call, and being taken resulted as follows:

YEAS.

Messrs. Achenbach, Armstrong, Baer, Barclay, Bigler, Black, Chas. A., Boyd, Broomall, Brown, Bullitt, Corbett, Cronmiller, Curry, Curtin, Cuyler, Darlington, Davis, Dunning, Edwards, Elliott, Ellis, Fell, Fulton, Hall, Hanna, Kaine, Lambertson, Lawrence, Lilly, Littleton, MacConnell, McClean, Mann, Niles, Palmer, G. W., Palmer, H. W., Patton, Pughe, Purman, Purviance, John N., Purviance, Sam'l A., Read, John R., Reed, Andrew, Smith, Henry W., Smith, Wm. H., Turrell, Walker, Wetherill, J. M., Wetherill, John Price, Wherry, White, Harry, White, J. W. F., Worrell and Wright—54.

NAYS.

Messrs. Alricks, Bailly, (Perry,) Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Biddle, Buckalew, Calvin, Campbell, Carter, Cochran, De France, Ewing, Funck, Gibson, Gilpin, Guthrie, Horton, Howard, Landis, McCulloch, Mantor, Metzger, Newlin, Patterson, D. W., Patterson, T. H. B., Reynolds, Rooke, Sharpe, Simpson and White, David N.—29.

So the amendment was agreed to.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Addicks, Ainey, Andrews, Baker, Bannan, Bardley, Bartholomew, Beebe, Black, J. S., Bowman, Brodhead, Carey, Cassidy, Church, Clark, Collins, Corson, Craig, Dallas, Dodd, Finney, Green, Harvey, Hay, Hazzard, Hemphill, Heverin, Hunsicker, Knight, Lear, Long, MacVeagh, McCamant, McMurray, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Parsons, Porter, Ross, Runk, Russell, Smith, H. G., Stanton, Stewart, Struthers, Temple, Van Reed, Woodward and Meredith, President—50.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question recurs on the section as amended.

Mr. COCHRAN. I move to amend by striking out after the word "articles" in the third line the words "for other persons or corporations." I offer this amendment because these words were inserted in order to meet an objection which had been raised to the clause which has just now been stricken out and with a view of modifying it to meet the views of some who thought that that clause was wrong. The clause itself being stricken out, there is no occasion for keeping in those words, "for other persons or corporations." The section with that amendment made, would read: "No incorporated company doing the business of a common carrier shall, directly or indirectly, prosecute or engage in mining or manufacturing articles for transportation over the works of said company."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. S. A. PURVIANCE. I ask for a division of the section, ending with the word "company," in the fourth line.

Mr. H. W. PALMER. I do not see that it is divisible at that point. I do not see that the remainder of the section would make sense.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. It would have to be amended afterwards to make the second branch sensible. The first division, however, is before the Convention, ending with the word "company," in the fourth line.

Mr. CUYLER. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. J. M. WETHERILL. I second the call.

Mr. COCHRAN. The first division of the section itself being before the Convention, I want to make a few remarks on the subject of the section and in support of it.

This section is not, as was represented by the gentleman from Columbia (Mr. Buckalew) in his speech, intended as a specific to cure all our business ills. It would take more than is contained in this section to accomplish such a purpose as that, and certainly I never intended to represent it so in any remarks that I made before the Convention.

I confess, Mr. President, that I cannot understand what the gentleman from Columbia meant when he spoke of a vote given on this section as being false, hypocritical and for buncombe. Sir, the friends of this section support it with earnestness and sincerity. They intended it for a good purpose, and they do not vote for it for false, hypocritical or buncombe purposes.

The proposition before the Convention has been assailed from various quarters and for various causes, and it is impossible to discuss this proposition at length in the short time which is limited to any speaker. But, now, on this first division, where is the injustice or the wrong in confining these transportation companies to the business and the object for which they were incorporated? Where is the error in requiring that they shall not enter into and overwhelm with their competition the business of individuals throughout this State? Is the individual citizen nothing? Is the corporation everything? Is there to be a power vested in these corporations which they can wield, and which, as it has been asserted here this afternoon, they have wielded to the injury and the wrong of individuals who were dependent upon them for the means of transportation? The very privileges which were reposed in them by the Commonwealth for the purpose of promoting the benefit of its citizens have been warped and diverted to the injury of its citizens, and can be so warped hereafter, unless they are restricted by a provision such as this.

Now, sir, if there never had been a case in which such injury had been wrought, still the fact that under the present condition of our legislation and of the powers vested in these corporations such injury may be wrought, is a reason why we should protect the people against such results. Why, sir, we have heard the gentleman from Columbia tell us how he voted for years to prevent the introduction of a policy of this kind in the affairs of the State; and is that policy, which was wrong then, any better now? Because we have taken a wrong step, shall we never retrace it? What is the remedy proposed by those who do not deny the evil and the injury? The remedy they propose is simply competition, competing lines of railroad. Why, sir, no more delusive conceit, in my judgment, than that ever was entertained! What do your competing lines of railroad amount to, and what have they amounted to? They simply amount to this: That they fight each other until the one finds that it cannot devour the other and then they

"First endure, then pity, then embrace."

That has been the history of competing lines of railroad in this State. Why, sir, for nearly thirty years we knew of a warfare between two great railroads leading eastwardly from Pittsburg, one southerly, and the other more towards the middle of the State, and their opposing workmen almost came to blows; but since the time I believe that this article was under consideration in committee of the whole, when the courts came in and decided the dispute, what was the next result? Why, those two very railroad companies agreed with each other, and settled upon a single rate of tolls and transportation. Such is the information I have from the public journals of the day.

What is then this great principle of competition, what does it amount to? It amounts to nothing. Capital is selfish, and understands its own interests, and it is not going to fight beyond that point where it has a hope of making gain or profit; and the minute that two competing lines running in the same direction, or running from the same point to different points, find that their conflicts are no longer profitable and that the one cannot devour and destroy the other, that minute the competition ceases, and they who are enemies at first become friends and allies, and the parties who suffer by the formation of this "holy alliance" are the people who are dependent on these corporations for the transportation of their goods to market.

The history of competing lines in the State of Illinois verifies what I have said here. They undertook to counterbalance the evils of their railroad system, the evils under which the people groaned and complained in that State, by constructing competing lines, and the result was that those lines were scarcely finished and their works in operation before the competitors became associates and a common toll-sheet was adopted regulating the freight and passenger traffic over their roads.

Mr. President, this Convention is called upon to do something in regard to the protection of the public interests in this behalf, and this section proposes to do three things. It proposes, first, to prevent transportation companies from engaging in the business of mining and manufacturing, business which is certainly alien to all the objects for which they were originally incorporated. Sir, shall we be told here when we undertake to accomplish a purpose of that kind, that we are simply giving false, hypocritical and buncombe votes? Is that the way to meet that which is at least an honest effort to correct what has not, as I understand, been denied to be an evil of at least some magnitude? Is that effort to be so stigmatized when the interests of the public are involved in a question of this kind?

Mr. President, certainly there can be no ground for raising any objection to that clause in this section which is now immediately pending before the Convention.

Now, what more does the section propose? It proposes to prohibit corporations from holding any real estate which is not necessary to carry out the original design of the corporation, and to enable them to transact their proper business. What is there wrong about this? Do you want to put the real estate of Pennsylvania into mortmain? Do you want to have it all engrossed in the hands of corporations? Is there to be no restraint put upon this at all? What occasion have transportation companies with real estate, except the real estate which is necessary to enable them to transact the business permitted to them under their charters?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. CAMPRELL. I move that we adjourn.

Mr. H. W. PALMER. I move that the time of adjournment be extended until we take the vote on this section. ["No." "No."]

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The hour of six having arrived, the Convention stands adjourned until to-morrow at nine o'clock.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-EIGHTH DAY.

FRIDAY, July 11, 1873.

The Convention met at nine o'clock A. M., Hon. John H. Walker, President pro tem., in the chair.

Prayer by Rev. James W. Curry.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS.

Mr. FULTON presented the petition of citizens of Westmoreland county asking for the recognition in the Constitution of Almighty God and the obligation of the Christian religion, which was laid on the table.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

Mr. H. W. PALMER asked and obtained leave of absence for Mr. Davis and also for himself for a few days from to-day.

Mr. WRIGHT. I had occasion to ask leave of absence for myself a week ago to-day. I did not then avail myself of the privilege. I now renew the request for leave of absence for myself for a few days from to-day.

Leave was granted.

Mr. BROOMALL asked and obtained leave of absence for himself for a few days from to-day.

Mr. CORSON asked and obtained leave of absence for Mr. Ross for to-morrow.

PAY OF OFFICERS.

Mr. PARSONS submitted the following resolution, which was read twice:

Resolved, That the Committee on Accounts and Expenditures be requested to report a resolution directing warrants to be drawn for the payment of the clerks and other officers of the Convention for one-fifth of their compensation.

Mr. DARLINGTON. I move to refer the resolution to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. HAY. This is a resolution of instruction to that committee. It does not need any reference.

Mr. PARSONS. That is all. The clerks and other officers of the Convention have already received three-fifths of their pay, and this resolution is simply a request to the Committee on Accounts to report a resolution directing warrants to be drawn for an additional one-fifth.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

SUBMISSION OF THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I offer the following resolution, to lie on the table:

Be it resolved as follows: First, That when the article on railroads shall have passed second reading, the Convention will adjourn to meet again on the 15th day of September, at ten o'clock A. M.

Second, That articles passed on second reading, including the legislative article, be reprinted as amended; and that three thousand copies thereof be printed in pamphlet form for general distribution.

Third, That this Convention will submit the new or revised Constitution prepared by it to a popular vote at such convenient time as will secure its taking effect, in case of adoption by the people, on or before the first day of January next.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. What order will the Convention take on this resolution?

Mr. BUCKALEW. I desire to state that I shall call up the resolution hereafter. I do not wish to take it up at this moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. It will lie on the table.

ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. I offer a resolution, to lie on the table:

Resolved, That a committee of one from each Senatorial district be appointed to present the result of the labors of this Convention to the people of the State by preparing an address to accompany the new Constitution and the use of such other means as may be necessary to secure a proper consideration of the same by all the voters of the Commonwealth, and that such committee shall so present any article when it shall have passed through third reading.

The resolution was laid on the table.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. BIGLER. I desire to make a personal explanation, which I believe is always in order. I find by the newspaper report of my remarks yesterday I am made to say virtually that I would not hesitate to trust the welfare of every man, woman and child in the State to the c the Pennsylvania railroad company. I did not say that. What I did say was in reference to the head of that company, Mr. Thomson. I did say that I would not hesitate to trust the welfare of every man, woman and child in the State to his care, because I believe he is pure and honest and would usurp no man's rights. That is what I meant to say.

RAILROADS AND CANALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The next business in order is the consideration of the article, No. 17, on railroads and canals. Is it the pleasure of the House to proceed to its consideration? ["Yes." "Yes."] The article is before the Convention for consideration on second reading. When the Convention adjourned yesterday the sixth section was pending. The question is on the adoption of the section as amended, on which the yeas and nays were called for but not ordered.

MR. SHARPE. Mr. President: It is with extreme reluctance that I rise at this late day to consume any portion of the time of the Convention. Were it not for the uncandid and unfair criticism which some gentlemen on this floor have made, not only upon the section under immediate consideration, but upon the whole article, I would gladly have remained silent. But, having had the honor of being a member of the Committee on Railroads, and having participated in its deliberations and concurred in its report, I have felt it to be my duty, and I have felt impelled by a sense of honor, to stand up here for its defence.

The article is not the crude, hasty and ill-digested product of inexperience and ignorance, which some gentlemen have been pleased to stigmatize it. My knowledge of this subject, I confess, is limited. My pathway in life, from my youth up, has been in a different direction, and through a different channel of thought. But upon the Committee on Railroads were gentlemen of large experience and sound judgment about these matters, and the article which has been produced and which some delegates on this floor seem determined to pursue with a hue and cry, has been the result of calm, conscientious and honest deliberation and consideration by the committee during a period extending over several months.

I entreat, therefore, from this Convention a candid consideration and an unbiased judgment. I hope I may be allowed to say, standing upon the threshold of these remarks, that I have no hostility whatever to railroad companies. I candidly admit that they have taken this Commonwealth up in their Briarean arms, and have placed her upon a pinnacle of greatness and grandeur. But, sir, in the early stages of this Convention it was determined that a Committee on Railroads should be created and that committee was appointed with entire unanimity. As there was a committee, it was certainly expected that it should do some work, and present an article on the subject of railroads to this Convention. Both before and after the appointment of that committee, this Convention was flooded with suggestions of delegates which they hoped to see incorporated into the organic law. Out of this raw material the committee has digested and compiled the report which has received such favorable consideration from the committee of the whole. If we turn to the present Constitution of the State we shall discover that it contains no section on railroads. At the time of the framing of that instrument the construction and operation of railroads was an almost unknown and unheard of phenomenon among the people. The whole system was then wearing the swaddling clothes of infancy; but after the lapse of thirty-five years we find great lines of railroad stretching out through mountains and through valleys in all directions. The stately steppings of these mammoth corporations sound throughout the Commonwealth like the tread of giants. We live in different times, surrounded by different circumstances and different influences, from those who framed the Constitution of 1837 and 1838.

Now, sir, was it expected that the Committee on Railroads should enhance or curtail the rights of railroad corporations? Was that committee to increase or diminish their prerogatives? Was it to plant more firmly the heels of monopoly upon the necks of a prostrate people, or was it to lift them off? Was it to attempt to bind this modern Sampson with the green withes of sympathy or the new ropes of delicate consideration, or was it to seize firm hold of him and shear him of his unhallowed locks, wherein his strength abides? The Convention was not alone responsible for the appointment of the Committee on Railroads; but as the cry of the children of Israel came up from the land of Egypt to the ears of the great I Am, so the cry of an oppressed people against corporate oppression and corporate despotism came up and filled the ears of this Convention, demanding relief.

What says the voice of the people? It arraigns these corporations and charges that they were originally chartered to build highways for the commerce of the State; that their roads were to be open and free and common to the business wants of all the people, at reasonable prices and under reasonable regulations; that they were to be common carriers of passengers and freights and that alone; that they were to afford the people the fullest facilities to carry the products of their industry to the best market; that they were to serve and protect all alike, and to hinder and oppress none; that in consideration of these advantages to the people, they consented that the right of eminent domain and the high prerogatives of the Commonwealth might be lodged in these corporate bodies; that they authorized them to construct their roads where they pleased, and to take any man's property they chose, with the single restriction that he should be compensated for his property; that an examination of the original charters of these companies will show that the sole purpose and object of their creation was intended to be the transportation of tonnage and passengers.

But that same voice of the people complains now, that by various supplements these companies have entirely departed from the original object of their creation; that they have become the largest landed proprietors in the Commonwealth; that they have possessed themselves of the richest coal fields in the world; that they have almost usurped the monopoly of this greatest necessary of life; that they have become miners and manufacturers; that instead of being the common carriers of the products of other people, they are largely engaged in carrying the products of their own mines and manufactories; that they crush out whom they please and elevate whom they will; that they have assumed a deadly hostility to private capital and private enterprise. Aye! The people charge home upon these corporations that they have stolen from them—I use the term advisedly—have stolen from them, those august privileges and regal powers, by the connivance and with the consent of a bribed and a corrupted Legislature; that the railroad companies from being the servants of the people have become their masters, and that the Legislature instead of being the law-making power of the people, simply registers and promulgates edicts of these imperial corporations. The whole scope of this article on railroads is to lead back these wandering companies to their original and legitimate functions. Especially is that the purpose and the object of the section immediately under consideration. What does it propose? It proposes two things: First, that “no incorporated company doing the business of a common carrier shall, directly or indirectly, prosecute or engage in mining on manufacturing articles for other persons or corporations for transportation over the works of said company;” and second, “nor shall such company, directly or indirectly, engage in any other business than that of common carriers, or hold or acquire lands, freehold or leasehold, directly or indirectly, except such as shall be necessary for carrying on its business;” with this saving clause: “but any mining or manufacturing company may carry the products of its mines and manufactories on its railroad or canal not exceeding fifty miles in length.” This is “the whole head and front of the offending” of this section, that has caused such consternation, and excited such indignation amongst the friends and advocates of railroad monopoly. Why, sir, what good logical reason can be given why a company chartered as a common carrier should not remain such? What good reason can be given why a company chartered for transportation should become a mining and a manufacturing company, to the detriment of individual enterprise and individual capital? Did time permit, I could give many instances of the enormities practised on individuals by these companies, under the protection of the stolen immunities and privileges.

What is the argument against the section? It has a two-fold aspect. First, that the companies already organized and in existence have got all they need and all they want and that this section cannot and does not reach them. And secondly, that the section, if adopted, will prevent competition among companies hereafter created, and thus greatly increase the power and monopoly of the present companies, and thus aggravate the grievances from which the people are now suffering. But the argument misconceives the scope of the section, and is therefore fallacious. The language of the section is general. It applies to all the corporations now in existence, and to all who are to come into being hereafter.

It declares that no company incorporated as a common carrier shall engage in mining or manufacturing. These companies that have been given possession of these vast domains of the people's territories; that now hold in their covetous grasp the coal basins of the Commonwealth; that can raise the price of the poor man's coal to any figure they please; if they are prohibited from mining and manufacturing they must let go their hold upon this property. They cannot have any further use for it if they cannot mine or manufacture, and they would have to break up these large estates and sell them to private individuals and private companies and private partnerships, and thus these vast monopolies would cease. This is the purpose and scope of the section. I scorn to disguise its meaning.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BIGLER. I have not spoken on this section, and therefore will take the privilege of making a few remarks. I, for one, am anxious only to do that which will best protect the public in all these questions relating to railroads, and surely I never would agree to incorporate any railroad companies without the denial which is made in the latter part of this section.

No railroad should be allowed to acquire real estate beyond that which is absolutely necessary for the construction and successful or practical working of the road. I presume there are very few, if any, delegates who would be willing to take the converse of this position and say that in incorporating a railroad company in the future they should have real estate beyond that which is absolutely necessary. This is an old and a favorite doctrine of mine, and so far as it appears in this section I endorse it thoroughly; but, sir, I am not prepared to say, I am not lawyer enough to inquire into the question of how far it would affect companies who have heretofore acquired it. But as it stands as to future companies it is right, and for that part of the section I am willing to vote.

I voted in favor of the amendment that struck out the interdiction against the managers and officers for the reason that I could not see why a man along the line of a railroad engaged in mining and manufacturing should be excluded from taking a part in the management of a railroad. Now, sir, I do not see that in mining and manufacturing along the line of the road by those interested in it articles as may be transported on the road can do any public harm. I do not think this clause is in a proper form or place, but I do agree that no railroad company should be allowed to become a mining and a manufacturing company; that they ought to be confined to the legitimate business of common carriers.

While this section in its form is not what I would be glad to have it, I do not hesitate to say that those things which are denied to railroad companies on its face ought to be denied; they ought not to be miners and manufacturers; they ought not to have more real estate than is necessary for the legitimate purposes of a railroad company. That is all I have to say.

Mr. J. W. F. WHITE. I agree, Mr. President, with the remarks of the delegate from Clearfield on this point, that a railroad company which is incorporated as a common carrier should not engage in any other business, nor engage in mining and manufacturing; but it has occurred to me there is far more in this section than that, and I call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Railroads and of the members of the Convention to this fact: Suppose a company shall be incorporated mainly to reach the mining regions of our State and mainly as a coal company to develop and take to market the coal from different portions of our State; its main business is not that of a common carrier; will not this section now prohibit that company from carrying passengers or accommodating people at all? It says that no incorporated company doing the business of a common carrier shall do so and so. Carrying the few passengers that might be on the line of their railroad or accommodating the people living along the line of that railroad of a very limited character would make them common carriers; and under this section they would be prohibited from carrying the coal of that region to market.

It strikes me that this section will cover a case of that kind, and if so I think it would be very injudicious to place it in the Constitution. There are many mining regions of our State where there are coal and iron, and the common carrier business would not authorize the construction of a railroad merely for public business; it would be mainly for the carrying of the products of those mines belonging to the company to market; and I ask the question, would not this section prohibit such a company from accommodating the few people along the line of that railroad?

Mr. COCHRAN. If the gentleman will permit me to reply I will simply say that I do not understand it in that way. The gentleman from Allegheny is certainly a very able lawyer and is as able to construe this section as I am, but I think, taking the section together, it does not have that effect.

Mr. J. W. F. WHITE. It occurred to me, Mr. President, that the moment they become common carriers they will have to cease carrying the products of their mines to market, under this section. They must cease under this section if they are common carriers at all.

And, Mr. President, if it does not cover a case of that kind, then the section will be of no use, because it can be got around by incorporating the company for any other purposes. I call the attention of the Convention to the sixth section of the article on private corporations, and it seems to me that that section covers all we need. The sixth section of the article on private corporations, which has already passed second reading, is in these words:

"No corporation shall engage in any other business than that expressly authorized in its charter, nor shall it take or hold any real estate except what may be necessary and proper for its legitimate business."

Now, does not that language cover all that is really valuable in the section before us; and is it not more proper in the article on private corporations than here, because there it is applicable to railroads and all other corporations? It seems to me that there is no use in burdening down our Constitution by repeating sections and provisions in different parts of it; and as that section has already passed second reading, embracing what may be considered the material portions of the section now before us, it seems to me useless to pass this.

Now, one word as to the closing sentence of this section. I call the attention of the Convention to the limitation here as to the power of mining and manufacturing companies:

"But any mining or manufacturing company may carry the products of its mines or manufactories on its railroad or canal, not exceeding fifty miles in length."

Why should we limit mining or manufacturing companies to fifty miles on a railroad? If they have a right to construct a railroad fifty miles to carry the products of their mines and manufactories to market, why should they not have the right of going fifty-five miles or sixty miles? What principle is there that will limit these mining and manufacturing companies carrying the products of their own mines and manufactories over their own roads only fifty miles? I cannot conceive of it; it does seem to me a most pernicious section of the Constitution. Why not say that they may carry their products over their own railroads a hundred miles? If they have a right to construct fifty miles, why not give them the right to construct longer than that to reach other regions of our State and develop other portions of it? Why say they shall carry fifty miles and no further? It does seem to me that that restriction is wrong, and if the section is to be adopted the latter part of it, that limits them to fifty miles, ought to be stricken out.

Mr. BIDDLE. Mr. President: I intend to vote for this section, maimed and mutilated as it is by being deprived of the words that were struck out by the amendment adopted yesterday. I intend to vote for it because I cannot get anything better. I regret very much that there seems to be a disposition on the part of the House to strike out nearly all the provisions of this article which I deem valuable.

The blows come directly from two classes of attacks. The one class, at the head of which I place my distinguished friend, the delegate from Philadelphia who sits in front of me, (Mr. Cuyler,) sees nothing in all the legislation of this State for the last twenty years in regard to these corporations but what is admirable. In his apprehension everything that has been done has been rightly done, and every effort that has been made on this floor to check or qualify the partial and one-sided legislation, about which we have been entertained in almost every debate upon every article of this Constitution, has been wrong. He sees everything through the rosy mists of his prepossessions; and whether we are called upon to place these corporations, in regard to limitations of time or limitations of amount, or in any other respect, on the same footing as individuals, he thinks it all wrong. Indeed, if I understand him aright, he seems to think it an evidence of the highest prosperity of one of these great institutions, that they are already provided with the means of running limitably into debt; and, while on the one hand he indulges in remarks about investments of surplus capital, which I did not quite understand, on the other, he thinks that the power of borrowing millions and hundreds of millions is a most desirable thing.

MR. CUYLER. Will the gentleman pardon an interruption?

MR. BIDDLE. As our time is justly limited to ten minutes, and I do not intend to transgress a second over my time, I would rather keep it all to myself.

There is another class of objectors, who object to almost everything that is presented in this article, because it is said that so much mischief has been already done it is in vain to attempt to stem the current. It is extremely difficult, therefore, to meet both classes of objectors, but still something may be said in defence of this section and of the article generally. I, for one, believe it to be most valuable, and shall continue to believe that the management of these companies should be by persons who have no partial or indirect interests to foster which weaken their allegiance to the body of proprietaries, whose servants they are, and to the public generally, and therefore I voted against the amendment of yesterday. I am one of those who believe it most valuable to keep these transportation companies in the direct line of their duty. I do not care how swimmingly we may appear to go on just now, when gales are prosperous and skies are clear. I believe the day of reckoning is to come when every departure from the proper principles of the management of these roads will be visited with woes unutterable upon those who have embarked their capital in these adventures, and necessarily upon the public at large. I shall, therefore, go for every measure of restriction that is possible. If it is only to enounce a principle and nothing more, still I shall vote for that.

38—VOL. VI.

I feel the force of what was so well said by the gentleman from Allegheny (Mr. T. H. B. Patterson) yesterday when he pointedly called the attention of the House to the twelfth section of the article, by which you provide, reaching, retrospectively if you please, companies already chartered, that no future legislative favors shall be bestowed upon them unless they conform themselves to the law of this article; and I believe, notwithstanding what has been said on the other side, that an enormous amount of good will still be done by passing the different sections of this article, in spite of the vast grants of power that have been already made. Every attempt to put them on the same footing of equality with the rest of the public seems to be met in this way. When it was a question of extending to the rest of the community the same right of borrowing money at the same rates of interest as is conferred by special privileges upon these corporations, what was the argument? "Oh, it is legislation." Now, I call such a provision as that a direct blow in the face; and yet I found the distinguished member from Columbia, (Mr. Buckalew,) who expressed his readiness to deal such a blow at the proper time, voting against that most wholesome provision. Perhaps the blow was too direct.

I found in the substitute offered for the fifth section yesterday a most wholesome provision, taking from the grasp of these larger corporations the smaller lines which were devised and constructed for peculiar local purposes. I thought that a very direct blow; and yet this Convention in its wisdom turned it aside from these corporations; so that it seems to me, whether the law be direct and open or whether it be a little more indirect in its operation, the same arguments are addressed to prevent its operation upon these bodies.

Now, I have no purpose at all to subserve except what I believe to be the interests of the whole community. I have no private griefs to redress; I have no peculiar interests to advance. I suppose I may say at least that much. Most of the addresses upon this subject have been prefaced by statements of what the speakers are or were in regard to this subject. These declarations are generally of very small value; they are either the effusions of sincere and pardonable vanity, or they are something else. Sometimes they are meant as a cover for apparent inconsistency, and they amount to about this:

"Heretofore my position has been thus and so; I have been a very consistent opponent of the particular style of legislation which is thought to be so injudicious; but now I find the current so strong that I cannot swim against it any longer, and, therefore, I will take a new departure." I do not attach a great deal of value to such declarations. They are generally entirely apart from the point under discussion. The individual status of the speaker has really very little to do with the question. What is all important is, "can you do and are you doing anything to check that which, by one universal cry from the whole community, is believed to be wrong." Why, sir, it was just to prevent sins of this kind that this Convention thought it necessary to adopt a peculiar style of oath, and that extraordinary provision which enables a jury to review the legislation of the Legislature—it was just this kind of legislation that was intended to be struck at by those provisions.

Now, I say most respectfully to this House—but still I say it as emphatically as I can—what a farce to pass such provisions as those if, when you have the opportunity of directly meeting the evil, you omit to do it, and then hug yourselves in the delusion that by these extraordinary retroactive provisions you are going to do any good!

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The gentleman's time has expired.

MR. BULLITT. Mr. President: I have an amendment to offer. I move to strike out all after the words "section six," and substitute the following:

"Presidents, directors, officers, agents and other employees of railroad and canal companies shall not engage or be interested, directly or indirectly, otherwise than as stockholders in such companies, in the transportation of freight or passengers as common carriers over the works of any company of which they are presidents, directors, officers, agents or employees, and they shall not so engage or be interested in the transportation of freight or passengers over the works of any other such company, except as stockholders therein, which may be leased or the majority of the capital stock of which may be owned or controlled by the company of which they are presidents, directors, officers, agents or employees."

It appears to me, Mr. President, that this subject of railroads is a very delicate one for this Convention to deal with. The value of railroads to the commerce of this country is a conceded fact, I suppose, on all hands. The State of Pennsylvania to-day is reaping the largest benefits from the system of railroads which has penetrated through almost every part of her territory. They are the great arteries of commerce in times of peace; they build up and contribute more to the growth of your State, to your wealth, to your population, to your power, than probably any other one element; and the moment you undertake to trammel or restrain or constrain them, you incur the hazard, possibly, of impairing their usefulness and rendering them inefficient for the purposes which were originally intended to be accomplished by them. At the same time, Mr. President, it is important that they should be put within such restraints and within such bounds as may keep them within proper control and prevent them from acquiring power which will enable them to overcome the powers and the authorities of the State itself.

The section under consideration appears to me to be objectionable in that it puts a trammel upon railroads which may in time prove to be injurious and detrimental, instead of beneficial. There is, however, an object which it seems to me ought to be accomplished, and that I have endeavored to reach in the section which I propose as an amendment; that is, to prevent the officers, agents or employees of railroad companies from converting the railroads themselves into the means of conducting to their own private wealth at the expense of the stockholders and to the injury of the public. It is an injury to the stockholders inasmuch as any intermediate line which is controlled and managed in the interest and for the benefit of the officers or employees of the railroad companies themselves must obtain more favorable terms from the railroad companies than they could do if this matter were left in the hands of persons not interested in the railroad.

Another effect of the interest of parties controlling railroads in these intermediate lines is to induce them to make contracts with the railroad companies at higher prices and thus injure the public. To-day the freights upon all the large railroad companies are higher than they need be in consequence of these intermediate lines. That is known to be the fact, and is felt to be an evil in all the large commercial communities.

If you put the power into the hands of the men who control the railroad companies themselves to make contracts and bargains for themselves, no man can resist the temptation, I care not who he be. The conscience can always be salved over with excuses to enable a man to reach such a point as that, and necessarily he will make contracts, as I said, injurious to the stockholders and injurious to the public. Besides that, the effect of this is necessarily injurious to the official morality of the men who are in the management of these railroad corporations. This evil of intermediate lines, controlled by the officers of the railroad companies in the interest of and for the profit of the officers and employees of those companies, has extended throughout this State, and I do not think anybody will contradict me successfully when I say that it is at least generally believed that such a system prevails to a very great extent, not only in Pennsylvania but throughout the whole of this country. One of the ablest reports ever made to the Legislature of any State, and which caused a deep interest throughout the State of Ohio at the time, was a report made some four or five years ago by a committee of the Legislature of that State upon this very subject, in which that committee showed that this system ramified throughout every county in the State of Ohio, and was corrupting and injuring the trade of the State, the business of the State, and the railroad interests of the State in every direction.

While I am not willing to vote for this section as it now stands, I think that the substitute which I have offered reaches a point which seems to me to be intended to be reached by this section, but which has been stricken out. I propose now this as a substitute for the section, as reaching an evil which I think ought to be corrected by this Convention.

MR. CARTER. I desire to occupy but a few minutes time, not with the slightest hope of effecting any change in the mind of any individual present, but to define my position in regard to this matter and to give expression to some general thoughts which have been suggested by the debate of the last session. It seems that we are in danger of losing sight of the true question or principle at issue, in the many eulogiums paid to the railroad systems of this State and of other States with reference to the vast good that they have conferred upon those Commonwealths.

No one doubts it; no one calls in question the fact that they are indispensable to human progress. Sir, I would regard that man as insane who would wish to trammel or cripple injudiciously or injuriously this great and important interest. But is it not the teaching of history that there is a liability to abuse this, and that abuse has arisen in these great monopolies? It seems to be the intention of the report of the Committee on Railroads and Canals to correct that abuse.

There seems to be a disposition, however, to forget that there is a danger in great monopolies. What is to become of the teachings of the great exemplar of Democracy, Andrew Jackson, who raised his voice in opposition to monopolies and warned the people, in his day and time, of the danger and the evil that would flow from them? Does not that danger exist at present? Nay, are we not in the very midst of it? If his warning voice is still extended, if he is yet revered, not only merely by his political friends and partisans, but by the whole people, it is for the resolute and determined stand he made against a monopoly which only controlled some $30,000,000 of capital, that we hold was wise and judicious; and, sir, is there no danger now to the liberties of the people from this great railroad interest that has ten times the power and ten times the amount of capital, and whose Briarean arms extend to the remotest parts of this Commonwealth, and would fain embrace this Convention, that has been controlling the Legislature of the State in a way that the United States bank against which he warred never attempted, or if it did attempt, failed of success?

Is it denied that the Pennsylvania railroad company has interfered with the legislation of the State? If it has done so, is not this then a time for men to pause and think before we heedlessly vote down all the provisions of this article, which have been designed to correct this evil? I think that the danger is imminent. It is not denied. I have the highest authority, that of the gentleman behind me, (Mr. Cuyler,) for saying that that institution has interfered with the legislation of the State.

MR. CUYLER. I ask the gentleman to whom he refers.

MR. CARTER. I refer to the gentleman who interrogates me.

MR. CUYLER. I deny it.

MR. CARTER. Well, sir, I repeat it.

Mr. CUYLER. The gentleman says that I said that to him.

Mr. CARTER. I did not say that you said it to me.

Mr. CUYLER. Well, I deny that I ever said it to him or anybody else.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman did say it, and I repeat the remark. I care not what the minutes or published reports of this Convention say; I trust my own ears; and I will tell the gentleman when he said it. He said it in a colloquy upon this floor between himself and the distinguished gentleman from York who stands before me, the delegate-at-large, (Mr. J. S. Black,) in which he denied, when the question was closely put, the existence of interference with the legislation of the State of Pennsylvania, by the Pennsylvania railroad company, but he admitted that when the Pennsylvania railroad company had interfered it was to prevent hostile legislation.

Have I not made out my case? I insist upon it that if they interfered to prevent hostile legislation they can interfere and would interfere and have interfered to induce favorable legislation. Now, sir, have I not established my allegation? That he had admitted interference.

We have heard much of the corruption of this controlling influence on legislation. It has been said that our country is going head-long to destruction from the corruption of our legislative bodies. Now, gentlemen of the Convention, pause and ask yourselves what has been the cause of that corruption? I say again that these vast monopolies are the corrupting power; it is they who are responsible; and never, by act or deed will I aid to increase this power. It is unsafe for the liberties of the people.

In replying to these views as expressed by others we have had a siren song sung of the great prosperity of the State as brought about by these institutions. They ever sing this same song in our ears. The gentleman from Lycoming presents a beautiful picture worthy of Claud Lorrain of the great prosperity of the vast prairies of the west, induced, fostered and created by railroads. But, sir, there was a background to the picture which he did not fill up. That background is the frowning brows and the angry eyes of a half a million of men who believe that this has not been an unmixed good, an unmixed blessing. I refer to those organizations now existing by thousands, not thousands of men, but thousands of granges. I would ward off that thing if I could. So long as the people of this State rest in the belief that this evil is growing no worse, and that this great Commonwealth, as the gentleman from York (Mr. J. S. Black) said, is possessed of strength enough to bear off the burden of evil and this corruption as did Samson the gates of Gaza, I am not willing to remain silent in view of the perils of the future. There is a limit to the power of the State of Pennsylvania to stand this oppression, to endure these evils, and now is the time and hour to do it. I am not aggrarian in feeling—far from it; but for the sake, not only of the people, but of the railroads themselves, let us put in the Constitution such restrictions as the exigencies of the occasion require.

One word as to the speech of the gentleman from Columbia (Mr. Buckalew.) I have been accustomed all my life to put things on principle. I believe that a corrupt tree cannot bear good fruit. It must bear corrupt fruit. He says that for years he contended with this railroad influence and did not believe that common carriers should be engaged in any other business than that for which they received their charters and that they should not engage in mining or manufacturing. He fought it for years, he said, but yet at last it was consummated. Now what does he propose? Why, to give up the fight. Would not the gentleman then at that time have liked to have such a constitutional inhibition as this to have supported him? It would have come in place then and there, but now he yields the fight. Some Delilah has shorn the locks of our Samson; he has lost his strength and power; he has yielded the fight. Not so with me. Sir, I believe if a thing is wrong in principle it is wrong always. If it was wrong ten years ago it is wrong now. If it would produce wrong results ten years ago it will produce wrong results ten years to come. And I would yet interpose this section, this prohibition that they should be confined to the business of common carriers.

I have been accustomed to listen to the words of wisdom from that gentleman, and I have almost felt as if sitting at the feet of Gamaliel, with his long acquaintance with public affairs and calm deliberate manner; but I must acknowledge that I was utterly disappointed when he came to that most lame and impotent conclusion which was that now, inasmuch as this wrong, as he held it to be, had been perpetrated, now we must acquiesce. Oh most lame and impotent conclusion! Why, sir, if a thing is wrong and on a wrong principle, why fight on, and fight ever, to correct it. I know no other rule than that.

But I know that this Convention is tired of this subject, and I have had the desired opportunity to express my opinions and certainly honest convictions. I do not want gentlemen to lose sight of the fact that there is danger of yielding up to vast monopolies and conferring to great power. Many young men are in this Convention, and I will take the liberty of saying this to them, to be somewhat careful of making their record against these judicious restrictions that the people of the State expect us to apply. The grangers will be on after awhile, there is no doubt of it. I disapprove of it, I oppose those things, and I would do everything we can do to avoid the supposed necessity of such organizations in our grand old Commonwealth.

Mr. T. H. B. PATTERSON. I wish to call the attention of the delegate from Philadelphia (Mr. Bullitt) who offers this substitute, to the fact that after the striking out of the words, "nor the officers or managers thereof," by the amendment yesterday, his substitute does not seem to be strictly germane to this section, and therefore I appeal to him to withdraw his substitute and offer it as a separate section in order to get a fair and square vote both on the section and on the substitute.

Mr. BULLITT. I withdraw the motion to strike out and also withdraw this amendment, and I will offer it as a separate section immediately after this section is voted on.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The amendment is withdrawn. The question is on the section.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I rise to move an amendment: To strike out all after the word "business," in the eighth line. The words to be stricken out are:

"But any mining or manufacturing company may carry the products of its mines and manufactories on its railroad or canal, not exceeding fifty miles in length."

The more I examine this section, the more defective it appears to me to be. The first part of the section and the latter part are quite inconsistent and mutually destructive. The first part of the section forbids any carrying company from engaging in mining or manufacturing. The concluding part of the section allows any mining or manufacturing association to become a common carrier, to engage in the business of transportation, to manage and conduct railroads, save only that the lines shall not exceed fifty miles in length.

Now, sir, there are but few points in the State from which fifty miles will not carry you out of the State or to a connection with other railroads of the United States. All that a railroad company that desires to mine coal, to engage in the business of transportation, will have to do will be to organize a mining company of its own members or of a clique of its members, and then they will have completely, of course, the privilege of using the line of road if it is already constructed, or if not constructed, to themselves build a line of railroad fifty miles long, and thus as a common carrier become at the same time a producer either of mining or manufactured articles to be transported over the road.

So this section has absurdity stamped upon it. The first part of it and the last part of it neutralize each other, and nothing remains of it except a limitation that mining and manufacturing companies or associations cannot transport their products over the road beyond fifty miles.

Mr. President, the main question involved in this section is covered already by the sixth section of the article on corporations in rather better language. That section, which has been read two or three times, provides that no company shall engage in any other business than that provided for in its charter; and then in the article on legislation we have provided that the Legislature shall pass no special charter for any sort of incorporated companies to carry on business pursuits.

Now, sir, I know nothing that you can add to the section already agreed to in the article on corporations, unless it be a provision that the Legislature shall not authorize corporations to be created to carry on more than one business or one employment at the same time. I do not see what else you can do except add a provision of that sort. Of course, here are two or three clauses of this section which, standing by themselves, I should be willing to vote for, but the section is inconsistent with itself, destructive as I have already explained, and then the only language in it that is of any consequence is already in better form in the article on corporations, to wit: The limitation of a corporation strictly to its corporate business. That, of course, would be a conclusion of law; undoubtedly that is an ancient principle of the common law, but I have no objection to having it inserted in the Constitution, but it is already there in our other work.

Mr. J. S. BLACK. Where?

Mr. BUCKALEW. In the article on corporations, section six. Mr. President, there is another limitation contained in one section of this article which we have already voted down; that is in section five:

"No railroad, canal or other corporation doing business as a common carrier shall, either directly or indirectly, hold, guarantee, or endorse shares in the capital stock, bonds or other indebtedness of any other corporation, individuals, or partnership, except those doing the business of common carriers."

That we voted down. It was done against my opinion and against my vote; but that would have meant something. Why, sir, here in debate it was explained on a former occasion that a railroad company can become concerned indirectly in the business of manufacturing iron—

Mr. J. S. BLACK. The gentleman referred me to the sixth section of the article on corporations. In what part of the sixth section on corporations does the gentleman find any provision which will prevent the Legislature from making the charter of a corporation as broad as it pleases and allowing any number of businesses to be done by one company?

Mr. BUCKALEW. I did not say that. I said that was the only thing that could be added that I could think of.

Mr. J. S. BLACK. If it be not in that article, why should we not insert it in the article now under consideration?

Mr. BUCKALEW. If the gentleman will prepare a clause of the sort, I will look at it with very respectful attention.

That fifth section, which has been voted down, I think might be useful in preventing corporations from being indirectly concerned in the business of other corporations by guaranteeing their stock and bonds. I was willing to vote for it and I have no objection to voting, for some careful and proper provision which shall limit the Legislature in the matter of passing omnibus charters, if I may use that expression; that is, charters enabling the corporators to carry on several business pursuits; but as to this section, for the reasons I have just given, in addition to those mentioned by me yesterday, I think the whole of it should be voted down.

Mr. HOWARD. There is still a little left in this section that I think is very much better than section six of the article on corporations. The delegate from Columbia seems to think that section six of the article on corporations will supply all that is left in this section and in a better manner, therefore the Convention should vote this down. Now, section six of the article on corporations does not supply it. Section six of the article on corporations declares that corporations shall be kept within the limits of their charters; that is, they shall be confined to the business specified in the charter of incorporation. I can refer the delegate from Columbia to charters of incorporation to-day that embrace railroading, the business of common carriers, the business of mining, the business of manufacturing, the business of banking, the business of building passenger railways, of doing everything under the sun but running the government of the United States and the government of Pennsylvania; and yet under the sixth section of the article on corporations they can do all these things, provided they are specified in their charters!

So the Convention will understand distinctly if they vote down this section on the idea that it is better supplied by section six of the article on corporations, they certainly will be mistaken. This section six in the railroad article provides that they shall be limited to the business of common carriers; that is, it brings them right down to the specific business for which they were chartered. We have got that much left of the sixth section of this article, while the sixth section of the article on corporations permits them to do anything that is specified in their charter; and I repeat here again that a company called the Pennsylvania company, a right arm of the Pennsylvania railroad, has more power than ever was conferred upon any corporation before in the world. It has the right to do anything that it is possible for the Pennsylvania Legislature to give it, manufacturing and mining, not only common carrying, but building passenger railroads, doing everything that can be done by man under the sun, except to run the government; and yet that kind of a corporation would be covered, saved and protected by the sixth section of the article on corporations that the delegate from Columbia thinks is a great deal better than what is left of the sixth section of the article on railroads.

Then again he seems to think that the section is inconsistent with itself, and that the latter two lines and a-half should be stricken out, because that clause allows mining companies having a road not exceeding fifty miles in length to carry the products of their own mines and manufactories, and he says that will turn these companies into common carrying companies when it was not intended by their charters that they should be anything more than mining or manufacturing companies. Now, what does the section say? It does not say anything of that kind. The language is: "but any mining or manufacturing company may carry the products of its mines and manufactories." They are permitted to carry the productions of their own mines and their own manufactories. They cannot become common carriers unless they carry for others. This section does not permit them to do that, and therefore they cannot be turned by this section, if adopted in the Constitution, into common carrier companies when they were not intended to be such by the Legislature. There is, therefore, nothing in that argument of the delegate from Columbia.

If the members of this Convention mean that hereafter when a company is chartered as a common carrier company, it may do everything else that is embraced in such a charter as that obtained by the Pennsylvania company, then they will strike down this section and say they are satisfied with section six of the article on corporations; but if they do not mean to have such broad charters as that hereafter, if they mean that when a charter is granted to a company to do the carrying trade of the State, it shall be limited to that business, then they will vote for the balance of this section six.

Why, sir, these latter lines were inserted in order to meet the objections that would be raised to the section by those who are opposed to all reform. I find it is utterly impossible in this Convention, and it has always been so, not only here, but everywhere, to please everybody. You never can please those who are opposed to all reform whatever. Of course there will always be objection. Objection and fault can be found to the best plan that ever was proposed.

I think the amendment proposed by the delegate from the city (Mr. Bullitt,) and subsequently withdrawn, is fully covered by the eighth section of this article, which prohibits the officers of these companies from engaging in the business of transportation on the lines of their roads.

Mr. President, I admit that the life, the real value of it, has been taken out of this section, but still there is something left that ought to be asserted as a principle by this Convention, namely, that when a company is chartered as a common carrier they should be limited to that business and the Legislature should not have the power to confer upon them any other powers or privileges.

Mr. BAER. As a member of the Committee on Railroads I wish to say a word on this article. I believe I am responsible for the latter clause of the section as it stood before it was modified, but not exactly as it appears at the end of the section now. I urged it then for the reason that the first clause as it stands in the proposition, to my mind was a perpetual barrier to all the development of the interior by small railroads. While I was willing that large companies that were incorporated for the sole purpose of common carriers should be restricted to their legitimate business, yet I thought, in order to protect companies that were incorporated as mining companies and who became common carriers only as a necessity, because they were carrying their own products and carrying for others as a mere incident, that this other clause became necessary, and I think so still. I think now that if the first part of this section is adopted, the latter part becomes a necessity unless we intend to cripple all the small enterprises in the State. I hope, therefore, that if one is adopted the other will be. I admit that there is a clause in this section that is wholly, and perhaps better, covered by the sixth section of the article on corporations. But, sir, as I understand the question now pending, the gentleman from York proposed a division of the section, the first division to end with the word "company" in the fourth line. If so—

Mr. COCHRAN. I wish to say to the gentleman from Somerset that that division was not called for by me.

Mr. BAER. Does not that call still stand, and will not the vote have to be taken in that form? If that is so, then I ask is not the amendment offered by the gentleman from Columbia entirely out of order? It becomes necessary, therefore, to consider the section as it stands upon that division. The first clause reads: "No incorporated company doing the business of a common carrier shall directly or indirectly prosecute or engage in mining or manufacturing articles for transportation over the works of said company." That clause, I think, should be amended so as to cover the objections that are raised here. For that reason, if it is in order, I move to amend the first division, by striking out all after the word "section" and inserting as follows:

The PRESIDENT pro tem. There is an amendment now pending, to strike out all after the word "business," in the eighth line.

Mr. BAER. But I raise the point of order on that amendment that a division has been called on the section, and the first question is on the first part of the section, and the amendment of the gentleman from Columbia must be out of order as it applies to a subsequent part of the section.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The delegate is laboring under a misapprehension. A division was asked for yesterday, but the Chair stated that the last clause would be senseless under such a division, and therefore ruled the division out of order.

Mr. BAER. Then I shall withhold my amendment until the pending amendment is disposed of. I will read it at this time so that gentlemen may understand the amendment that I propose to offer at the proper time:

"No company organized to do the business of a common carrier shall directly or indirectly prosecute or engage in mining or manufacturing articles for transportation over the works of said company."

The difference between the two propositions is simply this: That while the section as it stands interferes with the small companies whose special and legitimate business is mining, and who only become carriers from necessity, without interfering by any possibility with any interest in any locality, this amendment will confine it to corporations that are incorporated for the purpose, and whose main business is that of common carriers, and that is as far as we ought to go.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment of the delegate from Columbia.

Mr. BUCKALEW. On reflection I am willing to allow the vote to be taken on the section, and I will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BAER. If that amendment is withdrawn I move to amend the section, by striking out all after the word "section," and inserting the following:

"No company authorized to do the business of a common carrier shall, directly or indirectly, prosecute or engage in mining or manufacturing articles for transportation over the works of said company."

Mr. ARMSTRONG. It seems to me, Mr. President, that the debate on this question has not been characterized by the candor which has ordinarily heretofore attached to the debates of this Convention. It is not true, I think, that gentlemen who oppose this section oppose it because they are particularly railroad men, or because they believe that all legislation heretofore passed on the subject is without exception, or because they think that the evils have grown so large that they are beyond all remedy. It is, as I believe, far more based upon a well founded apprehension that it would be needlessly embarrassing without accomplishing any corresponding good.

For myself, I readily admit that railroad corporations have exercised at times an injurious influence over the legislation of the State. I could point to instances in which I believe the influence has been corrupt; but I do not believe that the people of this State are hostile to railroads. What does it all mean, and what is the summation of all the popular feeling manifested upon this subject? If I correctly understand it it is, first, that railroad corporations have exercised undue and sometimes corrupt influence in legislation; next, that they have exercised an unwise and unfair discrimination in freights. Beyond those two particular items of complaint, so far as my knowledge goes, the people of the State are not dissatisfied with railroads, nor, except in a few instances, with railroad management.

Now, what have we done by way of improvement in that direction? As to legislation, we have limited it in the most precise terms. We have said that the Legislature "shall not pass any local or special law to regulate labor, trade, mining or manufacturing, nor create incorporations by amending or renewing the charters thereof, nor granting to any corporation, association or individuals, any special privilege or immunity; nor shall the Legislature indirectly create such special or local law by the repeal of a former law; nor shall any bill be passed granting powers in any case where the granting of such powers can be covered by general law."

In addition to this we have limited, I trust effectually, the power of corporations or any other parties to procure legislation through corrupt means by requiring that every bill shall be printed, that it shall be referred to a committee, that it shall be passed upon three separate readings, and the yeas and nays called and entered upon the record. We have also provided what I believe to be a crowning protection, namely, taking from fraudulent legislation the protection heretofore accorded to it by putting it in the power of the courts to inquire into the fraudulent passage of a law and to declare it to be null and void. Now, in the face of these provisions, have we not sufficiently guarded against the corrupt influence of corporations? Have we not greatly limited, if we have not effectually stricken down, the power which they can bring to bear injuriously and unfairly to secure improper legislation?

Now, what have we done as to corporations? We have already provided, in the sixth section of the article on corporations, that no corporation shall engage in any other business than that expressly authorized in its charter, nor shall it take or hold any real estate, except what may be necessary and proper for its legitimate business.

Mr. CORBETT. That is private corporations.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Yes; and a railroad is a private corporation. In the ninth section we provide that "the Legislature shall have power to alter, revoke or annul any charter of incorporation now existing and revokable at the adoption of this Constitution or any hereafter to be conferred." So that by this Constitution we have taken into the hands of the State complete control over this entire subject, to prevent, first, improper legislation, and in the next place, to deprive them of its benefit, if it be corrupt, and lastly, to deprive a corporation of all its powers if it abuses its franchises.

But this section is faulty and inefficient in another sense. I took occasion, yesterday, to point out how hundreds of thousands of acres of lands, now lying undeveloped in this State, are waiting for the power which this section would take away to lead on to their development, and without which the land must lie continuously undeveloped and useless, for there is no local trade or local influence, apart from mining or manufacturing, that ever can or ever will develop those lands.

But, apart from this, it is complained that these corporations are gathering into their hands an undue amount of land and influence, and gentlemen have in their minds the Reading railroad, and yet I venture to say that the Reading railroad, as a corporation to-day, is not in its own name the owner of any considerable body of coal land in Schuylkill county. Whether they own, or however it may be in fact, the lands are in the ostensible ownership of other corporations. What have they done in this direction under their own name? Nothing. Other corporations have been created which doubtless they control, and whose means they furnish which have bought up these lands. But gentlemen will reply that the Reading railroad company is the real owner—so it may be. So they doubtless are to a considerable extent; but will this section prevent that kind of dealing? If it be necessary to create a corporation for such a purpose and the Legislature does create an incorporation for such purpose who can prevent it?

Then, again, we have provided in our article on corporations that "any two or more persons, citizens of this Commonwealth, associated for the prosecution of any lawful business, may, by subscribing to articles of association and complying with the requirements of law, form themselves into an incorporated company," &c. Now with such facility of corporate organization how futile this section will be! Under the powers which we have already granted it would force these corporations, if so be that they desire to exercise such powers or to hold lands or corporate franchises, simply into the creation of collateral companies, setting aside this constitutional provision by the most facile evasion. It puts a premium upon indirection, evasion and fraud. It leads to corruption in a thousand forms, and as far as the people are concerned is utterly useless and inefficient.

In view of consequences like these, so probable and so easy, I cannot bring my mind to approve a section which seems to me to be so full of needless restraints and which can accomplish so little good. It will trammel the development of the State to a degree which those of us who live in the country and know the necessities for corporate assistance in such developments would regret in the highest degree. Along the head-waters of the West Branch of the Susquehanna river there are thousands upon thousands of acres of land where mineral wealth never can be touched until by the great leading trunk lines of transportation assistance shall be given in development; and yet this section would largely prevent it. Examine this question with somewhat of the minuteness with which it will be investigated when it reaches the courts, if it should do so. It is provided that "no incorporated company doing the business of a common carrier shall directly or indirectly engage in mining"—that strikes at the coal interests—"or manufacturing"—that strikes at the iron interests; and I venture to say now to any gentleman who will look over the railroad interest of this State that he cannot put his hand on any railroad, unless it be the Pennsylvania railroad, in the entire State, which has not been built up with a view to the development of individual and particular interests, either at the terminus or along the line of the railway. The Pennsylvania railroad as a trunk line, connecting the seaboard with the far west, was built as a transporting road. The Reading railroad was built to reach the Schuylkill coal fields; so the Lehigh Valley; so the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western. So I might go over the railroads of the State, and with the map in my hand, I could point out not less than one hundred railroads in this State, large and small, that have been built for the exclusive purpose of developing the individual interests which lay along the line or at the terminus of the roads; some of them built with a view to reach a particular interest have been extended to reach other interests a little beyond until in time they have become trunk lines themselves of far greater extent than fifty miles, the limitation named in the proviso of the section. These roads thus extended and strengthened have branched out in a hundred directions, reaching the collateral private interests which lie along their line. Now, under this section, no man owning land would venture to take stock in such a company for the purpose of developing it, because the moment the road is built, if they open it to the reception and transportation of whatever promiscuous freight, great or small, may be offered for transportation, they become instantly ipso facto a common carrier. A common carrier is one who carries for the public, for all the public, and it does not depend upon whether the thing to be carried be much or little

—
The PRESIDENT pro tem. The gentleman's time has expired.

I will not encroach upon the rule, but I regret that time forbids to develop the argument. I regard the section as pernicious, and the proviso only mitigates its evils, without commending the section.

MR. J. S. BLACK. Mr. President: There can not be—I do not believe there is—any difference of opinion in this Convention about the main principle of the subject under consideration. Nobody here, nobody anywhere that I know of, is or has been for a quarter of a century past opposed to railroads. We might as well make opposition to agriculture or commerce, or some branch of the mechanic arts. If it be true that we desire to have such improvements in the country it follows that we are willing they shall be made on reasonable terms by corporations; for in that way alone can we get them. Corporations which are established for that purpose, and which execute the purpose fairly, should be encouraged. It is a great public service to the community for anybody to invest his capital in such business, and the man who does it should be encouraged and within proper limits rewarded for what he does.

But it is equally clear that a corporation entrusted with the performance of a public duty should be strictly confined by law to the one end and object of its creation. When its powers are perverted to the purposes of unlawful gain it becomes dangerous. In all the courts wherever the English language is spoken on this and on the other side of the Atlantic, it has always been regarded as one of the most important of judicial duties to hold corporations and hold them hard within the limits of the authority expressly bestowed on them by the Supreme Legislature.

Assuming (what I am afraid is not quite as true as I wish it to be) that the courts will perform this duty well and faithfully, the tendency to accumulate powers which are not necessary or proper in the hands of corporations can not be checked by judicial authority alone so long as there is no restriction on the Legislature in creating and extending them.

Knowing as I think I do the public sentiment on this subject, and feeling certain that it is well warranted by reason, I would be amazed beyond expression if this Convention would separate without making some provision forbidding the Legislature to make these unreasonable grants of power to railroad corporations in the future. Let the original charter of the Pennsylvania railroad company be the model for all future ones. It was cautiously and well drawn. It not only withheld all unnecessary powers, but it expressly forbade the exercise of those not granted. It is a great public misfortune that the act of incorporation was afterward so unreasonably expanded.

But you must couple your restrictions upon the Legislature with a prohibition upon the company to use such powers when they are granted. Charters may be given to one company or one body of adventurers and transferred afterward for a consideration to another. The traffic in that business will be stopped hereafter, but there is a large stock of charters on hand now ready for sale and delivery; like those medical diplomas which used to be made, signed, sealed and ready to insert the name of a learned doctor who would pay the money. These acts of incorporation can be got now in every variety, I am told. They come cheap, I think, but I don't know the market price.

But after all your prohibitions you cannot expect obedience to your laws, unless you affix some penalty to their violation.

You must make it the interest of the corporations to keep within the bound you set for them; otherwise they will overleap them without the slightest hesitation. I therefore propose an amendment to this section what I think will be effectual. I desire to add to the section:

"All property acquired by any company or held by another party for the use of any company contrary to this article shall be forfeited to the State, and the stockholders of the offending company shall be individually liable for its debts."

The PRESIDENT pro tem. That is an amendment to the section. There is already an amendment to the section pending.

Mr. J. S. BLACK. Well, I mean that as an amendment to come in anywhere; wherever you can find a place to put it. [Laughter.]

Mr. COCHRAN. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Somerset (Mr. Baer) in the shape in which it is presented as a substitute for this section, because I do not think it covers the ground of the section. I think that there is very valuable matter in the section which ought to be included and which would be excluded should his amendment be adopted. In addition to that, I think that the limitation of companies specially organized would be a very questionable limitation and would be liable to very great abuse; and if that amendment is to supercede the section, which I hope will not be the case, I do not wish it to do so without being amended. Therefore, I offer to amend the amendment by inserting at the end of the amendment the following words:

"Nor shall the Legislature at any time authorize the incorporation of any transportation company with other powers than such as are necessary and proper to the business of a common carrier."

I suppose that the meaning and the application of that amendment are apparent to every gentleman. It has been said that a section of the article on corporations covers this ground, but in point of fact it does not cover it. It does not exclude or prevent the creation of companies with as many heads as Cerberus and with as many powers as the Legislature choose to confer, and to do as many things as they can conceive of. But this amendment will confine the charter of every transportation company to the conferring of such powers as are necessary and proper for the transaction of the business of a common carrier; bringing it back to the true idea and restricting such companies to their proper functions and duties. While I am opposed to the amendment taking the place of the original section, I do not want it to prevail, at any rate without this amendment of mine being added to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is upon the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question recurs on the amendment as amended.

Mr. KANE. I move to further amend the amendment by striking out after the word "manufacturing," in the original amendment, these words:

"Articles for transportation over the works of said company."

Mr. KAINE. Now the section reads:

"No company organized to do the business of a common carrier shall, directly or indirectly, prosecute or engage in mining or manufacturing. Nor shall the Legislature at any time authorize the incorporation of any transportation company with other powers than such as are necessary and proper to the business of a common carrier."

I do not see the use of the last sentence. If it is the purpose to prevent railroad companies from engaging in manufacturing and mining, why not let it be in that way originally? If these words remain in this amendment they will be only limited to manufacturing so far as transporting over their own roads. They might engage in manufacturing and mining anything to send over the works of other companies. I do not think the clause is necessary at all; and it ought not to be in.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question recurs on the amendment as amended.

Mr. COCHRAN. I hope that the amendment as amended will not be adopted, and that we shall go back to the original section. In order to test that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SHARPE. I second the call.

Mr. CUYLER. Gentlemen will observe that the bearing of these words is quite sufficient to prevent any railroad company from having their own shops for repairs or construction. They cannot construct cars or locomotives or have any shops of repair. The words are quite broad enough for it.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Is the call for the yeas and nays seconded?

More than ten gentlemen rose.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The call for the yeas and nays is sustained, and the Clerk will proceed with the call.

Y E A S .

Messrs. Alricks, Baer, Black, J. S., Church, Edwards, Fell, Giffin, Guthrie, Kaine, Lilly, M'Murray, Mantor and White, J. W. F.—13.

N A Y S .

Messrs. Achenbach, Armstrong, Baily, (Perry,) Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Biddle, Black, Charles A., Boyd, Brodhead, Broomall, Brown, Buckalew, Bullitt, Calvin, Campbell, Carey, Carter, Cochran, Corbett, Corson, Cronmiller, Curry, Curtin, Cuyler, Dallas, Darlington, Davis, De France, Dunning, Elliott, Ellis, Ewing, Finney, Funck, Gibson, Hanna, Harvey, Hay, Horton, Howard, Knight, Lamber-ton, Landis, Lawrence, MacConnell, M'-Clean, M'Culloch, Mann, Metzger, Newlin, Niles, Palmer, G. W., Palmer, H. W., Parsons, Patterson, D. W., Patterson, T. H. B., Patton, Parman, Purviance, John N., Purviance, Samuel A., Read, John R., Reed, Andrew, Reynolds, Rooke, Ross, Sharpe, Simpson, Smith, H. G., Smith, Henry W., Smith, Wm. H., Stewart, Struthers, Temple, Turrell, Van Reed, Walker, Wetherill, J. M., Wetherill, Jno. Price, Wherry, White, David N., White, Harry, Worrell and Wright—83.

So the amendment was rejected.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Addicks, Ainey, Andrews, Baker, Bannan, Barclay, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Beebe, Bowman, Cassidy, Clark, Collins, Craig, Dodd, Fulton, Green, Hall, Hazzard, Hemphill, Heverin, Hunsicker, Lear, Littleton, Long, MacVeagh, M'Camant, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Porter, Pughe, Runk, Russell, Stanton, Woodward and Meredith, President—37.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question recurs on the section.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the section.

Mr. J. S. BLACK. Now I renew the offer of the amendment which I submitted before.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Where is it proposed to insert the amendment?

Mr. J. S. BLACK. At the end of the section.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The amendment will be read.

The CLERK read as follows:

"All property acquired by any company or held by another party for the use of any company contrary to this article shall be forfeited to the State; and the stockholders of the offending company shall be individually liable for its debts."

Mr. J. S. BLACK. Several gentleman, among others the chairman of the railroad committee, think that this would come in more appropriately at the end of the article, and I will for that reason withdraw it for the present, though I think it would apply as well here as any place else, with the understanding that the chairman of the committee himself will offer it at the close of the article.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The amendment is withdrawn. The question recurs on the section.

Mr. COCHRAN. I have nothing to say further with regard to this section, because it has been fully discussed, than simply this: That the section as it stands now, and as I think it ought to have stood, with the amendment of the gentleman from Somerset, does not prevent transportation companies from making their own machinery.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the section.

Mr. CAMPBELL and Mr. CUYLER called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. T. H. B. PATTERSON. I ask to have the section read before the yeas and nays are taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. It will be read.

The CLERK read as follows:

SECTION 6. No incorporated company doing the business of a common carrier shall, directly or indirectly, prosecute or engage in mining or manufacturing articles for other persons or corporations for transportation over the works of said company; nor shall such company directly or indirectly engage in any other business than that of common carriers, or hold or acquire lands, freehold or leasehold, directly or indirectly, except such as shall be necessary for carrying on its business; but any mining or manufacturing company may carry the products of its mines and manufactories on its railroad or canal not exceeding fifty miles in length.

The question was taken by yeas and nays with the following result:

Y E A S.

Messrs. Achenbach, Alney, Alricks, Baer, Baily, (Perry,) Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Biddle, Bigler, Black, Chas. A., Black, J. S., Brown, Calvin, Campbell, Carey, Carter, Church, Cochran, Corson, Curtin, Dallas, De Francoe, Ewing, Finney, Funck, Gibson, Gilpin, Guthrie, Harvey, Hay, Horton, Howard, Kaine, Landis, Lawrence, McLean, McCulloch, M'Murray, Mann, Mantor, Metzger, Newlin, Palmer, G. W., Patterson, D. W., Patterson, T. H. B., Purviance, John N., Reed, Andrew, Reynolds, Roeke, Ross, Sharpe, Smith, H. G., Stewart, Temple, Van Reed, White, David N., White, Harry, Worrell and Wright—53.

N A Y S.

Messrs. Armstrong, Barclay, Boyd, Brodhead, Broomall, Buckalew, Bullitt, Corbett, Cronmiller, Curry, Cuyler, Darlington, Davis, Dunning, Edwards, Elliott, Ellis, Fell, Hanna, Knight, Lambertson, Lilly, MacConnell, Niles, Palmer, H. W., Parsons, Patton, Purman, Purviance, Sam'l A., Simpson, Smith, Henry W., Smith, Wm. H., Turrell, Walker, Wetherill, J. M., Wetherill, J. Price, Wherry and White, J. W. F.—38.

So the section was agreed to.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Addicks, Andrews, Baker, Bannan, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Beebe, Bowman, Cassidy, Clark, Collins, Craig, Dodd, Fulton, Green, Hall, Hazard, Hemphill, Heverin, Hunsicker, Lear, Littleton, Long, MacVeagh, McCamant, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Porter, Pughe, Read, John R., Runk, Russell, Stanton, Struthers, Woodward and Meredith, President—37.

Mr. BULLITT. I now offer the proposition which I submitted before, to come in as a new section at this point:

SECTION —. Presidents, directors, officers, agents and other employees of railroad and canal companies shall not engage or be interested directly or indirectly, otherwise than as stockholders, in such railroad or canal companies, in the transportation of freight or passengers as common carriers over the works of any company of which they are presidents, directors, officers, agents or employees; and they shall not so engage or be interested in the transportation of freight or passengers over the works of any other such company, except as stockholders in such company, which may be leased, or the majority of the capital stock of which may be owned or controlled by the company of which they are presidents, directors, officers, agents, or employees.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President: I am entirely in sympathy with the object sought to be accomplished by the gentleman who has offered this new section. I, however, respectfully suggest to him that this is in effect a substitute for the eighth section of the report of the committee. If the report of the committee does not meet the approbation of the gentleman from Philadelphia, if he would withdraw this proposed section here and offer it as a substitute for the whole or part of the eighth section, it would reach the very proper place where the subject matter of the amendment would come under consideration. I merely suggest it to him. I have no objection to the section here, but I think it is directly a substitute for the eighth section, and probably better than the eighth section.

Mr. BULLITT. It occurred to me on reading the eighth section that the words which the gentleman from York supposes cover this provision do not cover it entirely. Again, the eighth section seems to me to cover some other matters than those provided for in this section which I now offer here as an amendment.

Mr. COCHRAN. I will merely state by way of explanation, if the gentleman from Philadelphia will permit me, that I suppose what he says is correct; that there are other things in the eighth section which are not probably covered by his amendment, especially in the latter part of the eighth section, and if it can be offered as an amendment to any part of the eighth section we could have the advantage of considering the two in connection. I think myself his provision is better than the general language of the eighth section.

Mr. BULLITT. I shall propose, when the eighth section is under consideration, to amend it, by striking out the words "except officers and partnerships or corporations composed in whole or in part of officers of each respective railroad or canal who are hereby prohibited from engaging in the business of forwarding or transporting on the lines thereof." Those are the only words which seem to me to be covered by the section I now propose.

Mr. BIGLER. I was about to suggest to the delegate from the city that if it is not the positive rule, it is the question to defer all new sections and until the original ones have been passed upon. This amendment comes in as a new section, requiring a change of all the subsequent sections, and I agree with the delegate from York that this proposition ought to be considered in connection with the eighth section, whether it be an entire substitute or not; but I make no question of order.

Mr. BULLITT. I think if you will look at it you will see that it comes in very properly just where I propose it, and that the words which I shall propose to strike out in the eighth section are probably not as well placed there as they should have been, and are better where I offer the amendment.

Mr. CUYLER. I should like to ask what practical good is proposed to be effected by this new section? As I understand it, it simply provides that presidents and managers and officers of corporations shall not be interested otherwise than as stockholders in these transporting companies, but as stockholders they may be interested.

Mr. BULLITT. Will the gentleman allow me to explain?

Mr. CUYLER. I should like to hear the explanation.

Mr. BULLITT. The gentleman entirely misapprehends the section. It provides that they shall not be interested except as stockholders of the company of which they are officers. Of course, no man can be president or director of a company unless he is a stockholder of that company, and the exception is simply intended to enable a man to hold stock in the company of which he is director or officer, but it prohibits him from being interested, either directly or indirectly, as stockholder or otherwise, in a company which is doing a transportation business over the works of the company of which he is an officer or director. In plain words, it is intended to strike at that which we all think, or which I believe is generally thought to be an evil, that the directors, president or officers of a railroad company should be interested in what are known as fast freight lines. I think the section covers that.

Mr. CUYLER. It would amount to nothing as a practical fact. A transfer of stock into another name will accomplish the result just as effectually as if they have it in their own name, and therefore it will cover nothing at all. It will be utterly powerless to achieve any good.

Mr. BIGLER. I offer an amendment to supercede the amendment proposed by the gentleman from the city, to strike out all after the word "section" and insert:

"Companies composed in part or in whole of officers and managers of a railroad corporation shall have no right to transport tonnage over the roads with which said officers and managers are connected, without the consent of the holders of a majority of the stock of such corporations; nor shall they be charged lower rates for transportation or be furnished greater facilities than other persons or companies engaged in the same business."

Mr. President, at the time this subject was discussed in committee of the whole the impression made upon my mind was that it was a question for the stockholders of these companies, and I think to the stockholders it might properly be confided. I know nothing about how these organizations are made, nor how they are conducted. It seems to me very clear that the managers and officers ought not to constitute separate organizations for the purpose of transacting business on the road without the knowledge and assent of the stockholders; and under those impressions I framed this amendment, intended to meet that case. It is simple, easily understood, and I think covers all the essential ground of the amendment proposed by my friend from the city.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question recurs on the amendment of the delegate from the city (Mr. Bullitt.)

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President: There is something in the amendment offered by the delegate from the city that I can support, but this question of permitting the officers of railroad companies to engage in fast lines, palace cars, and sleeping car companies, and have them on the track of the stockholders and make money at the expense of the stockholders was all fully considered in committee, and in order to meet that question section eight was prepared, which, in my judgment, covers all that is covered by this proposition, and more, and I consider that section a far better provision than this. It is no new question that is presented by this new section, but it was fully discussed, week after week, time after time, in the committee. I took the ground that it was all wrong for the officers of these corporations to be concerned in fast lines, palace cars and sleeping cars, and making money off of the stockholders' track. As a principle, I am willing to support the amendment, but I say the ground is covered and better covered in section eight, and more. The committee, after full consideration of the subject, having digested this matter fully, fairly and thoroughly, reported that section which covers the whole ground. It reads thus:

"All railroads and canals are declared public highways, and all individuals, partnerships and corporations shall have equal right to have persons and property transported thereon, except officers and partnerships or corporations composed in whole or in part of the officers of each respective railroad or canal, who are hereby prohibited from engaging in the business of forwarding or transporting on the lines thereof."

That is the whole of this proposed new section. It prohibits the officers of these companies from engaging in the business of transportation of passengers and freight on their roads. That is all there is in this amendment, and that is embraced in section eight of the report, and much more. The amendment brings the business down to the stockholders themselves; in other words, that the stockholders shall have all the carrying of freight and passengers; but this section eight means more; it drives out the officers from that business and it puts the public upon their track and gives the public the right to have cars upon it and to load those cars, and then compels the company to furnish the motive power and give the transportation. If this amendment is adopted it will be an excuse for striking down section eight, which is a far better provision for the great public who are interested in this question. If there was nothing but this proposition standing alone, I would vote for it unhesitatingly, because I have always advocated the principle. I believe that the public suffer and the stockholders suffer continually; aye, sir, they are robbed by this plan of piling corporation upon corporation on the stockholders' track; but, nevertheless, I am constrained to vote against the amendment here, because I believe it will only be used as an excuse for the purpose of defeating a much better provision which covers the whole ground, and was fully and thoroughly considered by the committee in all its bearings.

Mr. BULLITT. One word in reply to the gentleman who has just taken his seat. He entirely misapprehends the object and purpose of this section. So far from being in conflict with section eight, that portion of it which it is intended to supply meets with my approbation; but I supposed it was necessary to give it much more point than that provision in section eight does. Section eight certainly does not reach a point quite as important as any other; that is, to prevent the officers of railroad companies from being interested in the transportation of freight and passengers over roads which may be owned, controlled or leased by the companies of which they are presidents, directors or officers. That was what led to the drawing of this section. It seems to me that the provision in section eight does not go far enough. My purpose was to strike at that which I consider one of the greatest evils connected with our railroad system, and not with a view of crippling this article.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment of the delegate from the city (Mr. Bullitt.)

Mr. CUYLER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, ten delegates rising to second the call.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Before the yeas and nays are ordered I should like to say a word.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. They have been ordered.

Mr. BULLITT. I ask that the question be stated.

The CLERK read the amendment as follows:

SECTION —. Presidents, directors, officers, agents and other employees of railroad and canal companies shall not engage or be interested, directly or indirectly, otherwise than as stockholders, of such railroad or canal companies in the transportation of freight or passengers as common carriers over the works of any company of which they are presidents, directors, officers, agents or employees, and they shall not so engage or be interested in the transportation of freight or passengers over the works of any other such company, except as stockholders of such company, which may be leased, or the majority of the capital stock of which may be owned or controlled by the company of which they are presidents, directors, officers, agents or employees.

The CLERK proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COCHRAN (when his name was called.) As I prefer to consider this section in connection with the eighth section, I am compelled to vote "nay."

The roll call was then concluded, and resulted as follows:

YEAS.

Messrs. Achenbach, Ainey, Alricks, Baer, Baily, (Perry,) Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Biddle, Bigler, Black, J. S., Brodhead, Broomall, Brown, Buckalew, Bullitt, Calvin, Campbell, Carter, Church, Corson, Cronmiller, Dallas, De France, Ewing, Fell, Finney, Funck, Gilpin, Guthrie, Hanna, Hay, Horton, Kaine, Lamberton, Landis, Lilly, MacConnell, M'Clellan, M'Culloch, M'Murray, Mantor, Metzger, Newlin, Palmer, G. W., Palmer, H. W., Patterson, T. H. B., Purviance, John N., Purviance, Sam'l A., Ross, Sharpe, Smith, H. G., Smith, Wm. H., Stewart, Struthers, Turrell, Van Reed, Walker, Wetherill, J. M., Wherry, White, David N., White, Harry, White, J. W. F., Worrell and Wright—63.

NAYS.

Messrs. Armstrong, Black, Charles A., Boyd, Cochran, Curry, Curtin, Cuyler, Darlington, Edwards, Elliott, Howard, Lawrence, Mann, Parsons, Patterson, D. W., Patton, Reed, Andrew, Reynolds, Rooke, and Smith, Henry W.—20.

So the amendment was agreed to.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Addicks, Andrews, Baker, Bannan, Barclay, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Beebe, Bowman, Carey, Cassidy, Clark, Collins, Corbett, Craig, Davis, Dodd, Dunning, Ellis, Fulton, Gibson, Green, Hall, Harvey, Hazzard, Hemphill, Heverin, Hunsicker, Knight, Lear, Littleton, Long, MacVeagh, M'Camant, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Niles, Porter, Pughe, Purman, Read, John R., Runk, Russell, Simpson, Stanton, Temple, Wetherill, Jno. Price, Woodward and Meredith, President—50.

Mr. ALRICKS. I offer a new section that has been reported by the committee, to come in at this place in our proceedings:

"Any combination or agreement by and between railroad companies or by and between any railroad and coal companies unreasonably to increase their rates of transportation of freight, or to increase the price of coal or of manufactured products, shall work a forfeiture of the charters of such companies."

This section has been modified in some manner. It was reported by the committee, and the word "unreasonably" was not inserted in it.

There may no doubt be consultation between different transportation companies and different coal companies with regard to the price of the article that they may have for sale, or with regard to the freights that are carried on the railroad, but those companies have no right to enter into any agreement by which they would unreasonably increase the price of coal or raise the price of freight.

Now, I trust that this provision, as reported by the committee, will meet the approbation of the House, because I am told that such a combination exists at this time, and it is the duty of this Convention to protect the people against any attempt to make them pay an undue price for the coal that it is necessary for them to consume, not, I grant you, in this weather, but during the winter season. I have it from a gentleman in this Convention that he has direct knowledge of the fact that where a large coal operator was putting in the market a thousand tons of his coal at a reasonable price it was for the purpose of unjustly keeping up the price of coal that one of the railroad companies agreed to take his coal so that the price might not be reduced. Now, I feel that this is the proper time for this Convention to act in the premises. When I left this Convention last evening I confess that I was somewhat dispirited, because I had informed my constituents and others that I believed we would make a Constitution which would be entirely satisfactory to the people, because it would put proper restrictions upon corporations. Last evening it appeared as though "a change had come over the spirit of our dreams," and as though we were disposed to abandon the position we had taken, and I felt then some alarm that if our restrictions upon railroads were stricken down, every restriction that has been adopted by this Convention would piecemeal be struck down in the same way; but from the votes which have been taken this morning I feel encouraged, and I believe that this Convention is not disposed to back down but that they will do what is right in the premises.

I submit this section as it was reported by the committee, with as light modification, and trust it will be adopted.

Mr. BROOMALL. Mr. President: I desire to ask whether it would not be better to punish the individuals so unlawfully combining than to punish the innocent stockholders by forfeiting their chartered privileges.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the section proposed as an amendment by the delegate from Dauphin (Mr. Alricks.)

Mr. ALRICKS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. It requires ten delegates to second the call for the yeas and nays.

Ten gentlemen rose.

Mr. CUYLER. Before the yeas and nays are called I hope the House will pause a single moment—

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Over ten gentlemen rose, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. CUYLER. This question was thoroughly considered and debated in committee of the whole, and the proposition was voted down by a large majority.

Mr. LILLY. I desire to have the proposed section read.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. It will be read for information.

The CLERK read the amendment.

The yeas and nays were taken and resulted as follow:

YEAS.

Messrs. Alricks, Baer, Baily, (Perry,) Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Biddle, Black, J. S., Brown, Calvin, Campbell, Carter, Church, Cochran, Corson, De France, Finney, Funck, Gilpin, Guthrie, Horton, Howard, Landis, M'Clean, M'Culloch, M'Murray, Mantor, Metzger, Newlin, Patterson, D. W., Patterson, T. H. B., Reynolds, Rooke, Ross, Sharpe, Smith, H. G., Smith, Henry W., Smith, William H., Stewart, Turrell, Van Reed, White, Harry, and Worrell—41.

NAYS.

Messrs. Ainey, Armstrong, Bigler, Black, Charles A., Boyd, Brodhead, Broomall, Buckalew, Bullitt, Carey, Cronmiller, Curry, Curtin, Cuyler, Darlington, Edwards, Elliott, Ellis, Ewing, Fell, Fulton, Hall, Hanna, Hay, Kaine, Lamberton, Lilly, Littleton, MacConnell, Mann, Niles, Palmer, G. W., Palmer, H. W., Parsons, Patton, Pughe, Purviance, John N., Purviance, Samuel A., Reed, Andrew, Struthers, Walker, Wetherill, J. M., Wetherill, J. Price, Wherry, White, David N., and White, J. W. F.—46.

So the amendment was rejected.

ABSENT. — Messrs. Achenbach, Addicks, Andrews, Baker, Bannan, Barclay, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Beebe, Bowman, Cassidy, Clark, Collins, Corbett, Craig, Dallas, Davis, Dodd, Dunning, Gibson, Green, Harvey, Hazzard, Hemphill, Heverin, Hunsicker, Knight, Lawrence, Lear, Long, MacVeagh, M'Camant, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Porter, Purman, Read, John R., Runk, Russell, Simpson, Stanton, Temple, Woodward Wright and Meredith, President—46.

Mr. HOWARD. I offer the following amendment to come in as a new section:

"No railroad, canal or other corporation doing the business of a common carrier, shall, directly or indirectly, hold shares of the capital stock, or endorse or guarantee the bonds, notes or other indebtedness of any other corporation, partnership or individual engaged in the business of mining or manufacturing."

Mr. J. PRICE WETHERILL. I rise to a point of order. That does not materially differ from the section which was voted down yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Chair cannot decide the amendment out of order.

Mr. HOWARD. This is a piece of the wreck of section five. This simply prohibits common carrier corporations from taking the capital stock or endorsing the bonds or notes or other indebtedness of mining and manufacturing corporations and individuals. It was stated here when this question was very fully discussed, that certain corporations along the line of these railroads have been engaged in endorsing and in guaranteeing the paper of certain individuals, building up certain great establishments to the detriment and injury of others that cannot command the same kind of endorsement or guarantee; and that after these railroad companies have embarked in the business of endorsing and building up these manufacturing companies, they have given a preference to the companies to whom they have given their favor. I know when this question was before considered in committee of the whole that this was deemed a great and a growing evil. I remember very well a distinguished delegate from the city of Philadelphia, who no longer occupies a seat upon this floor, if I understood him correctly, stated that his railroad company had guaranteed or endorsed to the amount perhaps of millions. Well, as a matter of course, if the common carrier companies are permitted to endorse the paper or guarantee the bonds of mining and manufacturing companies along the line of their railroads, they will necessarily give the preference in the transaction of their business to those that enjoy these favors.

There is no doubt at all that they ought to be prohibited specifically from endorsing the paper of individuals. There ought to be some limit put by this Constitution upon their right to go in debt. We have certainly, by striking down the second section, said that they may go on so far as the Legislature will permit them to go, because the way it now stands they can go on and endorse and guarantee bonds for the building of other railroads and in fact guaranteeing for partnerships and individuals.

They are in fact without limit except so far as they may be hereafter limited by the Legislature, and I think we should have a constitutional prohibition against their endorsing the paper of manufacturing and mining companies and individuals.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. HOWARD. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. FUNCK. I second it.

Mr. DARLINGTON. It will require ten to second it.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Do ten gentlemen rise?

More than ten gentlemen rose.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The call is sustained and the Clerk will proceed with the call.

The yeas and nays were taken as follows, viz:

Y E A S .

Messrs. Ainey, Alricks, Bailly, (Perry,) Biddle, Black, J. S., Buckalew, Calvin, Campbell, Carter, Church, Cochran, Corson, De France, Ewing, Finney, Fulton, Funck, Guthrie, Hall, Horton, Howard, Landis, M'CLean, M'Murray, Mantor, Metzger, Newlin, Palmer, G. W., Palmer, H. W., Patterson, T. H. B., Purviance, Samuel A., Reynolds, Rooke, Ross, Sharpe, Smith, H. G., Stewart, Van Reed, White, David N. and White, Harry—40.

N A Y S .

Messrs. Achenbach, Armstrong, Baer, Bigler, Black, Charles A., Boyd, Brodhead, Broomall, Brown, Bullitt, Carey, Cronmiller, Curry, Curtin, Cuyler, Darlington, Edwards, Elliott, Ellis, Fell, Hanna, Kaine, Lamberton, Lawrence, Lilly, Littleton, MacConnell, Mann, Niles, Parsons, Patterson, D. W., Patton, Pughe, Purman, Purviance, John N., Read, John R., Reed, Andrew, Smith, Henry W., Smith, Wm. H., Struthers, Turrell, Walker, Wetherill, J. M., Wetherill, John Price, Wherry, White, J. W. F. and Worrell—47.

So the amendment was rejected.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Addicks, Andrews, Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Baker, Bannan, Barclay, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Beebe, Bowman, Cassidy, Clark, Collins, Corbett, Craig, Dallas, Davis, Dodd, Dunning, Gibson, Gilpin, Green, Harvey, Hay, Hazzard, Hemphill, Heverin, Hunsicker, Knight, Lear, Long, MacVeagh, M'Camant, M'Culloch, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Porter, Runk, Russell, Simpson, Stanton, Temple, Woodward, Wright and Meredith, President—46.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The next section of the article will be read.

The CLERK read as follows:

SECTION 7. No corporation engaged in the transportation of freight or passengers in or through this State shall make any discrimination in charges for the carriage of either freight or passengers against the people thereof, and such corporations shall carry the persons and goods of the people of this State on as favorable terms as those of other States brought into or through this State on the works owned or controlled by such corporation; and the charges for freight and fares for passengers shall for equal distances in the same direction be the same, and a higher charge shall never be made for a shorter distance than is made for a longer distance, and no special rates or drawbacks shall either directly or indirectly be allowed; but commutation tickets to passengers may be issued as heretofore, and reasonable extra rates within the limits of the charter may be made in charges for any distance not exceeding fifty miles.

Mr. J. PRICE WETHERILL. I wish to say a word before this section is acted upon by the Convention, and before doing so I move to amend by striking out all after the word "thereof," in the fourth line. I shall be very brief in what I have to say on the subject, and very practical, for it is a practical matter.

Whenever the subject of railroads comes before this Convention it is generally followed by very eloquent remarks from most of the gentlemen on this floor. I cannot for the life of me understand why in a matter of such a practical character as this those eloquent speeches about hydra-headed monopolies and other very wonderful and fanciful imaginations should be brought forth.

Now, under this section the charges for freight and fares for passengers shall be the same for a shorter as for a longer distance. How would that work? The freight from Philadelphia to Chicago, a distance of one thousand miles, is to-day forty cents per hundred pounds. Now, if this section prevails, the freight from Harrisburg to Philadelphia would be four cents per one hundred pounds; the freight from Philadelphia to Lancaster would be three cents per one hundred pounds; and if any gentleman knows anything about freights and transportation he must certainly know that these rates with such charges would be simply ruinous to the railroad company compelled to carry out any such regulations.

Again, extra charges may be allowed under this section for distances not exceeding fifty miles. How will that work? The rate from Philadelphia to Lancaster under this ruling would be three cents per one hundred pounds and the rate for freight ten miles this side of Lancaster would be twenty-five cents per one hundred pounds, or just what the railroad company would desire to charge. The rate named is nothing in the world but a fair and reasonable and liberal rate, and what would be the consequence? Not a commission merchant could do business on the line of the Pennsylvania railroad inside of fifty miles from Philadelphia, and they would all have to go to Lancaster where their freight would be so much cheaper.

There is unreasonableness in the whole thing, and when you come to work it out it will not accomplish, in my opinion, a good purpose. The same thing was tried in Illinois. They left this matter to the Legislature and the Legislature passed an act discriminating in the same way as indicated by this section, and the whole State is in arms to-day against it. Lines of railroad in the interior to-day on freight have been compelled to make charges of such rates locally as absolutely to drive the transportation from the State, to ruin the railroads which have been built in the State of Illinois, and to throw trade upon competing lines controlled by capital outside of the State. The freight to-day from the eastern line of the State of Illinois is forty cents per one hundred pounds, but when you go one hundred miles back into the State of Illinois, on account of these local rates which must be charged in order to make local freight pay and railroads live, sixty-five cents per one hundred pound, and as a consequence, the land on the eastern line of Illinois is enhanced in value thereby, and the land in the central part of Illinois is injured in value thereby. The farmers are beginning to see exactly how this thing works, and they are up in arms about it, and they are willing and anxious to repeal this act of Assembly.

Again, take the town of Quincy, Ill., which is on the western border of the State, and connected by two roads, one via St. Louis and the other via Chicago.

The town of Quincy is about two hundred miles, I am told, from the city of Chicago, and they, to secure the great through freight, carry that through freight at a low rate; but by this law they are compelled to charge the same freight for equal distances, and when they found that they must charge a fair local freight it so increased the through freight and brought it up to such a figure that the through freight to-day around Quincy, Ill., goes through the State of Missouri, via St. Louis, and over roads over which the State of Illinois has no control and into which the State of Illinois never put one dollar of capital, thus contributing to railroad improvements outside of the State of Illinois and injuring the city of Chicago to, I am told, the extent of a daily receipt of many car loads of freight per day.

Now, what will be the effect of this section? It will be simply this: That the through railroad companies must do one of two things; if they must charge the same rate for a lesser as for a greater distance, they must either put up the rates of freight upon the local charges to such a figure as will pay, and if they do that they thereby increase the through freight to such a rate that other roads competing will take the traffic and they will lose all their through freight. But, on the other hand, if they make their local freights the same as their through rates it will, as I have shown, result in putting the local freights at such a low figure that it will cripple and ruin the companies who will undertake to do that sort of business. That is the proposition fairly and clearly stated. The gentlemen of this Convention can take either horn of the dilemma. Either the one or the other will be the result in the State of Pennsylvania just exactly as it was the result in the State of Illinois, and our great railroad enterprise, in order to compete with the other trunk lines, will suffer an immense loss.

Now, I desire to call the attention of the gentleman to what the State of New York has done in this regard under her new Constitution. Every one must admit that the State of New York certainly has suffered under railroad mismanagement and under railroad monopoly and under railroad control long enough. I have not heard that we have Fisks or Goulds or men of that sort managing our railroad companies. Our railroad companies, through lines and local roads, are managed in the main by honest men, men having not only the interest of the stockholders but the interest of the State at heart; and the results show it. But New York perhaps has been in a different condition; and what does the New York Constitution do in regard to the railroad companies? So jealous were they of their own interests, so jealous were they of their manufacturing and their commercial interests, that they passed in their Constitution just two lines on the subject of railroads: "The Legislature shall not authorize the consolidation of railroad corporations owning parallel and competing lines of roads," no more, no less. Here we are loading down the organic law by harsh iron rules about the details of which very little is known by the members on this floor. The business men on this floor probably know as much as the lawyers do about it, and the business men confess themselves that in the working of all these harsh, inflexible sections, no man can tell the injury which they will inflict, and I do hope we shall be extremely careful not to cripple the great railroad interest of this State.

For these reasons, I do hope we shall either vote for the amendment I have proposed or vote down the section.

MR. J. R. READ. Mr. President: I agree with the delegate who has just spoken, but I think that his amendment could be improved by adding to the words of the section that are left the word "unreasonable" after the word "any" on the second line, and the words "or between" after the word "against" in the third line. The section would then read:

"No corporation engaged in the transportation of freight or passengers in or through the State shall make any unreasonable discrimination in charges for the carriage of freight or passengers against or between the people thereof."

Now, I desire to say a few words on that subject.

THE PRESIDENT pro tem. Does the gentleman offer that as an amendment to the amendment?

MR. J. R. READ. I do if it is in order.

Mr. President, I am in entire sympathy with what I believe to be the desire of the Railroad Committee of this Convention, and that is to prevent any unjust, unreasonable, or undue discrimination against the people of this State as compared with the people of other States, or between the people of this State as inhabitants thereof. But I do not believe that that object can be attained by the provisions of this section. If the gentlemen of this Convention will turn to this section, and examine it critically, they will find that it is impossible to carry it out, or impossible to attain by its provisions the object that they desire. It provides in the seventh and eighth lines that for freight carried on the works owned or controlled by such corporations, charges for freight for equal distances in the same direction shall be the same.

Now the effect of these lines is that you would be able to have transported equal distances, for the same price per ton per mile, a ton of feathers or a ton of pig-iron.

Mr. EWING. No.

Mr. J. R. READ. I beg your pardon. Those are the words of the section, and the construction I have placed upon them is fair and reasonable, and the only one they are properly susceptible of, although it may not be the intention of the committee that they should be so construed, and I hardly believe that it can be.

Mr. CORSON. There is no difference in weight.

Mr. J. R. READ. There is no difference in weight, but one takes up a good deal more room than the other. This illustration shows the false economy of the provisions I have referred to.

Now, the subject of legislation, in regard to the regulation of rates for the carriage of passengers and freights on railroads, has received considerable attention from the Legislatures of other States and the Parliament of Great Britain, and it has been found to be a fallacious doctrine that improper charges could be cured by legislation. No general law or special law has ever yet been framed to remedy the mischief that prevailed by reason of unfair or improper charges for transportation; and on that point I should like to turn the attention of the members of this Convention to the report of the Board of Railroad Commissioners of the State of Massachusetts. That board was organized under the provisions of an act of the Legislature of Massachusetts for the purpose only of protecting reforms and supervising railroad companies, in the year 1869. It is composed of some of the ablest and purest men of that State, namely, Mr. Charles Francis Adams, Mr. J. C. Converse and Mr. A. D. Briggs, all men of sound and discriminating judgment. They have given this subject a very great amount of careful investigation, and I should like to read to the Convention, if they will bear with me for a few moments, their opinions on this subject. I quote from their report:

"There are then two questions on which this board now feels called upon to express opinions: First, How can the existing corporations most effectually be brought into a close sympathy with the wants of the community and the popular expectations?—and, second, in case of the failure of all attempts to create this close sympathy, how can the community be most readily prepared to substitute a new and more satisfactory system of management for that now existing?

"These questions were somewhat considered during the session of the last Legislature. A law was passed declaratory of the general right of the Legislature to regulate at its direction all tariffs of fares and freights on the several railroads of the Commonwealth without regard to the amount of net earnings. The commissioners are unable to see how any satisfactory results can be arrived at through action under this law. The grounds on which they base this impression can be stated in very few words. All legislation in the direction indicated must be either general or special—general as applying to all the railroads of the Commonwealth, or special as applying to some individual one of them. No general law of this nature has yet been framed adequate to meet the wants of the case, though attempts at it have frequently been made; nor, indeed, do the commissioners now see how such a law could be framed. Not that it is here meant to imply that the regulation of railroads by law is impracticable, but the doubt is confined to their regulation in this particular way. Other methods have been, and hereafter will be suggested, and their practical merits can only be ascertained after trial; this method has, however, repeatedly been tried and with a uniform result. The cause of failure in this case is indeed most apparent. A general law regulating fares and freights, which would very slightly touch one road, would inevitably ruin another; a tariff which would apply to one class of articles would be simply ridiculous when applied to another. The law found generally on the statute books provides a minimum per mile for each passenger and for each ton of freight. A law on this principle, framed to meet the case of the Boston and Albany road by materially reducing its present rates, whatever result it might produce on that company, would speedily send the Housatonic road into insolvency; a law which allowed the Housatonic to earn a dividend would have no application to the Boston and Albany. So of descriptions of freight; a rate per ton per mile applicable to coal or pig iron, would produce results eminently unsatisfactory to the corporations if applied to feathers, wicker-work, wooden-ware, or household furniture. It is, however, useless to discuss this question; a general law which shall meet the circumstances of all the separate roads and provide for all classes of freights, degrees of speed and arrangements for comfort, is a practical impossibility."

And yet that is precisely what this article proposes to do. In other words, it is nothing but the child of its parent, the equal mileage system. That equal mileage system has been found by the experience of railroad men and by the experience of the communities that have tried it to be impracticable as a general system; and yet gentlemen seek to imprint it with inflexible rigidity, with hard and fast lines, into the fundamental law of this Commonwealth. I beg them not to attempt to incorporate into this Constitution what is deemed in this report, from which I propose further to read, a confessed failure.

Now, sir, the object of this section is in a general way which is all the more objectionable to regulate fares and freights on railroads by saying that for equal distances in the same direction the charge shall be the same; that is to say, for any fifty miles or one hundred miles on the Pennsylvania railroad, or any other railroad, the charge shall be the same. As the whole can be no greater than its aggregated parts, it is nothing more nor less than saying that the charge for transporting freight upon any fifty miles on any one railroad shall be the same as the rate for the transportation of freight upon any other fifty miles of the same railroad. This in effect is no more than the equal mileage rate, or a fixed rate per ton per mile—at least, that, in my opinion, is its logical sequence.

Now, sir, what do we find to have been the result of the careful investigation and searching inquiry made by this board of railroad commission from whose report I quote upon this subject? As they have expressed their views concisely and well, I shall use them as part of my argument. I am sure the Convention will not regret hearing them. In their report made in this year to the Legislature of Massachusetts, after four years of continuous service, they use the following language:

"By chapter fifty-eight of the Resolves of 1872, this board was directed to consider the subject of regulating railroad fares and freights by law, and report in the form of a bill or otherwise on the first week of the next Legislature.

"This question was discussed at some length in the last annual report of the board. (Third annual report, pp. 170-4.) Since that report was made, the whole subject has been most thoroughly investigated by a joint select committee of both Houses of the British Parliament, and the evidence and documents submitted to that committee, and its own conclusions thereon, have been published in a 'Blue Book' of more than one thousand folio pages. In various of the State Legislatures of this country, also, measures have been brought forward, of which copies have been transmitted to this board, all of which bore closely on the matter referred to in the foregoing Resolve. There is, indeed, no question connected with railroad legislation which has occasioned during the last forty years so much discussion or so many statute enactments as the attempt to regulate fares and freights by law. There are now in force on the statute books of various counties, laws of every conceivable description, from a simple act establishing charges at so much per mile for each traveller or ton of freight carried by rail, to enactments of the most elaborate nature, under which roads are classified, goods enumerated, periodical revisions provided for, and differential, special and through-rate tariffs, with distinctions of terminal charges, are all specified in detail. The efforts in this direction have, indeed, been systematically pursued both in this country and in Europe, from the first inception of the railroad system down to the present day.

"In the earlier days of the railroad system, and especially in America, the acts regulating fares and freights were very simple, and apparently there could be no difficulty in their enforcement. They limited charges to so much per mile for each passenger and for each ton of freight; adopting what is known as the equal-mileage rate. Economically there can be no doubt whatever that this legislation was founded on a wrong principle. If the amounts paid by the public are in any degree to correspond to the cost of the services rendered by the corporations, then the distance that a person or thing is carried has very little necessary connection with the cost of carriage.

"This principle is perfectly well established, and has been repeatedly dwelt upon in the reports of this Board. Its truth can be made very apparent by a simple illustration. Lynn is ten miles from Boston, and Chicago is a thousand. An article of merchandise going to the one place or the other has to be received, handled, stored, placed on a car and forwarded; on reaching its destination it must be unloaded, stored and delivered by the company, or received and unloaded by the consignee; in either case, the car is necessarily subject to delays, during which it earns no freight. Under these circumstances it is very apparent that the fixed cost incurred by the railroads in the work of transportation—that cost which is common for all articles or persons, no matter how long or how short a distance they are to be carried—must constitute a very considerable part of the whole cost. So obvious is this fact, that it is well known that the corporations earn large net profits on their long business at a third or quarter of that rate per mile, which is barely remunerative on short business. The simple and obvious fact that wheels earn money only while they are in motion, and that they earn it as long as they are in motion, has constantly been disregarded by those seeking to frame laws regulating fares and freights. If a car can be loaded with passengers or goods and started on a journey of two thousand miles, the wheels of that car are steadily earning money for days together, though moving, perhaps, at low rates; if, however, the cost of starting that car, including the fixed outlay of the corporation in officers, employees, station-buildings, real estate, rolling stock and road-bed—an outlay which is in large degree the same for long transportation or for short—if this cost has to be distributed over a few miles only in which the wheels are in motion, then it is evident that the cost of transportation per mile must largely increase. If it is limited by law, and not allowed to increase, then the long traffic must pay a loss on the short traffic.

"As regards merchandise, this is so apparent that it needs only to be stated to be understood. Of course this economical principle must not be confused with the abuses perpetrated by the railroad corporations in charging heavier rates to intermediate than to competing points, or with the extortions at times practiced on local business.

"As regards the carriage of passengers it is equally true. The longer the distance travelled the greater the profit on each passenger, and, numbers being equal, the cheaper he can be carried. In practice it is apparently otherwise, as it is notorious that the fares for short distances are the lowest; but this is apparent only, and it is due to the numbers transported. The accumulation of small profits, by dividing the cost of running the train among vast numbers of persons, operates in exactly the same way as if it were distributed over a great distance measured in miles.

"The equal-mileage laws were therefore founded on the erroneous principle that the fare or freight should be proportioned to the cost of carriage, and the cost of carriage was held to be uniform without regard to distance. An infinite number of acts based on this principle are to be found in the statute books of this country. Nowhere, however, has the system been more persistently followed out than in Ohio. In that State there are at least nine distinct rates for the transportation of passengers and freight authorized by law, and yet others are under discussion. The matter has been incessantly legislated upon, and yet the State railroad commissioner, in his report for the year 1870, asserts that these laws are the most fruitful source of complaint, and that, 'there is not a railroad in the State, whether operated under a special charter or the general law, upon which the laws regulating rates are not in some way violated nearly every time a regular passenger, a freight or mixed train passes over it.'

"On those roads where scrupulous effort is made to act within the limits of the law, it is violated in some instances by charging passengers who fail to purchase tickets an excess of regular ticket fare, and in others by charging an excess of the legal rate for short distances upon the purchase of tickets; and in almost every instance where light and bulky articles, such as furniture, willow-ware, feathers and the like are carried, a greater rate per ton per mile is charged than the law allows, and articles of a hazardous nature or of great value are charged in excess of their true weight. While this is done often without complaint, and the justice of the rule is conceded by many, it is nevertheless a violation of the law.' * *

"A strict enforcement of the provisions of the law would, however, compel some companies to ultimately suspend business, prohibit the transportation of certain articles by rail or compel their transportation below actual cost.

"In their report for 1872 the commissioners referred to the English system of Parliamentary trains as an exceptionally successful result of legislation on fares and freights. The law in this case was intended to compel the companies to provide certain slow and cheap trains at a low rate of fare for the vast population of the very poor class which is to found in Great Britain. This result, it was implied, the law had accomplished. The report of the Parliamentary committee which has just been referred to throws grave doubts on this conclusion. On the contrary, the committee says that 'the history of the traffic in third-class passengers affords a strong argument against attempting to foresee and provide for a want of this description by imposing general, compulsory and permanent obligations on railway companies. It has been shown that Parliament, anxious to protect the lower classes at any rate, from the apprehended monopoly of railway companies, imposed special obligations on the companies supposed to be in favor of these classes, and attached to these obligations a special exemption from railway taxation. It has also been shown that railway companies, in their own interest, are now doing for third-class passengers more than Parliament ever thought of requiring; that third-class traffic is one of the most growing sources of profit, and that the present operation of the special legislation on the subject is to give a very questionable exemption from general railway taxation, to create confusion and litigation, and to give the companies inducements for withholding from third-class passengers facilities which they would otherwise give. The ill-success of this attempt may well justify hesitation in entering upon further general legislation of the same kind.'

"The familiar law in force on the New York central road, and which is very frequently cited as an instance of the successful operation of simple laws regulating fares, is of a different character. Under it two cents per mile is the regular fare which the road is allowed to charge, and the rule applies to all trains, descriptions of travel or rates of speed. No package, commutation or season ticket is sold at any reduced rate, and consequently the man who travels every day, and by accommodation train, pays exactly the same rate (two cents) per mile, as he who travels once a year by express.

"When a similar law, applying to all roads in the Commonwealth paying more than eight per cent. dividends per annum, was proposed in the Legislature of 1871, the discussion upon it elicited such unexpected results from its operation that the measure was rejected. For instance, though the bill was limited to roads paying annual dividends of eight per cent. and upwards, the effect of competition made it apply to other roads which either paid less dividends, or, in some cases, had never paid any dividend at all; practically threatening such roads with bankruptcy.

"Again, there is not a considerable business centre in the Commonwealth which is not surrounded by towns in which people have settled, built houses and effected every arrangement for residence, relying upon a regular and very cheap access by rail to their places of daily business. A law which substituted a uniform rate of two cents a mile for the commutation rates at which such persons now travel, would necessitate an entire change in their modes of life. Such a system might work well where a community has grown up under it; if, however, suddenly by act of Legislature introduced into a community which has established itself under the discriminating tariffs always hitherto in use in Massachusetts, the commissioners do not see how it could fail to produce most disastrous results.

"How serious, as regards regular season ticket passengers, such a change would be, may be inferred from an examination of the tables at the close of this report (No. 127.) It will be seen that those who travel most on the roads of this State, instead of paying two cents per mile, now pay but from one fourth cent to one and a half cents per mile.

"The rule of uniform mileage rate is also wholly opposed to the fundamental principle of taxation, that the burden should in all cases be so imposed as to rest most heavily where it will be least felt. The man who travels every day over a given route has a right, on every principle of economy, to buy his passage at wholesale rates, and to him a concession is a matter of great moment, whereas it is of comparatively little consequence what he pays, within reasonable limits, to the man who travels very rarely. A law, therefore, which imposes an additional cent per mile on the daily traveler to give it to the occasional one does not seem to place the burden of taxation where it is least felt.

"The commissioners are inclined to believe that the system of discriminating rates now generally in use on the Massachusetts roads is not only more profitable to the corporations than the uniform price per mile system of the New York roads, but it at the same time is more advantageous to the traveling community through its practical adjustment of the burden.

"The equal mileage rate has not only been found to be wrong in principle, but its universal application is apparently out of the question. It might, indeed, be practicable if its expediency were admitted, if all the railroads in the State were consolidated into one corporation and operated by one responsible management. In such case it would be possible to strike an average, and, by making the profits on one portion of the system counterbalance the losses on another, arrive at the basis of a law. Such a policy of consolidation, however, has never been encouraged by the Legislature of Massachusetts. There are accordingly now in this State no less than fifty-five corporations owning on an average forty miles of road each, while some thirty-five distinct boards of managers control about sixty miles each, varying from two hundred and fifty miles in the case of the Boston and Albany to less than six in that of the Fall River, Warren and Providence. These corporations represent almost every conceivable form of railroad existence. Some are very wealthy, others are very poor, and yet others are bankrupt; some pay dividends, but many do not; some are through roads, others are local branches; some run between large cities and through a level and densely populated region, others are constructed through broken and sparsely settled districts; some find their profit in carrying passengers, others in carrying freight, and yet others in the two combined; some derive a large income from the suburban travel of those holding season tickets, others have scarcely any local travel at all. To take such a system as this and to apply to it one hard, unyielding law of charges, would be an experiment which the members of this board are not prepared to commend. In their opinion it would be not only wrong in principle but impossible of application.

"It remains to consider the expediency of special laws regulating in detail the charges of particular roads; and general laws classifying roads and regulating charges in accordance with such classifications, discriminating for all possible differences of condition or vicissitudes of traffic.

"The precedents for special laws regulating in detail the charges of certain roads to which alone they are applicable, are very numerous in European legislation. They have, however, by no means resulted advantageously. Of them the parliamentary committee of 1872 says: 'Legal maximum rates afford little real protection to the public, since they are always fixed so high that it is, or becomes sooner or later, the interest of the companies to carry at lower rates. The same thing is true of terminal charges. The circumstances are so various and so constantly changing that any legal maxima which might now be fixed would probably be above the charges now actually made, certainly far above those which will hereafter be made. Indeed, attempts made in 1861 and 1866 to fix a maximum for terminals broke down, because the only maximum that could be agreed upon was so much beyond the charge then actually made to coal-owners that the coal-owners feared it would lead to a rise in that charge.'

"And again: 'The attempt to limit rates and fares by the principle of fixing a maximum has almost always failed in practice, and is almost always likely to fail, for the simple reason that the Parliamentary committees and authorities, by whom such limits are decided, cannot do otherwise than allow some margin between the actual probable rate, as far as they can forecast it, and the maximum rate; and cannot foresee the contingencies of competition, of increase in quantities, of facilities or economy in working, or of alteration of commercial conditions, which may occur in the course of years after such limits have been arranged by them.'

"The result of thirty years of successive and wholly abortive effort in this direction in England has been that Parliament has at last settled down in the conviction that the development and necessities of trade in practice always have nullified, and inevitably must nullify the provisions of special acts, no matter how carefully and skilfully they may be prepared. This, too, has hitherto resulted from common consent, all parties recognizing the fact that these enactments did not possess the flexibility absolutely requisite to the movements of modern commerce.

"In the United States the difficulties in the way of this class of legislation would be infinitely greater than in England. There the several roads are at least throughout their entire lengths under the control of one central legislative power. In America this is not the case. Few roads of any importance lie wholly within the limits of any one State, and the process of consolidation is rapidly reducing the number. Practically, in every case, the laws of any one State apply only to the segments of an entire line. The real seat of an existing grievance is often therefore a thousand miles removed from the point where it makes itself felt and where the remedy is asked for. Were these difficulties all removed, the most serious difficulty of all would still remain. To be done successfully this work must be done very thoroughly and very intelligently; those having it in charge must be thoroughly informed on the whole theory and practice of transportation by rail, and fully alive to all its fluctuations and vicissitudes. The labor involved, if the laws were to remain anything more than dead letters on the statute book, would consequently be enormous, and any Legislature which undertook it must not only remain in continuous session but must contain within itself an unusual proportion of railroad experts. Under any other conditions the experience of Great Britain would but repeat itself.

"The only other method of dealing with the subject which suggests itself is through general laws classifying roads and regulating charges, in accordance with these classifications, in such a way as to allow for all probable differences of condition or vicissitudes of traffic. This is the plan now most in favor in this country, and a number of attempts have been made to devise a satisfactory form of law to meet the case. One of these has been placed upon the statute book in Illinois, and others have been prepared and submitted to the Legislatures of other States. It is impossible to speak certainly of such a system in advance; but the commissioners are unable to find in it anything which has not been repeatedly tried with unsatisfactory results elsewhere. It is the English measure of maximum special rates generalized so as to cover the case of several corporations instead of one. It would appear that the more such measures are extended in their operation the more complex they become, and the greater must be the difficulties in the way of their successful operation. Whatever weight attaches, therefore, to the experience which has been earned respecting the simpler and earlier experiments, attaches in a yet greater degree to the more general and complex. The Legislatures undertaking to deal with the subject have but a partial jurisdiction over it; under the effect of competition the laws intended to be applicable only to roads of one class become applicable to those of another; there is no discrimination as regards special requirements either of localities or of corporations, provided they fall within the lines of classification, and a passenger road may find itself put on the same footing as a mineral road; it is almost an impossibility that any measure could be framed at once sufficiently precise and sufficiently flexible to meet the requirements of so complex a system; and, even were it possible to frame it, it is extremely improbable that it could pass the ordeal of any legislative body.

"The final difficulty with all legislation of this class is its excessively dangerous and politically corrupting tendency. It forces the corporations, whether they wish to come there or not, into the lobby of the Legislature and the rooms of committees and commissions. They are forced there for the protection of their interests; for the essence of the system is, that certain persons, whether the Legislature itself or officials designated by the Legislature have devolved upon them the responsibility of establishing the revenue of property belonging to others. The commissioners have grave doubts as to the success of any effort at the regulation of the railroad system, which practically effects a separation between the ownership of a railroad and its management.

"Entertaining these views as the result of their investigations, the commissioners have not thought it expedient to report any bill or form of law in which it would be apparent that they themselves entertained little confidence. It is unnecessary to add, however, that should the Legislature or the Joint Committee on Railways arrive at a different conclusion as to the expediency or practicability of legislation of the nature of that under discussion, the members of this board will contribute every assistance in their power towards maturing an effective measure."

Now, Mr. President, will this Convention treat this subject lightly, and are they quite sure that the section under consideration has within its four corners the panacea for the ills with which we are afflicted. I fear it will be found to be sadly wanting, and for this reason I shall vote for the amendment of my colleague, (Mr. J. P. Wetherill,) and at the proper time, if his amendment should be adopted, move to insert the words, "unjust, undue or unreasonable," before the word "discrimination," where it occurs in the remainder of the section.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. President: This section, like most of the other sections of this report, is met at the outset with a savage attack upon it by the advocates of railroad corporations. All the heavy guns are brought to bear at once upon the whole report of the committee, with the hope, I suppose, that under the cover of a heavy fire the section immediately under consideration will be annihilated. But we must not be frightened at these desperate attacks. We must consider the section without regard to them. Now, sir, there is a great deal to be said in favor of this section, or at least in favor of the principles embodied in it. Above all, there is this to be said, that the people of the State—not the stockholders in railroads, not the railroad managers, not certain classes of business men engaged in manufacturing or mining, but the masses of the people of the State—desire some provision of this kind.

The gentleman from Philadelphia (Mr. J. Price Wetherill) stated a little while ago that the Legislature of Illinois had passed a law attempting to regulate the charges for freight and fares, as we propose to regulate it in this section, and that the people of Illinois were up in arms against it. He is laboring under a monstrous delusion. It is just the other way. The people of Illinois are up in arms in favor of the law and against the Supreme Court of the State, which decided that the law was unconstitutional. Less than a month ago, when the judge who rendered the decision was a candidate before the people for re-election, he was swept out of power by a popular hurricane, you may call it, and another man put in his place. That shows the feeling of the masses of the people of Illinois, and it is the same, though to a less extent, in this State.

In considering this section, we have to decide two questions. First, shall we sacrifice the interests of the people of this Commonwealth for the sake of enabling railroad corporations to build up an immense western trade and enrich their stockholders, managers and directors? Shall the interests of the people of this State be subordinated to the interests of the people of other States? Shall we for the sake of bringing into the State the stream of traffic from the West that is so much talked of, put up our local freights and make our people suffer in consequence of it. Would it not be better, if it be necessary for the protection of the people of this State, to partially cut down our western traffic—to have less of it—so that we can have the interests of our own people protected? Let our western traffic grow in proportion as the real well-being of our people requires it.

The second question that we have to decide is, shall we in order to enrich the people in large and populous cities, in order to accumulate wealth, in certain portions of the Commonwealth, make the agricultural population and the other people outside of the cities, suffer from the exactions of railroad corporations in regard to freight and passenger fares? Shall the agricultural population be compelled to pay out of their labor to enrich the people in the large cities? That is after all the real conflict. The capitalists who are engaged in manufacturing and mining enterprises, whose interest it is to aggregate population in cities, so as to provide ready markets for their products, are all opposed to this section; but the people in the agricultural districts, the large masses of the people of the State and of the country are in favor of some provision of this kind; and I say to gentlemen unless we provide some remedy for the evil that exists and that is so bitterly complained of, unless we adopt some provision like the one contained in this section, the people of the State of Pennsylvania will sooner or later do what the people of the State of Illinois have done.

Mr. LILLY. I should like to ask the gentleman a question, with his permission.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I prefer to go on, as my time is limited. We have almost reached the hour for a recess. The gentleman can speak when I am through.

The people of Pennsylvania, if they do not get something of this kind, will rise in their might, and will take the law into their own hands. If they cannot get such a law as they ask for, from the Legislature, (and it is confessed on all hands that they cannot,) if they cannot get it from this Constitutional Convention, which is their last legal resort, then they will rise and get what they want by sheer force.

Gentlemen, I do not wish to have mob law in this State; I do not wish the people to act outside of the law; but unless we give them what they demand, unless we insert some provision in the Constitution of the kind proposed in this section, I tell you, they will take the matter in their own hands, and get what they want, just as the people of Illinois will, in time, get what they want. I hope, therefore, this section, or the substance of it, (for if gentlemen wish to amend it so as to make its phraseology better they can do so,) will be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Is the Convention ready for a vote?

MR. CUYLER. I hope the vote will not be taken on this question in a hurry. It is now within two minutes of our time of adjournment, and I therefore move that we take a recess.

MR. CARTER. I second the motion.

The motion was agreed to, and (at twelve o'clock and fifty-eight minutes P. M.) the Convention took a recess until three o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention re-assembled at three o'clock P. M.

RAILROADS AND CANALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. When the Convention took its recess, the question pending was the amendment of the delegate from Philadelphia (Mr. J. Price Wetherill) to strike out all after the word "thereof," in the fourth line, to the end of the seventh section of the article on railroads and canals.

MR. AINEY. Mr. President: Before the vote is taken I desire to suggest one thought to the Convention. It seems to me that the amendment ought to be adopted and that portion of the section stricken out. Perhaps I can best illustrate why I object to that portion by instancing the experience we have had in my section of the State. On the Lehigh Valley railroad, Mauch Chunk is the distributing point. All trains are made up at that point. Through freight, through coal, or other articles that are shipped, are put in one train, and local freights in another train. Five or six local trains run down our valley daily and distribute coal and other articles to the different manufacturing establishments along the valley. Now, as I understand this section it would require all local freight along the valley to be carried at the same rate of freight or at least that a higher rate of freight should not in any case be charged than is charged on freight that runs through to the end of the Lehigh Valley road.

If members will but give the matter a moment's reflection they will see that trains made up at Mauch Chunk, to go directly through to Easton without stopping, will run over that distance in a much shorter time, with less wear and tear on the cars and locomotives, and with a less number of hands on the train, than local trains. The expense per ton or per car will be materially less in conveying the through train of coal or other freight to Easton than it will be to the town where I reside, Allentown. There is justice in charging a higher rate of freight on coal that is stopped at Allentown and taken out of the way train than there is on freight that goes through to Easton on a train making no stops. In the manufacturing enterprise with which I am connected we receive say twenty-five to thirty cars of coal per day. We have been paying more freight on that coal constantly than is paid through to Easton, and I maintain that it is right. The railroad company cannot afford to deliver that coal to us as cheaply in their way trains, stopping at the different points along the valley, as they can deliver freight that goes directly through to the end of their road without stopping.

MR. COCHRAN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

MR. AINEY. Certainly.

MR. COCHRAN. How far is it from Mauch Chunk to Allentown?

MR. AINEY. Twenty-eight miles.

MR. COCHRAN. What is the distance between Mauch Chunk and Easton?

MR. AINEY. Twenty miles further, forty eight miles.

MR. COCHRAN. The latter part of this section allows a discrimination within fifty miles.

Mr. ARNEY. The principle remains the same. It does not allow a higher charge for a shorter distance. I will take the Pennsylvania railroad company, which extends more than fifty miles. If the Pennsylvania railroad company makes up its trains at Pittsburgh for Philadelphia and has not to stop at any way station, it can carry that freight at a less rate per ton or per car than it can way freight that has to be distributed along its road at all its different stations.

Members, if they will direct their attention to it, must see that we cannot fix an absolute arbitrary rule which shall apply in all cases. I apprehend that the most that this Convention can properly do, in any case, is to limit the charges so that they shall be the same upon the same class under the same circumstances. Any attempt to go beyond that in my judgment will prove an utter failure and will produce a result directly opposite from that which we intend or desire. I hope, therefore, that this amendment will be adopted, and the portion proposed stricken out.

Mr. LILLY. Mr. President: I entirely agree with what the gentleman from Lehigh says, that we ought to continue further to carry the matter out. Now, take the coal at Mauch Chunk which is deposited along the line of the road, which is one thing, and the coal that goes beyond the road and comes in competition with the upper Luzerne coal and with the coal from the Schuylkill and from the other mining districts. If the Lehigh Valley railroad company, and the Lehigh and Susquehanna, and New Jersey Central railroad company, that carry the coal out of that valley, could not discriminate in our favor our article would be shut out entirely from the New York market. We should also be shut out entirely, as we are pretty nearly crowded out now, from the Philadelphia market for the same reason. When this section passed the committee of the whole, I thought it was so worded that it would allow that thing to be done, and that the only restriction, according to my understanding from the debate at that time and the manner in which the section was left, was that there was nothing in it that would prevent that sort of thing.

The only thing that was in it was that coal leaving Mauch Chunk, going down the valley, or any other freight on any road, might be charged as much to Allentown as it was charged to Easton, Easton being eighteen miles further, but no more of a charge could be made to Allentown; but, if I understand the discussion this morning by the gentleman from Philadelphia, (Mr. Wetherill,) in the way that he apprehends the section now, that is not so. If it is not, it should be made so, because that was really the understanding of the committee of the whole when it left the committee of the whole, that the railroad companies were to have full power to discriminate, so as to carry any competition with the great through roads north of us and the great through roads south of us. If you pass this section in any other way, you dwarf every one of our through roads and trunk lines into mere local roads, and leave them merely for the accommodation of local trade, and we should lose entirely the prestige that we have had, of having the great carrying trade to the west pass through Pennsylvania.

Now, if the chairman of the committee does not apprehend it in that way, and if the Convention does not understand that it allows that, if it is not written so that we can clearly understand it, I am certainly opposed to it. I am perfectly willing to give the railroad companies the right to discriminate in such a manner that they can compete with other roads. I do not want their discrimination, however, to go so far as to work an actual wrong to the people of the State or the people along the lines of the different roads.

Mr. BAER. I should like to vote for this section, but I opposed in committee of the whole the section as it stood then for the reason that it necessitated a charging at the same rate per ton per mile for a long distance as it did for a short. After a long discussion this section was hurriedly agreed to, but not fully considered, for I assert now that it does involve precisely the same thing that it did before, and that it compels the companies to charge the same rate per ton per mile as the old section did; and to do that now is, first, to cripple the great through lines of this State, and, next, to make the people pay an increased rate both for the carriage of passengers and freight, because you drive from this State entirely all the freight that seeks to go from the Atlantic seaboard to the far west and make it pass over the New York or Baltimore lines. No other alternative exists. No great company expecting to do a great trade, such as the Pennsylvania

Central is bound to do now, can possibly live if this section is incorporated in the fundamental law.

While there is much in the section that is good, indeed, while all that is in it is good if there are some additions made to it, I cannot vote for it as it stands. It reads :

"No corporation engaged in the transportation of freight or passengers in or through this State shall make any discrimination in charges for the carriage of either freight or passengers against the people thereof, and such corporations shall carry the persons and goods of the people of this State on as favorable terms as those of other States brought into or through this State on the works owned or controlled by such corporation."

Does not that compel them to carry them precisely at the same rate per ton per mile on the roads, for instance, from New York to Harrisburg, as they would from that point if they were going to Chicago or the far west? Unquestionably it does. Now, if you were to stop there and incorporate at that point what I think might be added, to my mind it would cure the trouble and not injure the roads and not injure the people; and that would be by inserting after the word "corporation" these words, "taking into consideration the distance of transportation and the character of the road transported over." That would permit railroads to discriminate, as they ought to have a right to discriminate, on account of the distance and the character and condition of the road. Unless that is permitted we may as well pass a provision here that henceforth railroads shall cease to exist in this State.

I appeal to the members of the Convention to consider this question before we pass upon it finally. Is it not as certain as that the sun shines that if you drive away a certain portion of the freight of this great line, in order to live it must increase its fares, it must increase its rates of freights, and they have the right to do so under existing laws now. There is a maximum established to which the road has not yet gone, and the moment you pass this section it will have to abandon this through freight and fall back on the Pennsylvania freight and charge fully up to the maximum allowed them by the statutes under which it was organized, and by that means we crush the interests of the State and thereby crush the interests of the people.

This is a move in the wrong direction. The tendency is to cripple the interests of the people instead of promoting them by merely undertaking to injure a great enterprise like the Pennsylvania or the Reading railroad. It was adopted before, not because it met the approval of the majority of the members of this Convention, but because the delegate from Philadelphia, not here now, combatted the section as long as he could, but finally yielded. I do not know whether it was for the reason that the Reading railroad was not a line carrying through freight to the far west, and therefore not interested; but whether that was the reason or not, whether that was right or wrong so far as that road is concerned, it is a monstrous iniquity as applied to the Pennsylvania railroad. The people of this State are not ready to crush that great enterprise, and, for one, I shall record my vote every time the question is raised here in favor of protecting the interests of that company when it is sought to be stricken down without at all benefiting the interests of the people. I am ready to stand up for the rights of the people, but not at the sacrifice of the great interests of the people in another direction, because they are as much interested in the success of that great railroad to-day as they are in the existence of the State. We would be a miserable, petty, six-penny State to-day if it were not for that great corporation. Men may hoot at corporations until doomsday; the truth is nevertheless apparent to all men and believed by all men that they are in their legitimate sphere a great blessing to all the people of the State, and I, for one, do not propose to shut my eyes to that blessing and run off because a hue and cry has been gotten up here against railroads. Let us do justice though the heavens fall.

MR. BIGLER. Would an amendment be now in order to strike out all after the word "section?"

The PRESIDENT pro tem. No, sir. There is an amendment now pending. An amendment to that amendment would be in order.

MR. BIGLER. That is an amendment to perfect the text.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. There is an amendment pending to strike out all after the word "thereof" to the end of the section. Another amendment was proposed in the forenoon, but the Chair deemed it his duty to rule it out because it was not properly an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BIGLER. The Chair was right upon that ruling; but this is a different proposition. It strikes out all after the word "section." Now, according to all the practice that I have seen, the vote would be taken on the pending question first, because that is a proposition to perfect the text, and then the amendment to supercede the section would be voted on afterwards. I am aware that the amendment offered now would not be voted on first.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. If the gentleman's amendment is to the pending amendment the Chair will be compelled to recognize it; but if it is an amendment to the prior part of the section not affected by the amendment, the Chair considers himself bound to rule it out.

Mr. BIGLER. It is a proposition to strike out all the preceding portion of the section. Does the Chair decline to entertain it?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. I do.

Mr. CUYLER. I hardly suppose that gentlemen mean to be satirical when they propose amendments to this section, and yet it might almost seem so because it is so incurably and atrociously bad that it is absolutely incapable of being amended. It is founded upon a false principle and therefore the seeds of destruction are planted within it, and it must inevitably perish. It is founded upon an ignoring of the plainest and simplest and most elementary laws of trade. Therefore we may write it in our Constitution as much as we will, we may pass as many acts of Assembly as can be passed to give it strength, but it never can survive because it is founded upon a false principle. It ignores the fact that competition regulates prices at all points where competition can possibly exist. We all practice that in the ordinary duties of life. Every merchant and manufacturer and man of business is accustomed to practice it. It is strange that when he comes to deal with corporate interests he should forget that the same great laws of trade and business apply to the corporations that apply to the individual.

The gentleman who closed the debate this morning before the recess, who is a member of the Committee on Railroads, the delegate at large, (Mr. Campbell,) frankly admitted the difficulty and frankly stated what the remedy was to be. In other words, he frankly said to the Convention, "we will abandon the trade that is outside of the State of Pennsylvania and confine our transporting corporations to the service of the citizens of the State; we will throw away the business of Chicago, of St. Louis, of all the points in the west, of every other point outside of the State of Pennsylvania." Thus did he frankly avow his sentiments, and I suppose them to be the sentiments of the committee of which he is a member. "We will throw all this away, will confine our transporting corporations by the operations of this section to the business of the citizens of Pennsylvania." Is this House ready for that proposition? In the case of the Pennsylvania railroad alone $75,000,000 of capital have been invested for the purpose of binding this city and this State to other cities and to other States of this Union, for the purpose of giving to the citizens of this State their fair chance in the competition with the citizens of other States in the great business of the country; and yet we sit here to-day deliberately and confessedly, according to the language of one of the members of this committee, for the purpose of abandoning it all and throwing it away, and going back again to the condition of affairs that existed before these roads established through connections that enabled them to reach other and distant points in other States. In other words, we are to dry up the business of the city of Philadelphia in its relations to the commerce of the country outside of the State of Pennsylvania; by a constitutional provision we are to say that that trade which we could carry through at reduced rates in competition with the cities of New York and Baltimore, we are to abandon and give up altogether. For what result? What is to be achieved? Lower rates to the citizens of Pennsylvania? Not at all, but precisely the reverse; for this invested capital will earn a competent dividend, and if you will not give it a chance to earn some portion of that dividend from that which it carries from beyond the line of the State, it will burden the trade of the State with an increased charge in order that it may earn its fair return for its stockholders. That is the inevitable law of trade and business.

Therefore, Mr. President, following out the thought of the member of the committee to whom I have alluded, we are to dry up the commerce of our own great cities, and in doing that we are to impose an added burden on the commerce of our own State; for, just in proportion as you are able to earn something from beyond the line of the State where you carry on a competition with other roads, you are doing that much toward a fair return for capital to the stockholders of these corporations and that much in relief of the pressure that otherwise would rest upon those within our State who require transportation.

These are common sense principles; there is no mystery about them; they are the principles upon which every merchant and manufacturer and man of business has been accustomed always to transact his own business; and why shall he ignore these great laws of trade when he comes to deal with this practical question which is before this Convention to-day?

The gentleman alluded to the State of Illinois. It was a most unhappy allusion. We have borrowed this crude and preposterous suggestion from the legislation of that State; but that State to-day suffers by reason of it under an ill by reason of which she cries out in positive agony. It is indeed true, as the gentleman said, that the people of Illinois have dragged the ermine from the shoulders of a judge who dared to decide honestly and justly and according to his conscience, and the gentleman alluded to that act as if it were an act that should be praised on the part of the people of that State, instead of being condemned. It is true they have done that; but what has followed? That decision of the court has been acquiesced in by the transportation companies of Illinois, and to-day the agricultural population of Illinois find themselves burdened with twice the cost of transportation that they paid before that decision was given. They have had the poisoned chalice commended to their own lips; they are reaping the very thorns that they themselves have planted, and they are finding that that very legislation which is copied into this article, is burdening the trade of the State with twice the charges that it bore before. Nay, more, they find that their own dear city of Chicago is now placed in that position where her trade is in danger of drying up as against the trade of other cities with which before she was able to compete. Take the case of the city of Quincy, a railroad centre within the State of Illinois. The Chicago and Burlington road carried a large freight from that point to the city of Chicago until the adoption of this provision.

Now, the Chicago and Burlington road cannot afford to carry that trade, and the city of Chicago is cut off from it as she is from trade from other points. It goes to and builds up the rival city of St. Louis. And so it is, I say, that it is God's own good providence that this Convention has not come to consider this article until it has before it the sad experience of the people of Illinois to demonstrate the unreason and folly and absurdity of these propositions. I hope, therefore, that not only will this particular amendment prevail, whereby the latter part of this section will be cut off, but I hope that the whole section will be voted down. This is a late day in the history of this country for us to begin to dwarf our railroads to mere State institutions. All our legislation, all our history, all our experience, demonstrates that the tendency of the American people is to disburden these roads from the charges they have been placed upon them and to enable them to grow and expand, to reach beyond State lines even to the remotest boundary of the country. And yet we are proposing to-day to enact a constitutional provision that will carry us back to the very beginning of railroad life and exclude and ignore all the experience of the last quarter of a century.

MR. W. H. SMITH. I would ask what is the question?

THE PRESIDENT pro tem. The amendment is to strike out all after the word "thereof."

MR. W. H. SMITH. Would it be in order to forward another amendment to that?

THE PRESIDENT pro tem. That would depend upon what the amendment is.

MR. W. H. SMITH. I desire to strike out some parts of the section, from the word "thereof" down to the word "distance" in the tenth line, leaving in the words: "And no special rates or drawbacks shall either directly or indirectly be allowed; but commutation tickets to passengers may be issued as heretofore and reasonable extra rates within the limits of the charter may be made."

I would strike out all after the word "made," which will retain what I have read, and then after the word "drawbacks" I would insert "on freights or passengers." Then the section will read in this wise:

"No corporation engaged in the transportation of freight or passengers shall make any discrimination in charges for the carriage of either freight or passengers against the people thereof, and no special rates or drawbacks on freights or passengers shall either directly or indirectly be allowed; but commutation tickets to passengers may be issued as heretofore, and reasonable extra rates within the limits of the charter may be made."

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Chair cannot entertain that amendment. It proposes to amend in part what the delegate from the city proposes to strike out, and it is hardly an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAM H. SMITH. If that is the case I shall say a few words. I shall vote for this section as it stands, but I would much rather it were so amended as I have proposed. I will also vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Philadelphia, and if the amendment does not carry I shall then vote for the section. I would vote for it more cheerfully if I could see or feel or believe that the framers of it knew exactly the effect of what this section will be on the railroad interest, and upon the interest of everybody outside of the railroad interest. I do not think that we can measure the effect of this section. Besides, I think that it is rather too complicated to be carried out under any circumstances. I am convinced and believe that something must be done in connection with this proposition, and as a general rule I will always go for the report of a committee which has been elaborated, no doubt industriously and honestly and faithfully, to remedy the ills we have been sent to cure; but I still think that to cut this section down as I have proposed would be better.

Now, in regard to these discriminations this section says that there shall not be "any discrimination in charges for the carriage of either freight or passengers," and that "the charges for freight and fares for passengers shall, for equal distances in the same direction, be the same, and a higher charge shall never be made for a shorter distance than is made for a longer distance." I do not know, but it seems to me it would be impossible to carry that principle out.

We hear, first, that the people in the interior of the State, whether the freights are carried to Pittsburg or Philadelphia, are complaining of the rates for short distances, and we have been told by the delegate at large from Philadelphia, (Mr.

Campbell,) that there is imminent danger that the people will rise in their might and fix the rates to suit themselves over all the railroads of the State if they do not get rates to suit them. And while we here in Pennsylvania are complaining about the rates for short distances, it appears that the people of Illinois have raised a sort of rebellion and have stripped the ermine from a judge because he did not decide as they wished, while they are contending against excessive rates for long distances.

Now, there is something difficult to reconcile in this. To me it is a perplexing question. I do not pretend to say that I have any view about it that is worth much, but I can see this great inconsistency and this great trouble, that while the people here are complaining, and justly complaining, no doubt, about the rates of freight for short distances, the people of Illinois are deeply agitated and making almost a revolution against the rates of freight for the longest distances possible. I only mention this to show how perplexing the question is, and the impossibility there is for us to treat it here to the extent and in the varied detail that is attempted in this article.

Now, in regard to the discriminations, this section says:

"And no special rates or drawbacks shall, either directly or indirectly, be allowed, but commutation tickets to passengers may be issued."

Commutation tickets are now issued at both ends of the Pennsylvania railroad's main line, from Pittsburg eastward and westward on the Fort Wayne road, and eastward from Philadelphia, sometimes at one cent a mile and sometimes at one and a half cents, within twenty miles, while passage from here to Pittsburg is three cents a mile. I do not know how that is to be arranged or whether it is intended to make the railroads charge three cents a mile everywhere. I do not think there is any complaint about the disparity on the part of the people who live in or near the cities, but they would surely complain if they had to pay three cents where they now pay one cent a mile. There may be some complaint about the prices charged for passage from here to Pittsburg, but three cents a mile would surely be thought too much when you have to travel from your home to your business, some twenty miles apart.

But this is going much further than I supposed I would. I do not know how this subject is to be disposed of. I do not believe it is to be settled by this article, as I have before stated; nor that it is the best that can be done. And yet because there has been an effort, and a just and proper effort, to relieve the State from the usurpations or attempted usurpations of railroad corporations, I shall go for this section.

Mr. M'MURRAY. Mr. President: I desire to say but a word on this section, and for this reason: I think a construction has been put upon it here by delegates that the section will not in any fair manner bear; first by the delegate from Philadelphia (Mr. J. Price Wetherill) and then by the delegate at large from Somerset (Mr. Baer.) They both insist that under this section railroad companies would be compelled to charge a certain rate per ton per mile for carrying freights. Now, it appears to me that the section cannot receive any such construction. The reading of it is plain, so plain that any man who can read and understand the English language can read and understand it:

"The charges for freight and fares for passengers shall, for equal distances in the same direction, be the same."

What does that mean? What would any common man understand by that? Simply this: That if I have a ton of freight to carry from Philadelphia to Harrisburg, one hundred and five miles, the railroad company shall not charge me a higher rate for carrying that freight in that direction west than it would charge another man for carrying a ton of freight one hundred and five miles on the west end of the road in the same direction. That is all it means, nothing more. They shall not charge me more for carrying that ton of freight that hundred and five miles on the east end of the road going west than another man for carrying a ton of freight on the same road any given hundred miles at any place on the road. There is nothing about rate per mile in the section. It simply means that if I am a passenger riding on that road from Altoona to Pittsburg, going west, they shall not charge me more for that distance than they would another man riding from Philadelphia an equal distance on the same road, going in the same direction, and so coming east. This is all that the section means; and this other construction has been put upon it here by those who are opposed to the section, in order to mislead delegates. It certainly does not bear the construction, and I venture to say there is not a lawyer in this Convention, if he were sitting on the bench as a judge, who would dare to put such a construction on this section as these gentlemen put upon it. Sir, I insist that this matter shall be treated fairly; let this question stand or fall on its merits, but do not let any delegates get up here and attempt by a false construction to mislead delegates and get them to vote otherwiser than they would on the real merits of the question.

Mr. HOWARD. The delegates in this Convention I have no doubt understand tolerably well by this time that there is a difference of opinion between the people of Illinois and the railroads in that State; and they understand perfectly well that that difference is a pretty lively one. We understand another thing: that since the people have taken the matter in hand, the railroads will embarrass them all they can. We know that they will badger them in every possible way. If they can get over the law, if they can evade the law, if they can possibly raise their rates, if they can do anything to embarrass those people and war upon them so as to get them back in the old channel, they will do it; and there is no question that here in Pennsylvania the same state of circumstances surrounds us and has been growing for years that brought the people of Illinois into their present position of antagonism to the railroads of that State.

I do not suppose that the intelligent delegates of this Convention are going to be frightened by the Roorbach stories that are retailed in this Convention, and by whom? It would be supposed that if this legislation on the part of the people had been so disastrous to the people, the friends of the people would have been concerned, they would have cried out against this great mistake made against their true interests; but, no, it all comes from gentlemen situated like my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Philadelphia, (Mr. Cuyler,) and it comes from other men whom we know by their votes and speeches to be identified with the railroad interest, and against any real reform in favor of the people of the Commonwealth. It is very strange that these gentlemen should have made the discovery that the people of Illinois, in trying to effect a reform, have only cut their own heads off. Now, I believe the people of Illinois are all perfectly square, their heads are level and they are turned in the right direction and this thunder that has been published through the newspapers about the trouble the people of that State have brought upon themselves, has been in the interest of the railroads and has all been paid for. It is part of the clap-trap and clamor got up to din into the ears of this Convention.

Why, Mr. President, what is there in this section? What is there that, fairly considered, fairly carried out by a railroad company, could possibly work injury to any one? Why, the very fact that it is fair, that it lays down a straightforward and just rule that compels them to do what is right to all men, is the reason why they raise such a clamor and howl against it. This is as fair and straight a proposition as it is possible for men to frame or present. This proposition was considered by the Railroad Committee faithfully and earnestly by sitting nearly every day during a period of over two months. It was considered in the light of all the intelligence and information that they could command; and what is it now? In the first place it provides that no corporation engaged in the transportation of freight or passengers in or through this State shall make any discrimination in charges for the carriage of either freight or passengers against the people thereof.

Now, what delegate on this floor will say that the principle is not right that they should not be permitted to make any discrimination against the people of this State? That is the rule. We say, "discriminate as much as you choose, but when you do that, you shall not discriminate against that Commonwealth that gave you life and vitality." No, Mr. President, it is not right that they should discriminate against the people of this Commonwealth. We do not say they shall not discriminate. Discriminate, gentlemen, in your judgment just as much as you please. Pile on your discriminations in favor of your outsiders, your men from Ohio, your passengers from Illinois, but when you come into Pennsylvania, treat Pennsylvanians just as fairly as you treat these men from Ohio and their goods. Why, Mr. President, the proposition is so straight and fair that I wonder that any man should question it, and no man would unless his mind was warped by that self interest that never can see anything in its right, proper and just light.

What next follows? "And such corporation shall carry the persons and goods of the people of this State on as favorable terms as those of other States." Who can object to that? What is there in that that is going to ruin railroads when you require that they carry the people and the goods of Pennsylvania on as favorable terms as they carry the people and the goods of Ohio, Illinois or New Jersey, who come into and pass through Pennsylvania? Is there anything wrong in that that should make delegates hesitate? I cannot see what it is. I can see how the railroad companies, themselves interested and looking at the question through their pockets—and of course they look at it in that light—may make opposition to this proposition which may cut down in some measure their profits; but to men disinterested, as this Convention should be, standing between these corporations and the people of this Commonwealth, there should not be, nay, there cannot be any fair or reasonable objection to this section, but every reason possible in favor of it.

Then what further? It only says that they shall not discriminate against our people, that they shall give us as favorable terms as they give the people of other States. Then what else? "Charges for freight and fares for passengers shall, for equal distances in the same direction, be the same." Why, that is just as fair and as true as in mathematics it is to say that twice one is two. It is just as plain a proposition that they shall charge no more for an equal distance in the same direction to one man than to another. What terrible outrage is that? How can a railroad be injured by such a proposition? It is utterly impossible, and it is only because fairness strikes at wrong and justice strikes at rascality that these railroad representatives whine and howl. A fair and honest proposition meets a storm of opposition. That is the straight truth in regard to it, expressed in plain English, and there is no mistake about it.

Then "that a higher charge shall not be made for a shorter distance than shall be made for a longer." What honest argument can ever be advanced for charging a man for fifty miles more than you charge him for one hundred miles? Yet railroads have been doing that very thing, charging a man actually more for going fifty miles than they do for going one hundred, and compelling men in Pennsylvania that I know to ship their goods away up into the State of Ohio in order to get Ohio rates in reaching the city of Philadelphia. A system like that is too abominable to be tolerated by any community; and yet such for years has been the case. Goods can be shipped from the city of Pittsburg to-day into the middle of Ohio, shipped to Cleveland and then returned back through the city of Pittsburg over the Pennsylvania railroad and brought to the seaboard for less money than they can be shipped from Pittsburg to Philadelphia, and men that were engaged in the manufacturing business in the city of Pittsburg, largely engaged in the manufacture of horse shoes and who had spent large sums of money to erect valuable machinery for that purpose, in order to supply horse shoes to the western market, were broken down and driven out of business by an establishment in Troy, in the State of New York, whose goods were carried directly through the city of Pittsburg at a rate less than was charged the Pittsburg men. Was that honest toward the business men of Pittsburg? No, sir. It was nothing but sheer rascality. I do not blame the stockholders. The stockholders knew nothing about it. It was the executive officers of that road that were interested in the other establishment that crushed out the Pittsburg people just as they crushed out parties in the west who were interested in the coal fields of Westmoreland county and who did not have connection with the officers' ring in the Pennsylvania railroad company.

MR. ROOKE. It is with reluctance that I rise to say anything to this Convention, but I suppose I feel as much interest on this subject as any member of the Convention. I was a member of the committee that reported this article on railroads, and while there are a great many sections that meet my approbation, and that I think will be an advantage to the State, there have been some very injurious sections reported, that will interfere with its interests, and among those sections, as I have said to that committee, and I say here now, the one which I believe, above all others, will do the greatest harm to the interests of the State is the very section now under consideration. This is a section that I think is calculated so do great harm, both to the railroad companies and to the business men of the State. It will do an injury to everybody who has to buy flour or grain, or depend upon the cheap products of the west, because if this section be adopted its immediate effect will be to prevent our railroad companies from competing for the western trade, a trade that is very necessary to the people of this Commonwealth.

It will go still further. It will prevent the railroad companies at home from competing against one another. If I were able to present my views upon this subject so as to be intelligently understood by this Convention, I have no doubt that this section would be voted down. I will give the reasons why I believe this is true. As I said before, it will destroy the competition between the railroads of this State, and I will illustrate it in this way: Suppose a railroad company carrying coal from Pottsville to the city of Philadelphia was to carry coal at one cent per ton per mile—which is about as low as it could be carried—the Lehigh Valley road carrying coal from Wilkesbarre, double the distance, would have to carry it for one-half cent per ton per mile, one-half what the other road would carry it for, and of course they could not afford to do that and pay a profit to their stockholders. The result of it would be that they could not deliver coal to the city of Philadelphia, as this section would compel them to deliver to all local points at the same rates, and that city would have to depend upon the short route. Therefore it must be very evident that this would destroy competition and that the short roads would do all the carrying between the different cities.

There has been great complaint in the State that the railroad companies have acted unfairly with our manufacturers by carrying freights for citizens of other States at less rates than they have carried for our own citizens. If they have carried freights at less rates then they can afford to be carried, I no not see that we have any right to complain. The question with us is not whether they have charged others too little, but whether they have charged us too much. I have been in business for twenty years, and my experience has been that instead of our railroad companies making unjust discriminations against us in rates, the railroads that have grown up around us have gradually been reducing the rates of freight. They used to charge us two and one-fourth and two and one-half cents per ton per mile for shipping iron, and they have reduced that until this year the average rate is one and three-tenths cents per ton per mile on the Pennsylvania railroad and one and four-tenths on the Philadelphia and Erie railroad. They carry on the Philadelphia and Erie railroad at this price because they have to compete with the New York and Erie railroad, and they really carry at less rates than they can afford if they mean to pay any dividend to the stockholders of the road. They would not do it if they were not compelled to do it, for there is not enough custom along the line of the railroad to keep it up, and consequently they have to carry for what they can get, in order to pay interest on their investment and to keep up the business of the road as nearly to a prosperous condition as possible.

This section would deprive such railroad companies of the chance of picking up outside freights, thereby making money and assisting to reduce the freights here. The consequence would be that they would increase the freights on us. They would have to do so because they only derive one fourth of their profits from outside freights, and if they could not get these outside freights in this way, and be thus benefited by these privileges, they would have to put the rates of freight up to three or three and a half cents per ton per mile, as their charter allows, whereas they now only charge one and three tenths, as I said before.

It would be just as reasonable for this Convention to put in a constitutional provision saying that a manufacturer shall not sell his surplus outside of the State for less than he sells to home consumers. This is a discrimination against the citizens of this State. It is notorious that manufacturers, when they produce more than the home trade can consume, ship the surplus to outside parties and sell it for what they can get. If we were to prevent that privilege and put a constitutional provision of that kind into this instrument, how many manufacturers in the State could subsist for any length of time? It would be as reasonable to put a constitutional provision of that kind here as to say that a grocer shall sell to a customer who buys by the ton for no less rate than to a customer who buys by the pound. No grocer could live and do a business of that kind very long; and railroad companies could not live if they are to be affected by provisions of this kind.

I am not supporting railroad companies, but I know what they have done for this State, and I know what provisions are necessary to allow them to attend to the proper management of their business, and I say that they must be allowed to make these discriminations. I feel reluctant to speak of that, because I am interested. The railroad companies that carry coal from our anthracite coal fields to western Pennsylvania, to Erie and the northern part of New York, have cars returning without any freight, and they say to the manufacturers, and have said to the iron manufacturers in our country, "if you will take the iron ore that is being developed in New York, we will carry that back to you at three-fourths of a cent per ton per mile." And very many of our manufacturers allow them to do it. Is not that a discrimination? They carry their freights outward from our country for one and one-half cents per ton per mile, and carry freights inward at three-fourths of a cent per ton per mile—less than they can afford—less than it has been shown by the gentleman from Philadelphia that they can afford to do it at, but they accept this freight at this low rate because otherwise they could get none and would be compelled to bring their cars home empty. This is a discrimination, but not against the people of Pennsylvania, for the people of Pennsylvania are benefited by it, and we must allow such discriminations as these. We must allow the railroad companies to charge a higher rate of freight for shorter distances than for longer distances, and I will tell you why.

They at times do not have on a line of road near me sufficient to keep their cars constantly occupied. They then will hold out inducements to iron men: "If you will ship iron to Elmira we will carry it for you for a cent and a quarter a ton a mile." We know they cannot realize great profit from it because the New York roads in carrying iron from the Lehigh district take it at very low prices, and we say, "If you will do it at a certain price, we will send it, and they deliver our iron in the Elmira market for a little over a dollar and a half a ton, one hundred and forty miles, whereas they charge us from our place to Lockhaven, which is only about seventy miles, two dollars a ton. I do not think that unreasonable; but that is more for a shorter distance than a longer distance; and the manufacturers of Pennsylvania are benefited by just such a course as that. If this Convention put in the Constitution a provision of that kind, they not only injure but destroy them. I should not like this Convention, in its blind zeal to restrain railroad companies, destroy the interests of this State.

I know that a great many people in looking at this proposition think it so infinitely fair that they are inclined to vote for it. They do not study the effects it is likely to have on the business interests of the State. The gentleman from Allegheny (Mr. Howard) says it is evidently fair that all should be charged alike, and I know he is inclined to vote for it; but I think I have shown, practically, how improper and unjust it is.

It was with great hesitancy that I got up to make this imperfect statement; but you will excuse me, gentlemen, because it is the first time I ever attempted to say anything in public.

In the latter part of the section it says there shall not be any drawbacks made. I have never seen any injury done to the interests of this State by drawbacks. I have been interested in drawbacks. I have never been profited by them, but the only drawbacks I ever knew to happen were in this way: The company would say to a miner, when I was in that business, "you mine fifty thousand tons of coal this year; if you increase the product from your mine to one hundred thousand tons, we will give you drawbacks." It is an inducement to encourage men to do more business; and the people of the State are benefited by that encouragement. They have given a drawback of ten cents for doing this. Is anybody injured by such drawback?

Mr. BROOMALL. Mr. President: I desire to add a word or two to what has been so well said by the gentleman from Union, and that is this: It seems to me there are so many cases in which it is right and proper for railroads to make discriminations in freights, that we had better leave this whole matter to the laws of trade under what legislation may be seen necessary.

I will mention one instance. Some of the railroads in the vicinity of Philadelphia, and probably all of them, offer inducements to persons to locate themselves and their business along the line of those roads, somewhat in this way: They will propose to carry the building materials and all freights for the business for a given length of time at half or quarter rates, if the individual will locate along their line. Now, I want to know whether there is any harm in that. I want to know whether that is not perfectly legitimate and proper, and I want to know whether we ought to put a provision in the Constitution that shall prevent that.

I know that there may be discriminations made that are evil; but I take it that the most of the discriminations are of the character that I mentioned, those that are to the advantage of the stockholders and to the advantage of the community in which the railroad is, where the discriminations are made in favor of a business that is to be built up, and with a view to the building up of business. And shall the West Chester railroad, for example, be told a year hence, when it desires to locate some Philadelphia gentleman at Media, that it would take his building materials at half rates only that it is no longer constitutional? What a spectacle we shall present to forbid a railroad company from fostering the business along its line by discriminations that are innocent and to the advantage of the party in whose favor the discrimination is made.

I say we cannot prohibit railroads from making discrimination without doing more damage in a dozen directions than we do good in some one or two in which evils exist, and I trust the whole section will be voted down.

Mr. J. M. BAILEY. Mr. President: It seems to me quite strange that there should be so much opposition to this section. The first part of it only prohibits carrying corporations from making discriminations in their rates of transportation of freight and passengers in favor of people of other States and against our own. This is certainly reasonable, and why any delegate in this Convention should find fault with it I cannot comprehend. The necessity which requires the incorporation into the organic law of such a just proposition is, I admit, to be regretted; but no business man in the Commonwealth can shut his eyes to the fact that such a necessity does exist. Day after day the great powers and franchises granted by this State to the railroads are used to the injury of her manufacturing and producing interests. Why should this be so? It is said that "corporations have no souls" and of course cannot be grateful, but they should at least be just; and if it requires the restraining power of a constitutional provision to make them deal justly with our people, let us have it. Why, the unjust and unfair discrimination against the people of the Commonwealth that breathed life into these corporations; that parted with some of their own rights that these railroads might live; that nursed them by liberal legislation, granting to them great powers when they were young and weak, is, I confess, sir, beyond comprehension, and contrary even to the laws of common gratitude. Mr. President, the principal argument urged here against this section is that railroads cannot charge as much for shipping the freights of foreign States as our own, because there is competition for that business, and if they charged higher rates than they now do, this business would be diverted to other lines. This may all be true, sir, but it proves nothing and should weigh nothing in the consideration of this section, for it is not alleged that at the rates they ship this foreign freight, they do not make large profits. The contrary, sir, is true. The annual reports of the Pennsylvania railroad company show that on these through freights they make a very large profit. Now, sir, will any gentleman of this Convention give me any good reason why the railroad corporations should not be obliged to ship the products and manufactures of Pennsylvania at the same rate at least as they do those of Ohio and Illinois, showing that they make large profits on them. But if it should be alleged that they make nothing on the shipment of these foreign freights, then why carry them at such rates? Why should they be permitted to oblige the people of Pennsylvania who ship the local freights to pay such rates that the freight of the other States can be carried for nothing?

The other part of this section is intended to prevent carrying companies from charging more for shipping the same class of freight a shorter distance than a longer one. I would like any gentleman of this Convention to inform me why there should be any objection to a proposition so manifestly fair as this? I cannot imagine, sir, what course of reasoning can possibly lead any man to the conclusion that it is right for a railroad company to charge more for shipping the same class of freight one hundred miles than for three hundred miles. Strange to say, sir, we have gentlemen in this Convention who contend that such discrimination is all right and proper.

It is seriously contended here, sir—for the effect of the argument is such—that a manufacturer or producer within one hundred miles of the market should pay larger freight for the transportation of his goods to market than he who lives three hundred miles away. And such a system of charging we are very nicely told by the gentleman from Union (Mr. Rooke) is to the great advantage of our manufacturers. Good business men usually make it an object in the selection of property for manufacturing purposes, to get near the market, but such a system as is contended for reverses this well settled rule, and I suppose in the future we may expect to find business men trying to get as far from the market as possible. Some gentlemen who have been opposing this section have talked to us very fluently about the “natural laws of trade,” but it strikes me, sir, that the system of charging freight on our railroads which it is contended the laws of trade demand, is not very “natural.”

This section is very liberal to the corporations, and I am greatly surprised that they oppose it so vigorously. For my part I should be willing to go further even than the section, and prohibit carrying companies from charging as much for a longer distance as for a shorter one, excepting, however, from that rule freights carried for a shorter distance than say fifty miles. I admit that they ought to be allowed to charge a greater rate per mile for a quite short distance than a longer one. The reasons are quite obvious. A mention of a few of the instances of oppression which the people of my district have suffered from unfair discrimination by railroad corporations in this matter would, perhaps, be interesting to the Convention.

In the town of Bellefonte, the home of my distinguished friend, Governor Curtin, who is now a delegate upon this floor, an establishment was erected a few years ago for the manufacture of glass; the competition was principally in the city of Pittsburg; now mark it, the railroad company charged more per hundred for shipping the soda-ash, which is largely used in the manufacture of glass, from Philadelphia to Bellefonte than to Pittsburg, which is nearly one hundred miles further. I have been told by a responsible gentleman, resident in Bellefonte, that the railroad corporations actually charged them thirty cents per hundred for shipping soda-ash to Bellefonte, while at the same time they were shipping the same article to their competitors at Pittsburg for sixteen cents per hundred. We are told by the gentleman from Union (Mr. Rooke) that such a system of charging is greatly to the interests of our manufacturers. Perhaps it may have been to those in Pittsburg, but I am unable to see how it was of very great advantage to those in Bellefonte. It is indeed a strange reasoning that leads to the conclusion at which my friend has arrived.

Again, Mr. President, on account of the scarcity of wheat last season it became necessary for some of our manufacturers of flour at Huntingdon to buy wheat in the State of Illinois and have it shipped east. Would you believe it, sir, that the railroad company refused these manufacturers the privilege of paying the same amount of freight on a car of that wheat to Huntingdon that they were charging to Philadelphia—more than two hundred miles further—and have the cars dropped out of the train at Huntingdon—for they had to pass through Huntingdon to reach this city. They did refuse this privilege and actually charged from forty to fifty dollars a car more for shipping the wheat to Huntingdon than they were charging at the same time to ship it to Philadelphia. And still we are seriously asked to believe that such discriminations hurt nobody and are of great advantage to everybody.

I have another instance, Mr. President. The bituminous coal mined in the county of Huntingdon and adjoining counties has its chief competitor in the coal mined at Cumberland, Maryland. Since the construction of the Bedford and Bridgeport railroad, a great amount of the Cumberland coal is transported to market right through the Broad Top coal field in Huntingdon county, and is about eighty miles further from market than our coal, and yet the carrying corporations actually charged eight cents per ton less for shipping the Cumberland coal than they shipped the Huntingdon coal for, although they had to carry it eighty miles further and close by the mouths of the Huntingdon mines.

Delegates may talk about the "natural laws of trade," but it is hard to make the people of Pennsylvania believe that such a system of charging freights is to their advantage.

Mr. President, is it any wonder that the people who have sent me here have an abiding interest in this subject? The district which I in part immediately represent here is traversed many miles by the Pennsylvania railroad and its branches, and I can say for my people that they are proud of the greatness and magnificence of the great corporation that controls them. As Pennsylvanians they have a State pride in their great Pennsylvania railroad. Its achievement in developing our Commonwealth's internal power and in bringing to light her immense resources have created in their minds a grateful respect.

It may be said, as it has been said, that this matter is peculiarly appropriate to the functions of the Legislature. I admit the force of this, but the people have year after year asked their legislators at Harrisburg for some relief in this matter and have received none; judging from the motives that usually influence most of our law-givers, it is not hard to guess the reason that no relief has come. What astringents have from time to time been applied to the Legislature that has prevented the flowing out to the people of this simple act of justice is, of course, to us a mere matter of speculation, but rumor upon this point is not uncertain. The people have often asked the Legislature for relief and been so often refused that they will consent to nothing from this Convention that does not bring them substantial relief. It cannot longer be doubted, sir, that there is evil existing in the present system of freight charges, and it must be remedied speedily and effectually. The people look to this Convention with great hope and confidence. Shall they be disappointed? We shall see.

Mr. President, I think the railroads will make a great mistake if they do not cheerfully accord to the spirit of this section, or they might "go further and fare worse." It is not possible for them much longer to outrage public sentiment and public rights with impunity. Great and powerful as the corporations of this State have become, they could not for a single day brave public indignation when aroused to such a degree that it will feel obliged to assert by force the rights that it should have had by peaceful means. Will our railroad corporations not heed the lesson taught to those of Illinois? Will they not take the hint that there is a point beyond which the forbearance of the people even of Pennsylvania, with their steady and conservative habits, cannot go? Will they refuse this small measure of relief until an outraged people shall rise in their terrible might and power and, with their hands at the throats of these gigantic and soulless corporations, force from them the rights they know to be theirs. And that will be a sad day for the Commonwealth as well as the railroads.

MR. CURTIN. I desire to say a few words on this subject. I occupied the same position when in the committee as the gentleman from Union, (Mr. Rooke,) and since am fully in accord with what he said. While I agree that there is very much in the report of the committee that is good and will prove beneficent in the future of the State, there is much of it that I do not approve, and especially this section.

MR. President, we have more railroads than any country in the world; in fact, we have nearly as many miles of railroad in the United States as all the rest of the world. I believe we have fifty-seven thousand miles of railroad, and we are building at the rate of about eight thousand miles a year. We have large amounts of capital invested in those roads. Then it is a fact that we carry passengers and tonnage cheaper than any country in the world. Our maximum rate is three cents per mile per ton, and there is no country in Europe that carries for less than four cents per mile. With all their advantage of full population and age, and cheap labor and abundant capital, we have the most perfect system of railroads in the world.

But, says my intelligent colleague who has just taken his seat. (Mr. J. M. Bailey,) the railroads must be restrained; that is, one railroad; for it is not unjust to say that the usual amenities of this Convention and the pleasant parliamentary proprieties with which all our debates have been conducted heretofore, seem to have been forgotten, and instead of the courtesies which usually prevail, we have asperities and language in this discussion heretofore unknown to this Convention. "Scoundrel" and "thief" and "robber" are common terms. That is polite language now. "Rascality" has grown into a classic term in this Convention; and God knows what kind of language we will come to next. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. President, as I was about to say, my intelligent colleague says there must be some restraint on the charges of railroads, or there will be commotions, violent physical commotions; that is, that the railroads shall be compelled to carry a barrel of flour or a car load of freight of any kind from the town of Huntingdon to Hollidaysburg at the same rate per mile that they carry a barrel of flour or a car load of tonnage from Chicago to Philadelphia, or from the town of Huntingdon to Philadelphia, as from Chicago to Philadelphia.

MR. J. M. BAILEY. I did not say so. said the railroad companies should not be permitted to charge more from Huntingdon to Hollidaysburg than they charge from Huntingdon to Chicago.

MR. CURTIN. I understand that perfectly. The gentleman and myself will not call any of those hard names; we will not fall into that indiscretion in this Convention.

MR. J. M. BAILEY. I do not think I used any hard names.

MR. CURTIN. That is true. Now, sir, my colleague and many gentlemen of this Convention strike at one railroad, and they say that railroad shall carry freight at the same rate per mile from Pittsburg, which has suffered dreadfully, or from Huntingdon, which has suffered a little, as they carry it from Chicago. The Pennsylvania railroad company have what the lawyers call vested right. They made their bargain with the State when they obtained their franchises. Their bargain was that they should take part of the property of the people of the State under the right of eminent domain for which they should pay, that they should carry passengers and tonnage at given rates, and it was fixed in the bargain that they should carry tonnage at the rate of three and a-half cents per mile. When the tonnage tax was commuted in 1861, that half-cent was taken off, and the agreement remained, the covenant between the railroad and the people of the State that they should carry at three cents per ton per mile. That is the maximum rate. It is not pretended that the Pennsylvania railroad company charges up to the maximum. On the contrary, they charge only about one and a-half or one and three-fourth cents per mile. Now, suppose they do choose to charge the farmer or the merchant of Illinois less than three cents per ton per mile for long distances, or less than one and three-fourths cents per mile; I do not know that we can interfere with that arrangement. At all events they are under the maximum, and so long as they keep their bargain we cannot interfere. But if you declare that they shall not carry the tonnage of the West at a less rate than they carry Pennsylvania freight, and you could enforce such a declaration, you would exclude the tonnage coming from the West and force it into the competing lines north and south of us, and the Pennsylvania company would be compelled to put up their rates to the maximum. Then who suffers? You have aimed a heavy blow at the Pennsylvania railroad, but you missed the breast of the railroad, and 'it falls on the people who produce and travel on the works of that company. That is an illustration made by my friend, Dr. Rooke, who was on the committee.

My colleague from Huntingdon will understand that you cannot change the bargain; they can charge three cents per ton per mile, and if they choose to carry for less than three cents per ton per mile in grappling with competing lines of other States for the trade of the west, and in drawing it to this city, where the money was furnished to build this great artery of trade, the product of the field and the mine of the west for less than that, rather than it should go to New York or Baltimore, and carry it at a less rate than they made a bargain with the State they should have from our people, who has a right to complain? If it enriches our State and affords to our people facilities in trade and travel, if scarcity of breadstuffs requires us as our manufacturing interests multiply to go to the west to get them, who will complain that in getting our bread and our beef from the great valley of the Mississippi we pay low freights to get it here, while the railroad that carries it is entirely within the terms of the covenant made with the State at the time of its creation?

Without speaking of the tyranny of railroads, or, in the language of the enlightened and eloquent gentleman from Franklin, (Mr. Sharpe,) of the majestic and imperious tread of the Pennsylvania railroad company, without any affinities or connection with it, I do think that when we attempt to cripple that company and bind it hand and foot we give them an opportunity of increasing their rates, and the manacles with which we expect to bind this corporation fall upon the arms and the ankles of the people, and of the State, and instead of being beneficent in our action we are passing entirely outside of the domain and limits prescribed for a Constitutional Convention and legislating for the public. We should be careful that we do not so legislate as to cripple trade and commerce and destroy the interests we should foster and protect in attempting to cripple the interests with which we seem to be at war, that we do not fail, and fail signally in all such vain efforts that are controlled by the laws of trade and commerce as certainly as the rain which falls upon the mountain will find its way to the sea by the course of the rivers.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President: There is no question which has been brought before this body in which from the means of information that I possess—

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Will the gentleman state that he has not spoken on this question?

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes, sir; I shall state that because I have not done it.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Chair cannot always keep the run of those who have spoken, and did not know how the fact was. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. COCHRAN. I say, Mr. President, that there is no question which has been brought before this body in which there is so deep an interest entertained by the people of this Commonwealth as that which is included within the four corners of this section. There is more popular interest involved in it, and the people of this State believe that there is more of their substantial welfare and their rights involved in it, than there is in any other subject which has been presented to our consideration. I have heard nothing with regard to our proceedings which in any degree approaches that which I have heard on this question. This subject cannot be safely glossed over, nor can this section, in my apprehension, be wisely and judiciously either negated or made of no effect by striking out its substantial and efficient provisions. I have heard no gentleman rise here, from the practical gentleman from Philadelphia who was not afraid of hydras, through all the others who have discussed this question, who have denied the apparent equity and justice of the contents of this section. It is impossible to deny that the equality which is intended to be brought about by the enforcement of this section is the equity which is the highest duty which we owe to the people whom we represent.

But it is said that this section must be negated, it must be stricken out of this article because it was against the everlasting laws of trade, and matters of that sort. Mr. President, if there is any law on the face of the earth that works such injustice as has been portrayed here and as we know has been wrought in this Commonwealth through this unjust discrimination against the people of our State, then that law of trade ought no longer to exist and we ought to pay no regard to it.

The gentleman from Centre who has just taken his seat (Mr. Curtin) has undertaken to tell us about the great rights of the Pennsylvania railroad company which they have derived from the State, that they have the right to charge three cents per ton per mile, and that they do not charge their maximum rate and therefore do us no wrong. Sir, I submit that within the limits of the maximum you can do as much gross injustice to the people by discriminating against them as you can do by raising your prices up to the maximum and putting them on an equality. If you place your charge for one man at two cents a ton per mile and for another man at one cent per ton per mile, you do him as gross injustice as it is possible for you to do; by charging up to your maximum, you do him as great a wrong, you prostrate and destroy his business, and you interfere with his rights and his prosperity.

Sir, it is said that if we dare to pass this section, then the Pennsylvania railroad company will undertake to raise its freights up to its maximum of three cents a mile, and in that way it will take its revenge, I suppose, upon the people of this Commonwealth for inserting a section of this kind into their fundamental law. Why, sir, we have (and it has already been referred to) some experience of that kind, I admit, in the State of Illinois. Because the people of that State chose to adopt a certain policy which they believed was essential to their rights and their welfare, then it was that the railroad companies chose by arranging new toll-sheets and raising the price of transportation on their roads, to inflict upon them a penalty and a punishment for their audacity in interfering with their assumptions. Sir, if that is the issue, it is to become a question of endurance and of power between the people and the creatures whom they have made; it is a question in whose hands shall be the mastery. Sir, I deprecate such an issue, and I do not believe for one moment the passage of a section of this kind is going to be attended with any such consequences or fraught with any such evils as the gentleman from Centre predicted in his speech.

Mr. President, this section, in the first place, claims that the people of Pennsylvania should receive at least equal favors from their incorporated bodies as the people of other States. But, it is said that this destroys the law of trade, that you must, in order to get trade from other States, make a discrimination in their favor and against the people of this Commonwealth. Why, sir, how is it? Do the railroad companies of this State carry through this State at a profit? Have they a profit from bringing goods through this Commonwealth? Then if they make a profit why can they not carry for the people of this State and be content with the same profit that they derive from the people of other States? Do they carry at a loss merely for the sake of carrying the property? Then shall the people of this State be required to come forward and make up that loss out of their pockets which they sustain in consequence of this disastrous policy which they have adopted?

I apprehend that the first clauses of this section are entirely right, entirely proper, and entirely just. But, sir, this matter has been argued as if we were fixing an iron, inflexible law of a rate per ton per mile. When this section was reported from the Committee on Railroads there was, I admit, a provision of that kind in it; but that section was stricken out on my motion in the committee of the whole. I do not believe in applying any such law as that. But this section relates to aggregates and not to details. It does not go into the rate per ton per mile; it goes into the aggregate charge made for transportation. What is the principle of it? Why, sir, if men who ride the same distance on a railroad or have their goods transported the same distance in the same direction on a railroad, will you say it is right to charge one man double and the other man half? Is that equity? Is that the kind of discrimination which you wish to allow to be practiced? That is the whole of it, that where men travel equal distances in the same direction or goods are transported equal distances in the same direction, there shall be equal charges.

Then, further, that there shall not be more charged for transporting a shorter than a longer distance. Why, sir, what is more liberal than that? You shall not charge a man more for transporting his property from here to Lancaster than you shall for transporting it from here to Pittsburg. That is a very poor boon to the man who lives in Lancaster; and yet that is the only restriction that is contained in that part of the section! You can actually, under this section, charge a man in that way as much for going to Lancaster as to Pittsburg, as the section is drawn; that is, you shall not charge him more for transporting him the shorter than the longer distance. Unfortunately the fact is that charges for shorter distances are often larger under the present policy of this State than they are for the longer distances, and it is to correct that evil merely, to put that moderate restraint upon this policy, that this section was drawn and was presented and is now advocated before this body.

I think that the section is not liable to the objections which have been made against it. I think that in sound policy and in justice this very small boon at least is due to the people of this State. Sir, I do believe that if this be refused by this Convention, or if this is not the exact measure, if some measure of protection is not afforded to the people, the result of it will be eminently disastrous in many respects both upon our work and in the social and business condition of the community.

MR. DUNNING. I do not propose to take up much time, nor shall I attempt to discuss this question at length. I confess my inability to attempt the discussion of it; but I have not failed to listen very attentively for the last two days to the arguments, because I have been anxious to be enlightened upon this very troublesome and vexed question, and I am compelled to say, after having listened to the very able arguments, I find myself involved in just about as much doubt and difficulty as before I heard a word on the subject.

I did feel at the commencement of our labors that this was one of the questions that would trouble this Convention. I felt that it was one that would affect this Commonwealth to a greater extent perhaps than any other question that could possibly be considered. It brings to us the question that of all others most directly affects the development of the resources of this Commonwealth, and of the companies who have been instrumental in the development of those resources. When gentlemen say upon this floor that privileges of a most extraordinary character have been granted to corporations, no man doubts it. But while these privileges have been granted, and companies are operating under them, the question also comes to us, can we disturb vested rights under these privileges? In listening to the discussion here, it would seem that this Convention, or a portion of it, is making, not an effort to see how they shall best regulate commerce, how they shall best regulate transportation on the railroads of this Commonwealth, but to see how they shall best create an interference with, or if you please a fight upon the corporations that now exist in the State. At the risk of coming under the censure of the gentleman from Allegheny (Mr. Howard) who this morning said that pretty nearly every man who spoke upon this subject had undertaken to give his own record in advance as to what his position had been in reference to railroads, I want to say that I am not here as the representative specially of any railroad or other corporation. I own no stock in any railroad. I live in a county that is interested in railroads, in a county that has been benefited by railroads, and I believe in the doctrine that has been here enunciated, that the State of Pennsylvania has been more benefited by railroad companies in the development of her resources than by any other interest; but I am not willing to stand here and say that this interest, because it has done this, shall have rights that are paramount to all other interests. They should be protected in their rights. These enterprises were projected in an hour when their success was questionable. The gentleman from Franklin (Mr. Sharpe) this morning well stated the question when he said that in 1837-38 the railroad question was new and the experiment untried. When that Convention met it did not know the interests of this Commonwealth as we now see them. It did not know what were the necessities in relation to railroads, or in relation to the laws that should govern them. From a small beginning the railroad interest has grown into the possession of powerful franchises and has invested hundreds of millions of money. If, then, we have fostered these institutions, if we have given them the power to develop the resources of the State, if we have allowed them to construct their roads and to extend and multiply their enterprises and interests, let us now protect them in their legitimate rights; but at the same time do not let us put into the fundamental law anything that will prohibit other individuals from assuming similar positions. If, sir, the railroad corporations that exist to-day are gigantic and are endangering the interests of citizens or of individual enterprises, and if you now place in this Constitution such restrictions as will prevent other parties from coming into competition with them, if gigantic now they will soon become colossal.

I believe it is utterly impossible for us to make a fixed rate of tolls upon a road that reaches from the city of Philadelphia to the city of Chicago. I believe that the tolls should be placed as nearly on an equality as can be; but if you load a train of cars in Philadelphia to be sent through to Chicago, that train can be carried for a lower rate of freight than a train which will be compelled to stop at ten or twelve different points and unload its cars. There is no doubt about this question at all. Transportation within the State may be proportionally regulated, but through transportation from Commonwealth to Commonwealth cannot be controlled by constitutional provision or by legislative enactment. So far as transportation in the State is concerned make it equal, if you please. You can put it on an equality, but you cannot do it upon longer distances. That is impossible. Will you restrain an individual from charging any price for his labor? A man may labor for any price he chooses if he can get it, but if he chooses to labor for half a dollar less per day than another individual may charge, or the law may contemplate he should receive, you cannot restrain him from doing so, neither can you restrain corporations from charging less if they please to do so. Put them in a position in which they shall not charge more and I will agree with you, but you cannot say that they shall not charge less. They may carry their freights for nothing if they choose from any one point to another on their line, and it would be perfectly legitimate to do so.

As I said at the outset of my remarks, I have been looking for light upon this question and I confess that I have not received a great deal of it. I have listened to a great many arguments, some of them most ingenious, but I have not found anything yet that has convinced me of the propriety of the doctrine found in this section, or that a man, because he holds a position in a railroad company, has not a right to be an independent man in any other respect.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. ANDREW REED. I do not desire to make a speech upon this question, but I do desire to say a few words to explain my position. There are some wrongs with reference to these discriminations in the carriage of freights that should be corrected. I do not, however, think that they can be remedied by the adoption of this section in its present shape. It will inflict greater wrongs, or at least as great, as it is intended to remedy.

My colleague, the gentleman from Huntingdon, (Mr. J. M. Bailey,) has given instances of what I consider are wrongs that should be remedied, and I do not think the answer that was made by the distinguished gentleman from Centre (Governor Curtin) was exactly in point. It is true that railroads cannot carry freight for a short distance at as low a rate as they can for a longer distance, but they should not charge more for a shorter distance than they do for a longer. That is what was meant by my colleague. For instance, to bring a car-load of wheat from the city of Chicago to the town of Huntingdon should not cost more than a car-load of wheat taken upon the same train on the same road to Philadelphia, one hundred and eighty miles further. There is no justice in that.

Part of that section to which I am opposed is this: "And the charges for freight and the fares for passengers shall for equal distances in the same direction be the same." Now, the advocates of this section say that this means that a railroad company shall charge for fifty miles on the same road, going the same way, just what they will charge on another part of the road for another fifty miles. That would not be just. Take the case of a railroad in the county in which I live, for example. It is a railroad of some fifty miles in length, and on one end of that road there is a railroad bridge crossing the Susquehanna river that cost from three hundred thousand to four hundred thousand dollars to construct, more than it cost to build twenty miles, perhaps, of the balance of the road. Persons living on the banks of that river, if they are to have their goods transported simply over that bridge upon the same rate per ton per mile that is charged to others at the other end of the line, would have an unfair discrimination made in their favor. That would be certainly unfair and unjust, and for that reason I cannot support that part of this section.

Further, the section says: "And a higher charge shall never be made for a shorter distance than is made for a longer distance." The same objection would apply to that which applies to the other, though not to so great a degree. When I have the opportunity I shall move to amend the section by striking out the words "and the charges for freight and fares for passengers shall, for equal distances in the same direction, be the same," and insert, after the word "charge," the words "for freight, or higher fare for passengers." Then also after the word "distance," in the tenth line, to insert the words "including such shorter distance," which will make the section read that a railroad company shall not charge more for a longer distance, going over the same road, "including such shorter distance," than they do for such shorter distance. This will cure the evil to which my colleague refers. That is, they cannot charge more for bringing a car load of wheat from Chicago to the town of Huntingdon than they would for bringing the same to the city of Philadelphia, one hundred and eighty miles further upon the same road. That, I think, is just. I think there are cases where I can see that a railroad might perhaps bring freight further at a less expense to them than for a shorter distance. Still I think that so far railroads might be willing to go. But anything further than that I would not be willing to consent to.

Mr. GILPIN. I did not intend to make any remarks on this question; but I wish simply to correct what seems to be a misapprehension in the arguments that have so far been made upon this subject. Those who have preceded me upon both sides of the pending question seem to have assumed as true two points, namely: First, that the Pennsylvania railroad company has been the only offender in regard to the discriminations complained of; and, second, that it is only the country or communities between the termini of the road that is affected or that alone are injured. So far as my observation extends, there are other parts of the State than those lying along the line of the Pennsylvania Central railroad that have been injured by these discriminations against Pennsylvanians; and other railroad companies that have there made the discriminations we, by the section proposed, strive in future to prevent.

Situated on the line of the Allegheny Valley railroad, and about eighty miles from the city of Pittsburg, there is a large and productive oil field known as Parker's Landing, and from that point to Pittsburg by the railroad the freight charged is much greater than to the city of Cleveland, in the State of Ohio, although the distance to the latter is three times as great. For one-half of the money that the railroad charges for taking a barrel of oil from Parker's Landing to Pittsburg, it will take the like quantity from Parker's Landing to Cleveland. The result of this discrimination has been that the oil refineries in and about Pittsburg, and in the erection of which millions of dollars have been expended, are abandoned and the money invested in them lost, and the oil produced in our own State now goes to Ohio to be refined, and the profits of refining—which are very great—accrue to the people of Cleveland instead of to the citizens of Pennsylvania. Pittsburg is one of the termini of the Allegheny Valley railroad and her people are those that are particularly discriminated against and injured for the profit and benefit of citizens of Ohio. Talk about this railroad benefiting people of this State. Why, this very railroad was built by the bonds of Allegheny county and of the city of Pittsburg, and yet aside from the money and bonds so given and advanced that county and city would be better off to-day (so far as the oil trade is concerned) if that railroad had never been built. If to-day oil had to be transported from Parker's Landing in road wagons or by river, it would all go to Pittsburg to be refined, for it could not by these means be so rapidly, easily or cheaply carried to any place outside of the State, and Pittsburg would to-day be surrounded by thriving refineries instead of the empty tanks and ruined works of bankrupted refining firms and companies which now alone remain to mark what at one time seemed to be, and which, had it not been for unjust railroad discriminations, would have been the beginning of a large and profitable industry for her people.

The arguments against the section, in which the objectors allege that it attempts and does violate the laws of trade, seem to be based upon a misconception of the words contained in it, certainly of the idea which its words convey. And this misconception is more clearly shown by the comparison which was brought forward against the section by the gentleman from Union, (Mr. Rooke,) viz: "That the rule laid down by the section would say that a grocer must not sell his groceries to a purchaser who buys a ton for a less price per pound than to the man who purchases a single pound." Whereas a correct simile is that the grocer must not charge the purchaser of a pound more for that single pound than he charges for a whole ton to the purchaser of the ton.

An inspection of the words in the section shows that the railroad companies are prohibited from charging more for carrying a shorter distance than they charge for carrying a longer distance; observe, not more per mile, but more than the whole charge for the longer distance. That is, if the Pennsylvania railroad company charge ten dollars for carrying a ton of freight from Pittsburg to Philadelphia, it must not charge more (although it may charge that much) for carrying a ton of like freight from Harrisburg to Philadelphia. Surely no injustice is done the railroad company by giving them for but a part of the journey compensation equal to what they charge for carrying the whole distance. A part is not greater than the whole, but on the contrary, if I recollect the axiom correctly, it is "the whole is greater than any of its parts." Do the gentlemen mean to say that, by the laws of trade, that axiom is not true? and that the laws of trade are so inconsistent with common honesty as to require the master of the vineyard to pay to the laborer who has agreed to work the whole day for a penny, more than that sum, merely because he was required to labor but a part of the time agreed upon?

Mr. STEWART. It may seem idle to prolong this discussion, but inasmuch as I will be called upon to vote on this section, I do not want my vote to be misunderstood. As the section stands I shall feel myself compelled to vote against it. There are several provisions in the section which, if they stood by themselves, I should most heartily support. Wherever it is demonstrated satisfactorily that an evil or abuse exists, I am ready to make any proper effort to remedy it. Now, our people do suffer certain grievances at the hands of these corporations. That is unquestionable. They have been pointed out by different delegates upon this floor. The gentleman who sits behind me (Mr. J. M. Bailey) has clearly demonstrated that our people are discriminated against unfairly and unjustly in his particular section. He has told us that the people in Maryland can send their coal to the eastern markets for less than the people in his own section, eight cents per ton I think he said. Certain other gentlemen have pointed out other instances, but I need not go further than to my own home to get an illustration just as forcible and just as directly to the point. The people upon the northern frontier of Maryland, say in the neighborhood of Hagerstown, can send their flour to the eastern markets through Pennsylvania to New York and Philadelphia, for less than the people of my own section. Let me state it in the way it was presented to me by a farmer of my own county: "A farmer in Franklin county can afford to haul his produce to Maryland rather than to Chambersburg, if it is to be shipped to New York or Philadelphia, because it can be shipped for less money from Maryland than it can from our own town, and the difference will compensate him for the additional transportation to Hagerstown. This is all wrong, and it becomes us here to-day to do what we can to remedy it.

If the section attempted nothing more than the gentleman from York stated in his argument I should support it, because I understand this to be all that he claimed for it. But it does more than that. I submit that this one expression which is in the ninth line of this section would remedy all that evil: "That no corporation shall make a greater or heavier charge for a shorter distance than it does for a longer distance." If the Pennsylvania railroad company, or any other railroad company shall haul the produce of the people of other States at a loss to themselves, in order successfully to compete with other through lines, we cannot complain. We cannot expect them to do that for us, but we can reasonably demand of them that they carry our produce for as small an amount as they do the produce of other States, and when they do that, they do all we can reasonably demand of them. They must not put us at a disadvantage.

But if we should adopt this section it would prevent all reasonable competition and it would dwarf the operations of all these railroads. We are not hostile to the railroads and we should be most careful how we restrict them, because their interests are the same with ours. All that we can reasonably ask of them is that they shall not discriminate unfairly and unjustly against us; that they shall afford us the same field for competition that our neighbors in the adjoining States have. When they give us that, they give us all we have a right to demand. When they deny us that, I repeat, we should interpose.

As I said before, if that provision stood alone in this section I should support it heartily, but inasmuch as the section if passed would dwarf and cripple these enterprises and prevent them from entering into successful competition with the great lines of other States, I shall vote against it.

The necessities of the case do not require this much of us, and indeed I am firmly persuaded that any such unnecessary restriction would injure not only the railroads, but the people whose interests are being so earnestly advocated in this discussion.

What the people want is a fair market, with honest competition. What the railroads want is a fair field to compete with each other. Both can be accommodated without abridging the just rights and privileges of either. Gentlemen seem to think that if, for the purpose of competing with rival companies, the Pennsylvania railroad should transport the freight of Chicago to Philadelphia at a loss, it should do the same for the people of Pittsburgh. The proposition needs only to be stated to be rejected. And yet their arguments are fairly stated in this modest proposition. They would by a schedule of rates establish a protective tariff for the benefit of our people, for it virtually amounts to this. The charges are to be in proportion to the distance, so that we who are nearer the markets shall have the unquestioned right to place our products in market for less than our neighbors. I am free to say that our people do not need any such protection, and I do not believe they want it. Give them always the right to transport their products at rates as low as their neighbors are made to pay, so that they can enter the markets with fair competition, and they will be satisfied. With less than that they will not be satisfied, and we owe it to them to secure to them this undoubted right. This we can do by adopting the single provision in the section to which I have referred.

Mr. T. H. B. PATTERSON. I merely wish to call the attention of the Convention for one moment to what we wish to accomplish by this section. The learned gentleman from Philadelphia (Mr. Cuyler) has announced as the foundation principle by which we ought to be guided in this matter, that competition is the life of trade. I say it is the life of trade and the life of the people also, and all we wish to accomplish by amending this section or by adopting it, is simply to keep competition open. That is all we ask. When a railroad takes my land or yours, it takes a public highway, and it takes it for the purpose of using it for the benefit of you and me, and it has no right to take that public highway and use it so as to take my property and then to go out west and bring another man's property and put it down in the east between me and my market. That is all we ask to prevent. We do not ask a pro rata freight bill. They have that in New York and they have it in other States, but we do not ask it here. But this section does ask that when they transport the property of the people of this State, and the property of people of other States, they shall make no discrimination against the people of this State; and also, to provide that there shall be no greater charge for a shorter than for a longer distance. That is all we ask, and the arguments that have been made here by the opposition against false positions and supposed positions have been merely made for the purpose of effect and in order to mislead the votes of delegates upon this floor.

Now, all we ask is just simply this: That a man out west shall not have the advantage of rich land and a far western back-woods home, and at the same time bring his products into market here at a less rate than a man who has to live in the east and within the bounds of Pennsylvania. We simply ask that a man who lives a hundred from a place shall not be made to pay a less rate than a man who lives only thirty miles. We simply ask that the right of competition shall be kept open, and that the public highway rights in the hands of these railroads shall still preserve to every man his relative position, shall preserve to him the relative position that he holds and that his property holds in the community where he was born and raised; and that is all that the people of Pennsylvania ask at the hands of this Convention. That is all that this section is intended to cover, and if it covers any more than that, then all that the friends of reform will have to do is simply to vote down this amendment, which really strikes at the whole section, and then so amend the remaining part of the section as was indicated by the gentleman from Mifflin (Mr. Andrew Reed.) They have to do nothing more than amend, so as to prevent this unjust discrimination on transportation, and this unjust taking of a man out of his place in a community and discriminating against him and destroying fair, healthy competition on the locus where a man's home and his property is situated.

This pretended argument against a discrimination in favor of outside railroads amounts to nothing, because it is not aimed at by the section, and is not claimed on this floor by the friends of this measure. And if they did it would be nothing more than claiming that railroad companies should do their work at a rate that would pay them, and then outside of that should not make the people of this State pay for doing under-work for other States.

We simply ask that railroad companies as trustees of the public highways shall run them fairly and squarely, make a reasonable profit, and then shall not charge the people of this State or anybody else for additional profit; but if, by reason of the location of parties outside of this State, they have the privilege of competing roads and other local advantages which enable them to ship on through lines and by rivers and other means, that is no reason why we should allow our corporations to take and carry their produce to market at a lower rate and bring them right in and put them down in effect between us and our market. And yet that is what is contended for by striking out all restrictions, and by this amendment.

This amendment proposes to strike down all restrictions whatever and to say that a man who may live in San Francisco or on the Mississippi river can ship his freight over our railroads, right through, past our doors, and have it carried into market lower than we can have it carried, not lower per mile, because there is nothing of that kind in the section and nothing of that kind is contended for here; but simply that he shall not have the advantage, when he lives out beyond us, of coming in and doing business on better terms and a nearer market; that is all.

Now, I ask gentlemen on the floor of this House to vote against this amendment for that reason, and then if they are friends of reform, as many of them profess to be, let them amend the section so as to prevent any misconstruction as to pro rata rates and vote for a measure which will enable the people of Pennsylvania to do business on their relative position and their relative distance from market, without being compelled to compete with the cheap labor and the rich farms and the far-off backwoods of the west. That is all we ask, and we therefore ask the Convention to vote down this amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Do ten members rise to second the call?

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken with the following result:

Y E A S .

Messrs. Alricks, Armstrong, Barclay, Bigler, Black, Charles A., Boyd, Brodhead, Broomall, Brown, Bullitt, Clark, Corbett, Curry, Curtin, Cuyler, Darlington, Dunning, Edwards, Elliott, Ellis, Fell, Fulton, Hanna, Kaine, Knight, Lamberton, Lilly, Mann, Niles, Parsons, Purman, Read, John R., Rooke, Smith, Wm. H., Van Reed, Walker, Wetherill, Jno. Price, Wherry and Worrell.—39.

N A Y S .

Messrs. Achenbach, Baer, Bailly, (Perry,) Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Biddle, Black, J. S., Buckalew, Calvin, Campbell, Church, Cochran, Corson, Cronmiller, De France, Ewing, Finney, Funck, Gibson, Gilpin, Guthrie, Hall, Hay, Horton, Howard, Landis, Lawrence, MacConnell, McClean, McCulloch, McMurray, Mantor, Newlin, Palmer, G. W., Patterson, D. W., Patterson, T. H. B., Patton, Purviance, John N., Purviance, Sam'l A., Reed, Andrew, Reynolds, Sharpe, Smith, Henry W., Stewart, Struthers, Turrell, White, David N., White, Harry and White, J. W. F.—48.

So the amendment was rejected.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Addicks, Ainey, Andrews, Baker, Bannan, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Beebe, Bowman, Carey, Carter, Cassidy, Collins, Craig, Dallas, Davis, Dodd, Green, Harvey, Hazzard, Hemphill, Heverin, Hunsicker, Lear, Littleton, Long, MacVeagh, McCamant, Metzger, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Palmer, H. W.,

Porter, Pughe, Ross, Runk, Russell, Simpson, Smith, H. G., Stanton, Temple, Wetherill, J. M., Woodward, Wright and Meredith, President—46.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I call for the yeas and nays on the section.

Mr. BAER. I move further to amend.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The delegate from Somerset moves to amend the section. The Chair will receive the amendment.

Mr. BAER. I move to strike out the words, "and the charges for freight and fares for passengers shall for equal distances in the same direction be the same," in the seventh and eighth lines, and insert:

"Taking into consideration the distance of transportation and the character of the road transported over."

I understand the chairman of the committee and the friends of the section to favor a construction that some of us think cannot fairly be put on the section as it stands. The amendment which I have here proposed will leave the section precisely with the construction they put on it and remove all doubts as to the charge per ton per mile. We can put the section in such condition as that we can vote for it without injuring the railroad companies in that regard and at the same time giving all that the most ardent friends of the section, according to their construction, ask at the hands of this Convention. I trust they will give it the consideration it deserves and that they will sustain the amendment; and in that shape, the section then being so amended, adopt the section itself. With this amendment in I shall go for the section. With this out or without something equivalent to it in its place, I shall be compelled to vote against the section, and I infer from the remarks of the gentleman from Franklin, with whose remarks I entirely concur, that he would be somewhat in the same condition; that he would feel himself compelled to vote against the section unless something of this kind be inserted. My own opinion is that he is right, he taking the same view that I do on this question.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President: I think that the delegate from Somerset perhaps has misapprehended the section under consideration. I judge from the character of the amendment offered and from his remarks that his idea is that this will prescribe or fix some rate that must be uniform on all the different roads of the Commonwealth. That is not correct. This does not prevent each particular railroad company from fixing its rates; but whenever such roads as have connections outside of Pennsylvania bring in freights from other States and passengers from other States, they shall not discriminate in their rates against the people of Pennsylvania.

But this section does not undertake to regulate the freights inside of the State, freights starting for instance from one point in the State to another, only so far as it says that they shall not charge for a shorter distance more than they do for a longer distance. If a road has heavier grades it will fix its rates accordingly, but when fixed, they cannot charge more for a longer distance than a shorter one. If their grades are heavier their rates will be higher. This by no means undertakes to say that the railroads throughout the Commonwealth shall make uniform charges; nothing of the sort.

Am I right in understanding that the amendment is to the effect that, wherever the grades or the character of the road is such as to make the transportation more expensive, there the charge may be greater?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Chair cannot tell. The amendment has been read.

Mr. HOWARD. Let it be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Clerk will read the amendment and the delegate will understand it for himself.

The CLERK. The amendment is to strike out the words, "and the charges for freight and fares for passengers shall for equal distances in the same direction be the same," and insert in lieu thereof the words, "taking into consideration the distance of transportation and the character of the road transported over."

Mr. HOWARD. I cannot see that the amendment can proceed upon any other idea than that some roads will have grades that make it more expensive to transport over than others.

The CLERK read the section as proposed to be amended.

Mr. HOWARD. Still I cannot see the propriety of the amendment, unless it is upon the idea that some roads have heavier grades and it will be more expensive to transport over them than other roads. This section seven does not undertake to prescribe any uniform rule at all for the roads of the Commonwealth; only specifies that where they have connections outside and bring freight or passengers into this State they shall give Pennsylvanians as favorable terms as they give people of other States.

While I am up I desire to refer to an act of Assembly passed in 1861 that affects the Pennsylvania railroad, because a good deal has been said about that road. We are told that it is going to fall back upon its original charter and it is going to charge us clear out of court; and objection has been made to this clause providing that they shall not charge a higher rate for a shorter distance than for a longer. I speak now only so far as the Pennsylvania railroad is concerned, and this will apply to the amendment so far as that road is concerned. Now, sir, when the act of Assembly was passed repealing the tonnage tax the Pennsylvania railroad entered into a new contract with the State whereby they surrendered their charter in all the particulars that are specified in this act of Assembly, and one of the particulars is this: "Nor shall the rates charged to any local point exceed those charged to any point of greater distance in the same direction."

That is precisely this section; but they have violated this act of Assembly every day since they signed this contract; and so far as that road is concerned, it is applying no new principle to it at all to apply the principle that is contained in this proposed provision of the Constitution.

It also stipulated that so far as the rates to the east and west, to Baltimore, New York and Philadelphia are concerned, it would charge no higher rates than it charged to its western customers. In other words, it agreed by this act of Assembly not to discriminate; so that it cannot fall back upon its charter, so far as the main line is concerned.

It stipulated also that "the local rates between Pittsburg and Philadelphia stations, on the line of the Pennsylvania railroad, shall at no time exceed the gross rates charged between Philadelphia and Pittsburg."

It stipulated also: "Nor shall local rates between any two stations on the road, between Philadelphia and Pittsburg, exceed the through rates made from time to time under the provisions of this act; nor shall the rates charged to any local points exceed those charged to any point of greater distance in the same direction."

Now, sir, the agents of the Pennsylvania railroad ought to be estopped by their own contract. They should not find fault with this section because they have agreed to it. So far as their charter was affected by this act of Assembly, they surrendered their chartered right to charge a greater sum between Pittsburg and Philadelphia—that is, the whole length of the main line—and on freights through to Baltimore, New York or Philadelphia, or freights passing westward; and yet they violated this act of Assembly. There is no penalty specifically attached to it, and shippers only remedy would be to bring an action for damages, I suppose, in the courts.

Mr. President, I cannot see that the amendment offered by the delegate from Somerset would have any material bearing upon the section. If I did I should be glad to support it, for I certainly do not wish to be captious. I am willing to accept anything reasonable, so far as I am concerned, to save what I conceive to be a great and just principle.

Mr. KNIGHT. Mr. President: It has been stated by members of the Convention that this is a very important subject. In that statement I fully agree. It is a subject concerning enterprises wherein over five hundred millions of money are invested in this State. It is a subject that is not sectional, but to a very great extent national. We have railroads running from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and in a few years will, perhaps, have a larger number of them. I have listened to the debates here with very great interest, and am somewhat in doubt whether we are able to make proper laws governing the railroad interests of this Commonwealth. The stockholders, the people interested in having the railroads properly managed, generally use the best judgment they have in selecting men of experience and talent whom they suppose qualified to manage them.

This subject is so important that I think it proper that I should make a remark cautioning the Convention not to put into our Constitution so much of legislation. We were talking here against the Legislature some five or six months, so that I almost came to the conclusion at one time that, if we could, it would be better to abolish the Legislature entirely; but that cannot be done.

Sir, it is a great deal easier to pull down than it is to build up. I do not pretend to know as much about managing railroads as some others, but I think if you pass all the sections reported by this committee, it will be utterly impossible to live up to the law and manage the railroads of this Commonwealth. If there was a national law governing all the railroads north and south of us, with regard to their freights, time, equipment, qualities of road &c, it might be done; but unfortunately for the State of Pennsylvania it costs more to build our railroads per mile, as I believe our statistics will show, than the railroads in any other State in the Union. With our expensive roads, not only expensive to build, but expensive to run, we have to come in competition with other roads constructed and operated at a greatly less cost. Now, sir, if we attempt to cripple our railroad corporations, something must be injured; either the travel will not be properly accommodated, or else the property itself will be greatly injured.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Somerset.

Mr. BAER. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

Ten delegates rising to second the call, the yeas and nays were ordered, and being taken resulted as follows:

Y E A S .

Messrs. Achenbach, Alricks, Baer, Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Barclay, Biddle, Boyd, Brodhead, Broomall, Brown, Bullitt, Carter, Clark, Corson, Curry, Curtin, Darlington, Dunning, Edwards, Elliott, Ellis, Ewing, Fell, Fulton, Funck, Gibson, Guthrie, Hall, Knight, Lamberton, Lawrence, Lilly, MacConnell, Mann, Niles, Palmer, G. W., Parsons, Patterson, T. H. B., Patton, Purviance, Samuel A., Read, John R., Reed, Andrew, Smith, Henry W., Smith, Wm. H., Struthers, Turrell, Walker, Wetherill, John Price, Wherry and White, J. W. F.—50.

N A Y S .

Messrs. Armstrong, Baily, (Perry,) Black, J. S., Buckalew, Calvin, Campbell, Church, Cochran, Corbett, Cronmiller, De France, Finney, Gilpin, Hanna, Hay, Horton, Howard, Landis, M'Clean, M'Culloch, M'Murray, Mantor, Patterson, D. W., Purman, Reynolds, Rooke, Sharpe, Stewart, Van Reed, White, David N., White, Harry and Worrell—32.

So the amendment was agreed to.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Addicks, Aincy, Andrews, Baker, Bannan, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Beebe, Bigler, Black, Chas.

A., Bowman, Carey, Cassidy, Collins, Craig, Cuyler, Dallas, Davis, Dodd, Green, Harvey, Hazzard, Hemphill, Heverin, Hunsicker, Kaine, Lear, Littleton, Long, MacVeagh, M'Camant, Metzger, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Newlin, Palmer, H. W., Porter, Pughe, Purviance, Jno. N., Ross, Runk, Russell, Simpson, Smith, H. G., Stanton, Temple, Wetherill, J. M., Woodward, Wright and Meredith, President—51.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question recurs on the section as amended.

Mr. CORSON. I move to strike out all after the word "same," where it occurs the second time in the eighth line, or rather all after the amendment just adopted. I have no desire to discuss the question. It is very plain; it is a matter of detail, and ought not to be here.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. President: I have so far been voting to retain this section in order that it might be within reach on third reading and receive further consideration prior to that time. I confess I require myself some information in regard to the operation of some of the clauses of this section. What I desire to say at this time is that my vote for this section is provisional and subject to such further examination as I shall be able to give it before the question shall be finally disposed of. But if the amendment of the gentleman from Montgomery (Mr. Corson) shall be adopted, striking out that part of the section which follows the word "same," in the eighth line, the section will come so near meaning nothing that I believe, for one, I shall consent very heartily to drop it.

There is to be no discrimination against citizens of our own State—that is all the first part of the section says—"taking into account the character of the road," travel, and so on. If anything can be made more vague and more completely unimportant than that I should like to see it. There is still retained in the section the clause borrowed from Illinois providing against charging more for a shorter than for a longer distance. If the section shall be retained as it now stands I will vote for it in order that it may be further considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment of the delegate from Montgomery.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. EWING. I move to amend by inserting after the word "distance," in the tenth line, the words, "including such shorter distance." I can understand why a railroad company might be permitted to charge a greater price for carrying goods ten miles on one part of its road than it should charge for carrying twenty miles on another part of the road, depending on the character of the road. But I think it is a fair limitation to say that they shall not carry freight over a longer distance, including that shorter distance, and charge a less rate; in other words, that they shall not charge more for carrying from Harrisburg to Lancaster than they charge for carrying from Harrisburg to Philadelphia; and I think that the limitation that is put on them not to charge more for a shorter distance than they do for a longer distance, should be over the same part of the road. So I move this amendment and I hope the friends of the section will agree to it.

Mr. CUYLER. I call for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The call was seconded by ten delegates, and the yeas and nays were taken with the following result:

YEAS.

Messrs. Achenbach, Bailly, (Perry,) Broomall, Clark, Corbett, Curry, Darlington, Edwards, Elliott, Ewing, Hall, Hay, Kaine, Knight, Lilly, Mann, Niles, Patterson, T. H. B., Purman, Purviance, Samuel A., Reed, Andrew, Reynolds, Smith, H. G., Smith, Henry W., Smith, Wm. H., Turrell, White, David N., White, J. W. F. and Worrell—29.

NAYS.

Messrs. Alicks, Armstrong, Baer, Barclay, Biddle, Black, J. S., Boyd, Brodhead, Brown, Buckalew, Bullitt, Calvin, Campbell, Church, Cochran, Corson, Cronmiller, Curtin, Cuyler, De France, Dunning, Ellis, Fell, Finney, Fulton, Funck, Gibson, Gilpin, Guthrie, Hanna, Horton, Howard, Lamberton, MacConnell, M'Clellan, Mantor, Palmer, G. W., Parsons, Patton, Read, John R., Rooke, Sharpe, Stewart, Van Reed, Walker, Wetherill, Jno. Price, Wherry and White, Harry—48.

So the amendment was rejected.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Addicks, Ainey, Andrews, Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Baker, Bannan, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Beebe, Bigler, Black, Charles A., Bowman, Carey, Carter, Cassidy, Collins, Craig, Dallas, Davis, Dodd, Green, Harvey, Hazzard, Hemphill, Heverin, Hunsicker, Landis, Lawrence, Lear, Littleton, Long, MacVeagh, M'Camant, M'Culloch, M'Murray, Metzger, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Newlin, Palmer, H. W., Patterson, D. W., Porter, Pughe, Purviance, John N., Ross, Runk, Russell, Simpson, Stanton, Struthers, Temple, Wetherill, J. M., Woodward, Wright and Meredith, President—56.

PAY OF CLERKS, &c.

Mr. HAY. I ask leave to make a report.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Shall the gentleman have leave? ["Yes."] The Chair hears no objection and the report will be received.

Mr. HAY. I am instructed by the Committee on Accounts and Expenditures to make the following report:

The Committee on Accounts and Expenditures, in pursuance of the following resolution of the Convention, to wit: "Resolved, That the Committee on Accounts and Expenditures be requested to report a resolution directing warrants to be drawn for the payment to the clerks and other officers of the Convention of one-fifth of their compensation," respectfully report the following resolution:

Resolved, That warrants be drawn in favor of the following-named persons, the Clerks and other officers of the Convention, for the sums set opposite their respective names, being one-fifth of their compensation as fixed by the Convention:

D. L. Imbrie, Chief Clerk.....	$550 00
Lucius Rogers, Assistant Clerk....	550 00
A. D. Harlan, do do	550 00
John L. Linton, Transcribing Clerk.....	400 00
A. T. Parker, Transcribing Clerk....	400 00
James Onslow, Sergeant-at-Arms,	400 00
C. M. Brown, Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms	360 00
Clement Evans, Doorkeeper.....	360 00
Frank Bently, Assistant Doorkeeper.....	360 00
Henry B. Price, Postmaster.....	360 00
B. F. Major, Assistant Postmaster	360 00
	<hr/>
	$4,650 00

The resolution was read the second time and agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The hour of six having arrived, the Convention stands adjourned until to-morrow morning at nine o'clock.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-NINTH DAY.

SATURDAY, July 12, 1873.

The Convention met at nine o'clock A. M., Hon. John H. Walker, President pro tempore, in the chair.

Prayer by Rev. J. W. Curry.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

RESIGNATION OF MR. COLLINS.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. laid before the Convention the following communication, which was read :

UNIONTOWN, FAYETTE COUNTY, PA., }
July 9th, 1873. }

Hon. WM. M. MEREDITH,
President Pennsylvania Constitutional Convention :

SIR : I hereby tender, through you, my resignation as a member thereof.

Respectfully your obedient servant,
JOHN COLLINS.

Mr. LILLY. I move that the resignation be laid on the table.

Mr. WHERRY. I second the motion.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I regret exceedingly that Mr. Collins has found it necessary on account of ill health to tender his resignation. I hope he will soon be better. We all know that he has been laboring under severe physical affliction since the winter, especially during the latter part of the session. I hope the resignation will be laid on the table and that Mr. Collins will be requested to reconsider his action.

The motion to lay upon the table was agreed to.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

Mr. ANDREW REED. I ask leave of absence for Mr. Ellis for next week.

Leave was granted.

Mr. PURMAN asked and obtained leave of absence for Mr. J. N. Purviance for a few days from to-day, on account of illness in his family.

Mr. PARSONS asked and obtained leave of absence for Mr. Stewart for a few days from to-day.

TO-DAY'S SESSION.

Mr. LILLY. I offer the following resolution :

Resolved, That this Convention will adjourn to-day at twelve o'clock M., to meet on Monday next at ten o'clock A. M.

The resolution was ordered to second reading and read the second time.

Mr. DARLINGTON. I move to strike out "twelve" and insert "one." ["No." "No."]

Mr. KAINE. What do you gain by that?

Mr. LILLY. I will compromise with the gentleman on half-past twelve.

Mr. DARLINGTON. I will not press my motion.

The resolution was agreed to.

SUBMISSION OF THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. President: I desire to call up the resolution I offered yesterday. I am indifferent about it myself; but a number of gentlemen desire the question acted upon. I do not contemplate debating it.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The resolution will be read.

The CLERK read as follows:

Be it resolved as follows :

First. That when the article on railroads shall have passed second reading the Convention will adjourn to meet again the fifteenth of September next, at ten o'clock A. M.

Second. That articles passed on second reading, including the legislative article, be reprinted as amended, and that three thousand copies thereof be printed in pamphlet form for general distribution.

Third. That this Convention will submit the new or revised Constitution proposed by it to a popular vote at such convenient time as will secure its taking effect, in case of adoption by the people, on or before the first day of January next.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on proceeding to the second reading and consideration of the resolution.

Mr. LILLY. I hope the delegate from Columbia will not press it now.

Mr. TEMPLE and Mr. ELLIS called for the yeas and nays.

The CLERK proceeded to call the roll, and concluded the call.

While the Clerk was footing up the result of the vote, Mr. J. R. Read entered the Hall and asked to have his vote recorded in the affirmative.

Mr. LILLY. I object to the gentleman voting. He was not within the bar when the roll was called. He has just come into the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Chair will inquire of the delegate from Philadelphia whether he was in the Hall at the time of the calling of the roll.

Mr. J. R. READ. I was not.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Then the name must be omitted under the rule.

The result of the vote was announced as follows:

YEAS.

Messrs. Achenbach, Addicks, Alricks, Baer, Barclay, Bigler, Black, J. S., Boyd, Brodhead, Brown, Buckalew, Calvin, Curry, Curtin, Darlington, Dunning, Elliott, Ellis, Ewing, Fell, Howard, Knight, MacConnell, M'Murray, Parsons, Patton, Pughe, Reynolds, Rooke, Sharpe, Stewart, Struthers, Turrell, Wetherill, J. Price, White, J. W. F., and Worrell—36.

NAYS.

Messrs. Baily, (Perry,) Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Biddle, Black, Charles A., Campbell, Carter, Clark, Cochran, Corbett, Cronmiller, De France, Edwards, Fulton, Funck, Gilpin, Guthrie, Hay, Horton, Kaine, Landis, Lawrence, Lilly, M'Culloch, Mann, Mantor, Newlin, Patterson, D. W., Patterson, T. H. B., Purman, Purviance, Samuel A., Reed, Andrew, Simpson, Smith, Wm. H., Temple, Walker, Wherry, White, David N., and White, Harry—38.

So the question was determined in the negative.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Ainey, Andrews, Armstrong, Baker, Bannan, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Beebe, Bowman, Broomall, Bullitt, Carey, Cassidy, Church, Collins, Corson, Craig, Cuyler, Dallas, Davis, Dodd, Finney, Gibson, Green, Hall, Hanna, Harvey, Hazzard, Hemphill, Heverin, Hunsicker, Lamberton, Lear, Littleton, Long, MacVeagh, M'Camant, M'Clean, Metzger, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Niles, Palmer G. W., Palmer, H. W., Porter, Purviance, John N., Read, John R., Ross, Runk, Russell, Smith, H. G., Smith, Henry W., Stanton, Van Reed, Wetherill, J. M., Woodward, Wright and Meredith, President—59.

HOURS OF SESSION.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That on and after Tuesday next the sessions of this Convention shall be from nine A. M. to three P. M.

On the question of proceeding to the second reading and consideration of the resolution, a division was called for, which resulted, ayes twenty-one; less than a majority of a quorum. So the resolution was not ordered to a second reading.

RAILROADS AND CANALS.

Mr. D. N. WHITE. I move that the Convention proceed to the consideration of article No. 17.

The motion was agreed to, and the Convention resumed the consideration on second reading of the article on railroads and canals.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. When the Convention adjourned yesterday it had under consideration section seven of the article as printed. That section will be read as amended.

The CLERK read as follows:

"No corporation engaged in the transportation of freight or passengers in or through this State shall make any discrimination in charges for the carriage of either freight or passengers against the people thereof, and such corporations shall carry the persons and goods of the people of this State on as favorable terms as those of other States brought into or through this State on the works owned or controlled by such corporation, taking into consideration the distance of transportation and the character of the road transported over; and a higher charge shall never be made for a shorter distance than is made for a longer distance, and no special rates or drawbacks shall either directly or indirectly be allowed; but commutation tickets to passengers may be issued as heretofore, and reasonable extra rates within the limits of the charter may be made in charges for any distance not exceeding fifty miles."

Mr. T. H. B. PATTERSON. I move to amend by striking out all after the word "section" and inserting the following substitute:

"No corporation engaged in the transportation of freight or passengers in or through this State shall make any discrimination in charges for the carriage of either freight or passengers between or against the people thereof, nor make a higher charge for a shorter distance than for a longer distance, including such shorter distance; and no special rates or drawbacks shall either directly or indirectly be allowed, except excursion and commutation tickets."

Standing here as the representative of the railroads of the State as well as of the people, I think that the representatives of the railroads, as well as those who are seeking to restrict them, ought to concede that there is some middle ground, some right principle on which we can all agree, and which will be a protection to the railroad interests of this State in their healthy operation as well as to the shippers and producers of the State. As such I have offered this substitute, and I ask the earnest attention of those delegates upon this floor who have been contending for the interest of railroads as against producers, as well as of those who have been contending for the interests of shippers and producers and against the monopoly of railroads; I ask the earnest attention of gentlemen for about one minute while I indicate wherein this substitute changes the section before the Convention.

It includes all the first part of the section, down to the word "thereof," and it includes all the first part of the section which my learned and able friend from Philadelphia (Mr. J. Price Wetherill) proposes to leave in the article, and the only modification it makes in that portion of the section is to insert the words "between or" before the word "against," in the latter part of the third line, so as to make that read "between or against the people thereof."

Then, immediately after the word "thereof," it puts in the words "nor make," and then strikes out all of the section from the word "thereof" down to the words "and shall," in the closing part of the eighth line. Then it reads "nor make a higher charge," omitting the words "shall never be made for a shorter distance than for a longer distance;" omitting the words "is made," in the tenth line, and inserts the words "including such shorter distance," and then goes on with the section, "and no special rates or drawbacks shall, either directly or indirectly, be allowed, except commutation and excursion tickets."

Now, if the delegates will give me their attention I will read the substitute.

"No corporation engaged in the transportation of freight or passengers in or through this State shall make any discrimination for the carriage either of freight or passengers between or against the people thereof; nor make a higher charge for a shorter distance than a longer distance, including such shorter distance. And no special rates or drawbacks shall, either directly or indirectly, be allowed except excursion and commutation tickets."

I wish to say this: This substitute proposes distinctly three things. It omits the pro rata provision. It does not attempt to prescribe any pro rata rate or any rate whatever. The term "charge" is an aggregate charge, and if any delegate on the floor of this House will prefer to put in the word "aggregate" I am perfectly willing to so modify the substitute by putting the word "aggregate" before the word "charge."

But I take it, if we come to a legal interpretation, it is simply a charge for a longer than for a shorter distance and has no reference to rates whatever.

Now, this section just proposes three things: First, it proposes to prevent a railroad or common carrier company, after it has taken the property of the people of Pennsylvania, from taking a western farmer, or a western producer, or a western manufacturer, or a shipper, and placing him between the Pennsylvania manufacturer and farmer and producer and his market. It does not prevent their bringing him up to the State line. They can bring him up to that point; that is, they can bring the western man or the far-off shipper and put him on an exact equality with the home or short shipper but they cannot put him nearer. That is all it prevents. It does not attempt anything like a pro rata apportionment. There is not a word in it that looks to that.

Now, I call the attention of the railroad men on this floor particularly to that feature of this subject. It is free from any such criticism. It simply says that a man shall ship his freights to market on an equality with everybody that is not nearer to the market than him, and that no man further from market shall ship cheaper than he shall, but they shall all be equal. Therefore it does not interfere with the competition of through routes at all, because competition on through routes can bring men right up, and put them on an equality with you; they can put their rate outside just as low as they please, but they shall not take another man's property under different circumstances of location and put him at a shorter distance; that is all it proposes. It says that the manufacturers of the west, and the producers of the west, as against the manufacturers and shippers and producers of the State, shall not have the advantage of being taken and put nearer their objective point than other shippers or manufacturers, but shall remain on an equality so far as prevents them from being put nearer by railroad companies; although railroad companies may put them as near, provided they do not change the relative position by putting them nearer. Now, gentlemen, is not that fair? Is it right that a common carrier corporation (and here I speak as a matter of principle) should take your property and mine, and then after they have taken our property, take and put us out of the market, putting men who are further away from market between us and our market, so as to interfere with our manufacturing interests and our products of every kind and description by taking and removing us away up to the Mississippi river, and putting other men between us and our objective points. That is all that this section aims to do in that regard.

Then the second object of this section (the first is produced by the first two clauses of the section) is to prevent discriminations against or between the people of the State, and charging a higher rate for a shorter than a longer distance. It covers that ground and no more; it has nothing to do with pro rata rates.

Then the other provision of this section is simply to provide that no drawbacks or special rates shall be allowed, except in commutation and excursion tickets. Now what does that do? That clearly prevents railroad companies from taking and giving special favors; in other words, it prevents railroad companies from taking and saying to this manufacturer, this business man, you shall stand up on high, and saying to another man, you shall go down. As my learned friend from Union (Mr. Rooke) very well said, it very often benefits a man to have special rates or to have a drawback, and that, as a matter of personal and private favor, no man would object to; but when it comes to a public corporation who controls the highway rights of the State, who have taken your and my property in order to build that highway—when it comes to making such discrimination and building up whom they please and putting down whom they please, then it becomes unjust; and this simply says, if they have any such discriminations or favors to give, they shall give them generally.

Now observe, and I ask the delegates to attend one moment, all the good that could be accomplished by the special rates referred to by the gentleman from Union can be accomplished by general rates. For instance, they can establish a general rate by which they can give to all the manufacturers of a certain capacity certain discriminations and favors, provided they increase their capacity to certain other amounts. In doing that they make no discriminations and they give no special rate or drawback, because it is a general rate; and whenever a drawback or a special rate is made a general plan, then it does not hurt anybody, and it can foster the manufacturing of any locality without touching or hurting the individual. Therefore, I say that is a safe principle to put in the Constitution, that there shall be no principle rate or drawback, because whenever you make the special fostering favors general to all that come within their reach, then they are not special rates and are not touched by this prohibition.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BAER. Before the vote is taken by which all that was done yesterday shall be wiped out, I wish to say one word. I shall not undertake to repeat anything that any one else has said except to say that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Allegheny does not cure the evil complained of. It leaves the section in just the same bad condition that it was originally. It does not remove the bad feature of compelling the paying of the same rate of freight per ton per mile, although in express terms it does not say so. If you ship freight to Philadelphia, the amount is not ascertained in the aggregate or in bulk; when you come to ascertain what it shall be it is figured out on the basis of so much per ton per mile, and the only way to ascertain it at all is to put it on that basis. The amendment is therefore lame in that respect, and unless it be further amended, we shall still be perpetrating this injustice.

Now, sir, in reply to a remark of the gentleman from Allegheny that those who are in favor of railroads and against the producers are here urging the passage of this section, I beg to say to him that I claim to be, not one in favor of railroads and against the producers, but one of the producers themselves; and I ask this Convention now how many of the lawyers who are advocating this proposition have taken stock in railroads whereby the country has been developed? How many of them have invested in enterprises to develop the mining and manufacturing interests of the State? How many of them have put their dollars and cents into such a condition that the interest of the people shall be benefited? Why, sir, when lawyers rise to speak on this subject they invariably preface their remarks by saying that it is an interest entirely foreign to them, that they have no interest in railroads either one way or the other, and yet they need not say so because their votes in the Convention indicate and prove to the people that they not only have no investments in that direction, but that they have no heart for the great business that encourages the industries of the people. How many of them I ask have made it possible for two spears of grass to grow where one grew before? How many of them I ask have given the industries of the State such an impulse that two poor men can procure labor where but one could procure it before? How many of them have made it possible for two poor families to live where but one lived before? Their votes here and their disposition, have been to crush these enterprises, so that their pretence of being in favor of the poor laboring man is all profession.

Now, sir, I shall test the sincerity of the friends of this measure by agreeing that the amendment proposed by the delegate from Allegheny shall be passed if they will insert but two words more in it. If they will insert the words "unjust or unreasonable" in it, it will do justice all around, and those two words I propose to insert in the third line of the amendment after the word "any," so as to make it read: "That no unjust or unreasonable discrimination shall be made." If they will put in those words I will vote for the amendment. If they do not put them in, it leaves the provision just as bad as it was before, and I shall vote against it. I inquire of the Chair if it is proper to move an amendment at this time?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. It is.

Mr. BAER. Then, sir, I move to insert after the word "any," in the third line of the amendment, the words "unjust or unreasonable," so as to make the amendment read:

"No corporation engaged in the transportation of freight or passengers in or through this State shall make any unjust or unreasonable discrimination."

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President: I am somewhat surprised at the spirit which is manifested here to-day by the gentleman from Somerset (Mr. Baer.) He seems to have had some sort of new spur applied to him to make him more than ordinarily denunciatory this morning. I understand him to say that this measure is iniquitous. Well, sir, that is a very hard word to use with regard to any measure which is presented before this body and which has received the consideration, as I understand it, fair, mature and deliberate of a committee of which he himself was a member, and which he certainly will not say was controlled or governed by any iniquitous design or purpose.

But why pitch into the lawyers of this Convention this morning? There is an old proverb that "it is a dirty bird that fouls its own nest." Now, sir, it unfortunately happens for my friend from Somerset that he himself is one of us; he is one of the great class of lawyers whom he denounced this morning as not having put one dollar of their money, as I understood him, into any of these great works of improvement in this Commonwealth, but have simply lived as parasites upon the industry and prosperity of the community. Sir, I did not expect a charge of that kind to come from a member of the profession of which I am one of the humblest members. I never understood that the legal profession in this State was a profession that was lacking in public spirit or in giving aid to measures which were calculated to promote the public interests.

It is suggested that we never have any money. I admit, sir, we have not as much money as some other people in the community, but of the little that we have I think we contribute rather a larger proportion than most other classes to objects of that kind.

Now, Mr. President, I am one of those who are sincerely desirous to pass a reasonable, just, and at the same time efficient measure on the subject which is now under consideration. The amendment of the gentleman from Somerset, which was adopted yesterday, was adopted in haste, without time for consideration and reflection, and although I voted against it, I admit that I did so with some hesitation at the time; but further consideration and reflection induces me this morning to sincerely believe that that amendment is in itself one of the most impracticable and inapplicable provisions that you could possibly insert in any section of this article.

Why, sir, how in the world could you determine a question which depended upon the consideration of the distance of transportation and the character of the road transported over? What measure, what rule, what possible test could you apply to a provision of that kind? How could you bring it down to practice? Why, sir, the great difficulty of this question is the use of these general indefinite phrases. I know of a case which has recently occurred between individuals and one of the railroad companies in this State, in which I believe that it was admitted that there was strong equity in favor of the plaintiff; and yet if I understand that case—I have not seen the decision—it was determined on the construction of the single word "average," ruling out all the equity which was apparent on the face of it in favor of the plaintiffs. If I am wrong in that, the honorable gentleman from my own county, distinguished as a farmer, will correct me.

Mr. J. S. BLACK. What is that?

Mr. COCHRAN. I stated that the case was decided on the construction of the word "average." Am I wrong or right?

Mr. J. S. BLACK. I believe it was.

Mr. COCHRAN. I believe it, too, although I have not seen the opinion. Mr. President, there is the difficulty in placing in statutes or in sections of the Constitution words of general and indefinite signification, words under which you are compelled to resort to the use of the testimony of so-called experts, whose testimony is as unreliable in matters of business as the testimony of medical experts is in cases of homicide.

Now, the proposition is to introduce into this amendment the qualifying adjectives "unjust or unreasonable." What construction are you going to put upon these words? Let me just state by way of illustration what I understand to be the difficulty in regard to this matter, a difficulty which has brought about great trouble and great confusion, all this trouble and confusion in the State of Illinois. The Constitution of the State of Illinois provided that there should be no unjust discrimination. That was, I believe, its language. Then the Legislature undertook to pass a law on that subject, inserting in the statutes the words we have already put into this section, that a higher charge should never be made for a shorter than for a longer distance. When the courts were called upon to construe that they said that that law was unconstitutional because it did not always follow, in their estimation, that a greater charge for a shorter distance might not be made than for a longer distance so as not to be inequitable or unjust. That was a narrow construction on that one word which brought about the whole of this trouble in the State of Illinois, which brought about that unseemly controversy between the people and one of the learned judges of that State, whose motives I certainly do not impeach. It brought about the removal of that judge from the bench and his substitution by another—a thing which I presume every right minded gentleman will regret, but which, it seems to me, you can scarcely blame the people for effecting under the circumstances.

Now, sir, will you in this Constitution throw in a bone of contention by inserting such qualifying adjectives as these? Can you not adopt something which is positive, direct, clear and distinct, so that when you come before your courts of justice you will not be ruled out by a construction of indefinite phrases, or put to the impossible alternative of proving that which is almost in the nature of the case incapable of being made out by evidence such as I apprehend would be required under the amendment of the gentleman from Somerset, adopted yesterday afternoon. I do not characterize that amendment as iniquitous, for I know it was not so, and not only do I not so characterize it, but I say, in justice to that gentleman, that I feel confident that he intended it in all fairness and rectitude. Believing that, I was strongly induced to favor it, but further reflection convinced me that without any design on his part whatever that amendment will work great and manifest injury and be destructive of the whole substance of this section of the Constitution.

I hope we shall not throw any such qualifying words into this section as the gentleman this morning proposes. I hope we shall stand by the amendment of the gentleman from Allegheny, (Mr. T. H. B. Patterson,) which I am willing to take, as it removes largely from this section matter which has been objected to by other gentlemen. I am willing to accept it as a compromise and an attempt to avoid objectionable provisions, and I hope, therefore, that this Convention will sustain the amendment and pass the section as it shall be so amended.

Mr. PURMAN. I suppose that any man who considered the importance of the subject and the difficulty of having a clear conception with regard to it would have expected the discussion upon this section and the preceding sections of this article to have been as spirited as it has proved to be. It is not denied, I suppose, even on the part of the most ardent friend of railroad interests in Pennsylvania that some abuses have crept in with regard to the carrying of freight, more perhaps than with regard to the carrying of passengers. Some unjust discriminations have been made. It is impossible that a great interest, such as the railroad interests of this State, should be carried on for any length of time without some injustice having been done to the people. It is not surprising that the people should agitate the subject and protest against the slaughter of their interests in this particular. I regard it for the best interests of the railroads as well as of the people that some proper limitations should be thrown around the carrying interests of railroads, such as will not cripple them, and at the same time to secure the confidence of the people. I have often attempted to draft a section which would protect the people from the abuses of which they complain, and at the same time not cripple the railroad interest of the people and the State, but I confess it is extremely hard to find apt words which will accomplish the object only. This task I found to be the more difficult and perplexing, because the interest of railroads is the interest of everybody. It is not necessary for me to deliver a lecture here this morning upon the value of railroads, what Pennsylvania would have been without the aid of railroads and what they have done for Pennsylvania; and on the other hand it is not necessary for me to attempt to portray the injuries, either real or imaginary, which the people have suffered at the hands of the railroads. The practical question for us to consider is, how we are to so meet the troubles that are upon us as to restore confidence to the people in these great public enterprises, and at the same time not to cripple the railroad interests, because in crippling the railroad interests we cripple the people. I say it is very difficult to put in phraseology a section that will be elastic enough to extend and embrace and allow the railroads to grow, and at the same time to protect the people.

No one will pretend to say that the railroads can carry freight ten or twenty miles for the same consideration per mile that they can carry it for one hundred or five hundred miles. It requires the same number of hands to load the cars and unload them, to switch them on and switch them off the track to carry freight ten miles as it does for five hundred miles. When a railroad company charges what it costs them to load and unload their cars or freight carried for ten miles, the same as if carried five hundred miles, it does nobody injustice. Then when it comes to the actual distance carried, they cannot apportion it as ten miles is to five hundred and no reasonable man can ask it. People do not ask to impose any such burdens or restraints upon the railroads. What they want is that they shall be reasonable and that they shall not be oppressive. I think the amendment of the gentleman from Pittsburg, (Mr. Ewing,) offered yesterday, was a very reasonable one, that they shall not charge for carrying freight a shorter distance a greater sum than they would charge for carrying it a greater distance over the same road.

For illustration, if the railroads can carry freight or passengers from A to C for one dollar they ought to be able to carry freight or passengers from A to B, B being the intermediate point, for one dollar, because the expense of loading and unloading cars, the switching on and off, the peculiarities of the road over which it is carried and the value of that portion as a carrying interest for passengers and freight are all involved. But we should in some way provide to reach this case. Goods should not be shipped in Philadelphia to Cleveland and brought back to Pittsburg for a less rate per ton than would be charged to carry them from Philadelphia to Pittsburg. We should protect the interests of Pennsylvania, and prevent the railway interest from building up Cleveland at the expense of Pittsburg, and prevent the railroad company from charging less on goods shipped from Philadelphia out to Ohio and brought back again to Pittsburg, than they do on goods shipped directly to Pittsburg. I do not know the facts. I do not pretend to say, of my own personal knowledge, that such has been the fact, but if such has been, it ought to be prevented in the future. Doubtless instances of this kind have occurred inadvertently. Doubtless they have occurred sometimes in an effort on the part of these corporation to make money, and if it is done in that way at the expense of the people and particular business interests it ought to be restrained. They ought to be restrained also from giving a preference for carrying coal brought out of their own mines over that of some individual or individual corporation that has no interest in the railroad in carrying the coal from their mines. If the railroad companies are engaged in mining and manufacturing (which they ought not to be) they ought not to give any preference to their goods in transportation over their road, and as common carriers they cannot without a violation of law, and incurring liability to the party injured. And in all such cases, doubtless, falsehood is practiced by the shipping agents, so as to protect the company from liability to the injured party.

We all know very well, as lawyers, that as common carriers they cannot refuse to carry the coal or other goods of other corporations or individuals without incurring a liability. But practically, when it comes to enforce it, the party is injured as much by seeking his remedy in law as he would be to submit without making any complaint. Now, what do we gain by putting such a restriction in the Constitution? Railroad companies are bound to carry in the order in which the application is made to them for transportation. When they depart from this rule and avoid liability, they must manage the business of common carriers unfaithfully. If their agent untruthfully represents that A has presented an application for transportation before B, whereby the goods of the first is favored at the expense of the latter, the only remedy would then be in an action on the case for fraud, and in such a case a constitutional provision would be no better than the common law. This whole subject depends so much upon the laws of commerce and the peculiar interests of individual enterprise, as to render it extremely difficult to manage. Indeed we are likely to produce as much or more mischief by our action, and injure the people, as they have already suffered.

This section would, perhaps, be as effectual as any constitutional provision you can make, but very much, after all, depends on the fidelity and integrity with which these roads are represented by their agents. I am not sure, if I cannot get anything better, but that I shall vote for this section. I would like to see it improved, yet I am not sure that there is not as much mischief in it as the mischief which is intended to be avoided by it. I confess that the subject is a very difficult one, and I do think that no reflections ought to be made against the Committee on Railroads and Canals, or upon its distinguished chairman for the manner in which this report was prepared. I suppose that anybody else would have encountered the same difficulties that that committee has encountered, the subject being new and difficult. They were, however, gentlemen who have had experience in this subject and they have done that which seemed best to be done. I have been thinking for the past four or five years upon the matters embraced in this section, and I confess that it has always staggered me to reach any satisfactory conclusion, and perhaps it is still better to trust to the great principles of natural justice, trust to the elastic power of the common law, and the rights that parties have under it as it now stands, and as it may be applied in wise and experienced hands. The people all over the State demand the construction of more railroads, and will not approve anything which will cripple their chances for their erection. I will vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Lycoming (Mr. Armstrong) because it is more elastic than anything else which has been presented.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment of the delegate from Somerset (Mr. Baer) to the amendment of the delegate from Allegheny (Mr. T. H. B. Patterson.)

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President: The extreme difficulty of this subject is very apparent. I suppose every member on this floor accords to the Committee on Railroads the credit of the highest consideration and integrity in everything which they have presented for our consideration. The numerous amendments suggested clearly indicate the inherent difficulty of the question. I have given this subject a good deal of reflection and am prepared to offer an amendment which in my judgment meets the only difficulty which really calls upon us for a constitutional provision.

I ask the attention of the Convention for a few minutes and I will briefly indicate what I believe to be the real issue, and I can do so better by an illustration than by mere abstract statement.

Suppose two parties desire to ship freight from Chicago, one to Pittsburg and the other to Philadelphia. It is wrong that he who wants to ship to Philadelphia shall get his freights for a less sum than he who wishes to ship the same cargo to Pittsburg. By the same rule it is wrong that if one party desire to ship to Philadelphia and another party desires to ship to New York, the railroad company shall transport that freight right through Philadelphia to New York and deliver it there for less than they will deliver it in Philadelphia. It is wrong that a railroad company should undertake to ship freights as a common carrier and transport freights as they do, right through the town of Williamsport, for instance, over the Philadelphia and Erie railroad, upon the same train, and charge more for delivering such freights at Williamsport than to carry it through to Philadelphia, two hundred miles further? All this is wrong. I believe it is wrong in principle, and injurious in the end to the best interests of the railroad company, and is a discrimination against the interests of the State which we are called upon by constitutional provision to prohibit.

This I believe is the evil which it is our purpose to strike down directly, pointedly and unmistakably, by a prohibition which shall be in such terms that it shall not be open to doubtful legal construction, which shall be too plain for the railroads to mistake, so plain that the way-faring man, though a fool, need not err therein.

My objection to the amendment pending is that it provides that a higher charge shall never be made for a shorter distance than is made for a longer distance. This is not always practicable. It limits and controls unnecessarily the discretion of the transporting company both within and beyond the lines of the State. We have just the same interest in every part of the State in allowing transportation companies the largest possible discretion in competing for freights which are without and to be brought within the State. To illustrate: At Chicago the Pennsylvania railroad meets an intense competition which compels the company to carry freight from that point to the seaboard, either at New York or Philadelphia, at the very minimum of rates upon which, if they make any profit, it is as they constantly represent, a very small profit indeed. The reason of it is that the New York capital which controls the rival routes to that point would rather have the commercial enterprise dependent upon such transportation centered in New York, and get less dividends upon their railroad stocks, than to have that freight diverted to another and a rival city. But this competition is not met with at every point along the line of the railroad. For instance, at Cincinnati they have sharp competition, but not so severe as that they meet at Chicago. It is a shorter distance, but it is not, therefore, right that the railroad company should be compelled to transport from a point where there is not such destructive competition at the same rates that they are compelled to receive from points where the competition is intensely active, and where, if they do not reduce their freights to the nearest minimum, they cannot receive the freights at all.

This section, then, is too broad in that it limits unnecessarily the discretion of the company at points beyond the State. We have no interest in that. Our interest is, in common with the railroads, to draw within the State whatever freights we can transport from all points beyond the line of our State.

This being so, what is the point at which we should direct our restrictions? It is that the railroad company shall not charge more for delivering freights at any one point in the State than they could charge for carrying them ten, twenty, fifty, one hundred or three hundred miles further. Nor can the railroads justly complain of this, for if they can transport to Philadelphia for a certain fixed rate or aggregate charge they surely cannot complain that by a constitutional provision they may stop that freight when required one two or three hundred miles short of that destination and yet collect precisely the same amount for transportation.

In view of this I have drawn an amendment which I will say I have drawn with great care, and I will further add, with exceeding great difficulty, for I found it extremely difficult to express. I propose, then, to offer this amendment, to come in after the word "thereof," in the fourth line:

"Persons and property transported by any such company shall be delivered at intermediate stations within the State at charges not exceeding the charges for transportation of persons and property of the same class, in the same direction, to any more distant station."

I believe that covers the whole ground, so far as it is judicious for us to restrict the operation of railroads, which must, in spite of whatever restrictions we may impose, be mainly controlled by the laws of trade. It prevents the Pennsylvania railroad from taking freights at any point west and refusing to deliver it at Pittsburgh or Williamsport or Harrisburg, and receive for it the same money that they would receive if they carried it through, over the same line and past these points, to Philadelphia. I am not aware of any other great evil to be complained of. The amendment I propose operates to the same effect within the State. Transportation companies could not take up freight at Pittsburgh and carry it ten miles and charge more for it than they do for carrying the same freight twenty miles. They could not take freight at Pittsburgh and carry it to Altoona and charge more for it than they would to carry the same freight to Harrisburg. The language is broad enough to cover all transportation within the State. It is purposely expressed as it is to prevent any interference with the discretion of the company in seeking freights which they are to procure beyond the State line.

Mr. KAINE. I desire to ask the gentleman a question with his permission. I do not understand him exactly. Does he mean the railroad company may charge the same for carrying the same class of freight from Pittsburgh to Greensburg that it does from Pittsburgh to Philadelphia?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I say that they shall not charge more, but I have not in this section undertaken to limit their discretion as to the rates per mile between any given points. This we could not safely do.

Mr. FUNCK. Does the gentleman make any provision as to drawbacks in his section?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. No, sir, there is nothing in the section that proposes anything about drawbacks in direct terms.

Mr. FUNCK. There is where the trouble comes in.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. But it would indirectly be involved because any system of drawbacks which would reduce the freight for a shorter distance below what it charged for a longer distance in the same direction would be in violation of this section, and no indirect and evasive method of that kind would be tolerated by the courts.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I only desire to say a very few words that I may finish what I have to say on this subject. ["Goon."] I certainly shall endeavor to be brief, but it is a question of such exceeding importance that I think we ought to discuss it at length.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Chair called the time because of the rule only.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I recognize it, and it is with great propriety that the Chair did so, and it is with great reluctance that I venture to trespass even for a few minutes longer. I shall not discuss the question further, but will read the section as it will stand if this amendment be adopted:

"No corporation engaged in the transportation of freight or passengers in or through this State shall make any discrimination in charges for the carriage of either freight or passengers against the people thereof."

The gentleman from Pittsburgh (Mr. T. H. B. Patterson) introduces the word "between," which I think is not of any especial importance in that connection. But that part of the section, I think, is of value, because it provides in general terms that there shall be no discrimination against the people of the State, and that far it is wise. With this amendment added to it I believe it covers every important abuse complained of by the people on the part of the railroad companies.

Mr. SHARPE. Would this amendment allow the railroad companies to carry freight from Philadelphia to Chicago for less than they can carry it to Pittsburgh?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I do not think it would. I am hardly prepared to express a positive opinion without further consideration, but I think it would not.

Mr. SHARPE. If a manufacturer in Chicago manufactures the same goods as a manufacturer in Pittsburgh, why should he be allowed to transport his goods at a less rate than the manufacturer in Pittsburgh, and thus be enabled to undersell our own manufacturer?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. There is a difference in distance of about seven hundred miles between Chicago and Pittsburg and Philadelphia. If the railroad company should do that thing it would be only to a limited extent; but I would ask the gentleman whether or not it is in our power to control it if we would, as being beyond the limits of the State? Besides, it would be limiting the discretion of the railroad company in that regard to a degree which would render our interference dangerous without necessity, since no considerable abuse has been or is likely to be developed in that direction, and if it did it is fully within the power of the Legislature. We have no difficulties of that kind which are of practical effect, and I believe that under a fair construction of this section it could not be done. But certainly this amendment would cut up by the roots that great evil which the people do complain of, that freight is carried right past their doors, hundreds of miles beyond the point where they desire to have it delivered, and they cannot, even by paying the same rate, get it delivered at such intermediate destinations, but it must be carried one or two hundred miles further and then shipped back. This is wrong. I submit the amendment, and I believe it covers the ground as fully as in any constitutional provision it is safe to go. Should other abuses, not now foreseen, arise, they can be safely dealt with by the Legislature, and under such legislative securities as we have provided I believe it will be wisely and safely vested there.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment of the delegate from Lycoming (Mr. Armstrong) to the amendment of the delegate from Allegheny (Mr. T. H. B. Patterson) which will be read.

The CLERK read the amendment to the amendment, which was to strike out all after the word "thereof" and insert:

"Persons and property transported by any such company shall be delivered at intermediate stations within the State at charges not exceeding the charges for transportation of persons and property of the same class in the same direction to any more distant station."

Mr. LILLY. Mr. President: I do not desire to hamper this amendment or to tie it up in any way by anything that I may say or do; but I wish to impress upon the Convention the fact that this amendment does not cover the whole subject as the gentleman from Lycoming thinks it does. There is another case which I think is more important to be provided for than any yet spoken of, which has been left out of sight. For instance, suppose I go to Erie and buy a cargo of Lake Superior iron ore, and propose to carry it by rail to the Lehigh valley to be smelted, without asking anything about freights, but take the schedule price expecting to pay it, and I do pay it. My neighbor, who has a furnace alongside of me, goes to Erie and buys his cargo, but he goes to these railroad companies and obtains a special rate, and gets it carried for half the freight to the Lehigh valley that I do, because of that arrangement with the companies. His ore is smelted and his iron comes in competition with mine in the market, and he is able to undersell me. I think that is a point that ought to be guarded against. I do not think the railroad companies ought to be allowed to make that sort of discrimination, but it is done every day. As I said some time ago when this subject was under consideration, that is the main evil complained of on the Erie railroad. There is hardly a thing carried on that railroad to any extent that is carried by regular schedule. The freighting is in the hands of a few parties who control the whole thing to the exclusion of the general public. Now, I take it these railroads are for the general benefit of the people. I have always been friendly to the railroads, and feel so to-day, and would not do the first thing to cripple them; but I think if we are to make an article on the subject of railroads at all, we ought to restrain them from doing just such things as I am speaking of. If it were left to me, I would make an article on railroads that would only contain a couple of sections that would be much shorter than this, and leave the whole matter to the Legislature to fix by general law. But if this amendment carries I hope an amendment to it will be made providing:

"That no discrimination shall be made in favor of any parties in carrying freight of the same kind the same distance, by drawback or otherwise."

The PRESIDENT pro tem. That cannot be offered at this time.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I find that in the latter part of the seventh section, as printed, there is a proviso saving commutation tickets, &c. I want that to go in, and if the amendment should be adopted I propose to add that at the end of it.

Mr. CUYLER. Mr. President: I quite agree with the delegate from Lycoming, who offers this amendment, in any words he may say of personal respect and regard for the Railroad Committee, and yet I cannot but express regret, as a member of this House, that the distinguished President of this Convention, in constituting that committee, carefully excluded from it, so far as one may judge, in his selection of members, gentlemen in this House who had experience and knowledge of the particular subject which was referred to that committee; but, of course, the committee is not blameable for that. But with profound respect for that committee, they are—I use the word in no offensive sense whatever—censurable for one thing, and that is that they did not seek, at least, the benefit of the experience and the suggestions of those who could have enlightened them upon the subject committed to their charge. In other words, I complain that in a city that abounds with men of the purest character, the loftiest patriotism, and the largest intelligence upon this subject, this committee did not invite at least an expression of the views of those gentlemen. Why was it that such men as Mr. J. Edgar Thomson, Mr. Thomas A. Scott, men who have served this Commonwealth and this country grandly, were not at least invited by this committee to give them the benefit of an experience so vast, a patriotism so large as theirs, and a love for this State and for this city that is not surpassed in the bosom of any citizen of this Commonwealth? Why is it that we, a body composed almost entirely of lawyers, sit here to-day to legislate about a question that is outside of the pale of our ordinary experience, while within sound of our voice there dwells that enlightenment and experience and knowledge that would largely serve us, and we are shut out from it?

Now, sir, I claim for the gentlemen to whom I have alluded, whose experience and knowledge would have been largely valuable to this body, as great intelligence and as pure patriotism as can possibly be predicated of any gentleman here; but I cannot speak of one of those gentlemen particularly—I might say of both—without emotion. I cannot suffer myself even to speak of Mr. Thomson, the President of the Pennsylvania railroad company, without an emotion of gratitude to him as a Pennsylvanian and pride and glory as a citizen of this Commonwealth in the fact that another State has not robbed us of the services and the ability and the capacity of that man, for they would have valued them, though we do not; a silent man to whom nature has almost denied the power of speech, and yet who has written his thoughts on the face of this Commonwealth in lines of vast internal improvement, bridging rivers and filling valleys and subduing mountains to make a highway for the trade of this State, that we might be bound to our sister Commonwealths and might discharge our duty not as Pennsylvanians merely, but as members of a grand Union, to a whole country. Not circumscribed in our patriotism by the narrowness of mere State lines—but with a broader view and a grander conception of our privileges, our duties and our obligations, rising to the contemplation of our relations, not merely as citizens of Pennsylvania but of the United States.

Now, I have to say to this Convention, after a conversation with that gentleman and with Mr. Scott, and with other railroad men, that the subject which we are handling to-day, with issues so vast to the prosperity of this Commonwealth, is one in regard to which those gentlemen declare that, with all their experience, they are not competent to write a constitutional article upon and feel a conviction that it will not work ruin to the State. I mean to say that we are in the infancy of railroad science, dating back but forty years in this country since the first short line of railroad was opened, with every year and every month developments of some new principle and some new rule, so that what to-day may seem the height of wisdom will to-morrow be apparent to the intelligent mind as the supremest folly and absurdity. And yet we, inexperienced, however pure in our motives and however intelligent in our ordinary avocations, sit here to write this inflexible law in the Constitution, not only without the intelligence and experience which have been acquired by men like these, but absolutely shutting them out from us, excluding them from us, not seeking them at all, not availing ourselves of their experience and profound knowledge of the subject to any extent whatever. I say, Mr. President, that in the ordinary pursuits of human life such conduct as this Convention pursues on this question would be called the very height of folly and absurdity. When we desire to deal with a subject that is new to us in the ordinary experience of life, we seek the benefit of the intelligence and information of those who have trodden in the path in which we desire to walk, and who can give us the results of an accumulated experience. That is the ordinary rule that guides all intelligent men; and yet we, intelligent men, on this question of vast and overwhelming importance are shutting it out and excluding it from us altogether.

So much, Mr. President, by way of general remark. I say fearlessly to this Convention that any effort on the part of this Convention to write an iron law in this Constitution that shall go more than one step, will be the height of folly and infatuation. All that we can do is to come down to principle. That which we rest on solid principle, which the experience of mankind confesses to be principle, we may rely upon. The moment we step beyond that, to expediency, we step in the dark; and what the ruin may be that is to follow that step no human sagacity can predict.

Now, what step can we take? What has the experience of mankind shown of the great question which underlies this article? It has shown, with reference to human affairs, that the proper protection of society is to be found in a large, healthful, untrammelled competition. What matters it that men like Mr. Vanderbilt, of New York, or Mr. Astor, or others that might be mentioned, or Mr. A. T. Stewart, have been enabled to amass fortunes that run up to forty or fifty millions of dollars, without danger to a free people, while if such fortunes accumulate in the hands of a corporation gentlemen are filled with horror and suspicion, when they are not so when those fortunes are in the hands of an individual? Simply because society is protected by the law of a healthful competition. If an individual engages in business and charges an unreasonable price for his goods, we all know that some other party will go into that business and bring his price down, by the law of a healthful competition. If an individual deals unfairly, or with lack of integrity or justice in his transactions with his fellow-man, we have no fear of the result. Why? Because we know that side by side with him will spring up some other man of business who will be actuated by integrity and honor and high principle, and by a healthful competition he will remedy the unreasonable charges of the other. And I ask gentlemen to tell me what law of trade is there, what law of commerce is there, that does not apply with just the same force to a corporation that it does to an individual? Why is it that if a corporation deals unjustly, that if a corporation charges unreasonable prices or is oppressive upon the masses of the people, it is not at once brought to its proper place by the operation of the simple law of free and healthful competition.

What then do we want? How far can we go with safety? We can go with safety just so far as this, that we may write into our Constitution that it shall be the absolute right of the citizen to associate himself with his fellow-citizens and build a railroad or transporting line when he will, and where he will, and on what terms he will, consistent with the general safety of the public; so that if it be true that the Pennsylvania railroad company, or any other railroad company, fails to be just to the community or oppresses them with unfair and unreasonable charges, the injured community may associate its capitals together and may plant side by side with it a rival line that will destroy its unreasonable charges and bring it down to a reasonable state of things by reasonable, fair and healthy competition. Here is a panacea, and it is a panacea for all the ills that are at least supposed to afflict the State in this direction. A panacea is to be found in a constitutional provision that shall write into our fundamental law the law of the largest and the healthiest competition, so that when corporations fail to do their duty to the public, the public may have the same self-protecting power against their wrongs that it has against the wrongs that are inflicted upon it by anybody else. That far we can go, because that far experience has taught us that we are stepping upon the foundations of eternal truth and justice. But when we go a step further than that we are inflicting a wrong upon the community, and a wrong upon ourselves, or at least stepping in the dark when we cannot see the depth of the abyss into which we may be plunged.

I desire to say a few words in regard to the amendment of the gentleman from Lycoming, (Mr. Armstrong,) which is the more immediate question before the House. I have the greatest respect possible for my friend, but his amendment must, of necessity, fail to accomplish the purpose at which he aims. He asks this House if two individuals wish to ship from Chicago, one to Philadelphia and one to Pittsburg, why the man who is to have his goods carried to Pittsburg shall be required to pay as large a price as the man who desires to have his carried to Philadelphia, and he says to this House: "That thing is wrong; that thing is wrong in principle; that thing is manifestly unjust and unfair and unreasonable." So, at a hasty glance, it is; so, to an imperfect comprehension, a wrong seems to be wrapped up in that proposition; so, on the first statement of that proposition to an ordinary man, it is a gross and positive wrong; but is it so in point of fact? Let us see.

Chicago is a point of union for several competing lines, and these competing lines are emancipated from the control of the State of Pennsylvania. We cannot say to them: "You shall carry at a given figure." If it were possible to have a compact between the different States of the Union, whereby this law that we seek to write into our Constitution in the shape of the amendment of the gentleman from Lycoming would be written in the laws of other States through which these competing lines run, then I should not object to write it in here; but until you can accomplish that result, I will show you that it is altogether wrong and works out precisely the opposite of the consequence which the gentleman from Lycoming contemplates.

Let us see. An individual who desires to ship the same article to Philadelphia which another individual desires to ship to Pittsburg, and who is charged the same price for the Philadelphia shipment as is charged for the shipment to Pittsburg, has at Chicago the choice of several different lines by which he may ship, only one of which goes through the State of Pennsylvania. He says to the Pennsylvania railroad company: "If you will carry my article to the city of Philadelphia on the same terms that the New York Central railroad will carry it, I will give it to you." If the Pennsylvania railroad company does not carry that article on the same terms, the New York Central railroad carries it; Pennsylvania does not get it, and the freight is carried by the New York Central railroad, which takes it around to New York and sends it by water to Philadelphia and puts it down at the same price that would have been charged if the Pennsylvania railroad had carried it, and which is charged to the Pittsburg party.

Suppose the Pennsylvania railroad company refuse to carry it, is it any benefit to the Pittsburg party?

Is Pittsburg any gainer by reason of our refusal or of our inability to carry that article? Not in the slightest degree. The Pittsburg party has not received his freight any cheaper by reason of that circumstance. He has not been benefited one single iota by reason of it. He has had his commodity carried from Pittsburg to Chicago at a stipulated price, and he has not prevented that other commodity from being carried from Chicago to Philadelphia at the same price at which he gets his carried to Pittsburg. Nay, more, the Pittsburg man has been damaged by preventing the carriage per the other party to Philadelphia, because in case the Pennsylvania railroad company are able to carry that article from Chicago to Philadelphia, making any profit, no matter how small, it is gaining something toward a fair dividend for its stockholders, and to that extent it is relieving the burden of the railroad company which it has to lay upon its local freights in order to return to its stockholders that dividend on its capital which is their right, and to which their invested capital is fairly entitled.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. STEWART. I move that unanimous consent be given the gentleman to continue.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. CUYLER. I thank the House for its courtesy and will continue, very briefly, what I have to say.

This is a great practical question. I believe I understand it, and if I fail to demonstrate it to this House, it must be from my own incompetency and not the lack of truth in the propositions I desire to present.

Mr. FUNCK. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CUYLER. If the gentleman will allow me to follow my present current of thought, at the close I will answer any question he or any other gentleman may desire to ask me.

Mr. FUNCK. Very well.

Mr. CUYLER. In 1846 the State of Pennsylvania incorporated the Pennsylvania railroad company. So scarce was capital and so impoverished were our great cities that the city of Philadelphia alone—oppressing her inhabitants by this burden—had to subscribe five millions of dollars to build that road, and patriotic citizens went from door to door in the city of Philadelphia and solicited individual subscriptions to shares of stock from porters, clerks, nay from very servant-girls, to build that road. You said, you the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania said, in the charter of that company: "If you will build this road and put your money in it, you shall have liberty to charge a price not exceeding so much for each passenger and for each ton of freight which you may carry over that road." Thus the road was built. It was built with a grand and lofty purity which has not been surpassed in the establishment of any public work in the world. I utter these words and challenge denial as I say them. It was built in the interest of this Commonwealth, and when I point over the vast State studded over with prosperous cities and villages, to deserts that are now blossoming like the rose and the whole land covered with the fruitage of marvellous prosperity, I point to that which is conclusive proof that it has done that which it was established to do. Nay, more, Mr. President, sitting as it has been my fortune to do, alongside the men who have guided the destinies of that road, as a professional adviser, there are no words in this language which can overstate the profound conviction, which I utter from the bottom of my heart, of the purity, the dignity and the patriotism which have actuated those gentlemen in the administration and in the extension of that road.

I have to say, Mr. President, that within my personal knowledge the Pennsylvania railroad has always insisted upon the doctrine that the city of Philadelphia was fifty-nine miles nearer to the great west than the city of New York, and that no line could be built to the great west which did not cross our State, and which, therefore, was not bound to concede to our State that fact, that we were fifty-nine miles nearer to the great west than the city of New York was. And I say it as a fact within my knowledge, that in one year did the Pennsylvania railroad sacrifice $900,000 by carrying trade at less than cost until it broke down the weaker lines running from the city of New York that refused to acknowledge and submit to that great principle which has been a cardinal doctrine of that road in its administration always.

Now, this road has had in view as its cardinal duty always—I ask gentlemen to bear with me and to accept my statement of that in its broadest sense—this road has had in its view always the fact that its highest duty was to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and to the trade and the business of this Commonwealth. While it has reached out into the far west, and touched the Pacific upon the west and the Gulf upon the south, that it might bring the treasures of the nation within the bosom of our State and lay them here at the feet of our people to minister to their enterprise and promote their prosperity, it has gone beyond the boundaries of this State and taken trade from the west and from the south only when it could carry that trade at some profit and thereby be enabled to carry cheaper for the citizens of the Commonwealth herself. And as a practical result to-day, confessedly the Pennsylvania railroad company carries the local trade of this State at an average of only one-half the price that her charter permits her to charge. It is because of this trade from beyond the boundaries of our State, it is because of the profit that she has been able to earn from the trade outside our boundaries, that she has been able to disburden the local trade of Pennsylvania to the extent of one-half the charge which the law permits her to impose upon it.

What then are you proposing to do? You are proposing to say to the Pennsylvania railroad company, "you shall give up your freight which comes from beyond the boundaries of the State." What then? Why, as a matter of course she must put up her charges upon her local trade nearer to the maximum price that her charter permits her to demand in order that she may earn a fair return for the capital she has invested. And I warn gentlemen that just in proportion as they shall burden that extra-State trade by imposing the local charges upon it, will they destroy the prosperity of this Commonwealth by taking away from it the trade that comes from beyond its boundaries and by planting upon the local trade of the State an increased and heavier burden; for I say to gentlemen, every dollar that you take off the extra

State trade of the road you impose upon the local trade.

Now, I ask gentlemen to trust something to the purity and the integrity and the wisdom of the men that govern that great enterprise. I ask them to see in the vast prosperity of this Commonwealth and in its progress and its glories, the city of Pittsburgh on its western boundary and all these similar villages that stud our whole State over—I ask them to see in all this some proof that the men who govern this enterprise are above small and sordid and selfish motives and do grasp the interests of the whole Commonwealth and seek to promote them. I do ask gentlemen here to pause and consider, and not blindly shut their eyes to the experience that these gentlemen have accumulated, driving blindly over all that is before them, adopt a policy the effects of which they can but imperfectly comprehend themselves and which men of so much larger grasp and greater experience see will be simply ruinous to this Commonwealth.

Therefore, Mr. President, I entreat the House to vote down the section bodily. There is no amendment which you can write in it that will not work mischief and probably be ruinous to this great Commonwealth. I entreat you not to say to this city of Philadelphia, which has put $5,000,000 of her capital into this enterprise, I entreat you not to say to this great and prosperous Commonwealth, that you will blight and paralyze the prosperity which meets your eyes everywhere, and which has been the result of the very system that you are seeking by this section to strike down and destroy.

Now, Mr. President, I have been betrayed into lengthy remarks that I had not dreamed of when I rose, but I could not but express the feeling that has been pent up in my bosom for days as I have listened to the discussion of this question. I not only feel, but I know, that this Convention walks, so far as this great subject is concerned, along the crumbling edge of an abyss profound, whose depth no human eye can measure and into which they will plunge the Commonwealth and be overwhelmed. I ask this Convention not to drive the chariot of the sun unskilled in such an enterprise. I ask this Convention to say: "We will go just so far as experience has shown us sound principle lies, and we will not speculate or substitute our own crude thoughts and fancies for solid principle." I ask this Convention to say that just as the law of individual enterprise is, that if it be unreasonable, if it be oppressive, if it be unjust, competition is the remedy that will come to our relief, just so it is with regard to corporations, and that all we can do on this great question is to strike out the article as we have written it, the whole article as we have written it, and put in its place a provision that shall in the largest, in the broadest, in the fullest and most unrestrained way arm the citizens of this Commonwealth with a power to build railroads and canals when, where and as they please, so that under the fair and healthy law of competition they may break down and destroy the power of any corporation that forgets its duty to the people that gave it birth and oppresses the interests which it was created to nourish, cherish and promote.

I thank the House for the indulgence they have given me.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Before the gentleman takes his seat, I should like to make a single suggestion. I should like to know from him how the interests of the railroad company can be injured if they get one hundred dollars for carrying a certain amount of freight to Philadelphia and get the same one hundred dollars for cutting it off at Pittsburgh, three hundred miles short of Philadelphia.

Mr. CUYLER. I will answer the gentleman. The treasury of the company is injured by this circumstance: If they did not earn the small profit they made on that which they carried through to Philadelphia, they would have to charge against that which was carried to Pittsburgh in addition to the one hundred dollars, the amount of profit they made on the carriage to Philadelphia. In other words, they would have had to charge the Pittsburgh man say one hundred and five dollars for that which they did carry for him for only one hundred dollars. That is the answer. Compel the company to give up the profit, however small, it earns from competing points beyond the State, and you compel it to add at least an equivalent amount to the burthen placed on local trade. You withdraw from the commerce of our State and the industries of our people the articles which would be brought into our State from places beyond its limits and you subtract from the revenues of the Commonwealth the proportionate amount of tax on gross receipts, or to be more accurate, you take thus much off from citizens of other States and place them on our own.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. President: It is with great reluctance that I rise this morning to say what I have to say about this question. I am the more reluctant because it so happens that in placing myself on the record with regard to this question, I follow closely upon the gentleman from Philadelphia, (Mr. Cuyler,) who has so enthusiastically and so earnestly defined his position on the subject, as he has so often done before.

I am not a member of the Railroad Committee. I do not stand here this morning to explain any of their actions. I cannot account for any of the impulses in their breast which led them to the conclusions which they have reported to us. I stand here as a citizen of Pennsylvania, representing a portion of her people, and seeking as best I can with the convictions of my conscience and with such promptings on the subject as my judgment may furnish, to discharge my duty towards those people.

Now, sir, had one happened in this Hall casually this morning, and had not listened to all of this debate, after hearing the earnest and impassioned appeal of the gentleman from Philadelphia, he would have supposed that here were assembled a body of men who were desirous of affixing upon the corporations of Pennsylvania a provision which must be simply ruinous. The burden of his speech has been as though this Convention sought to do that which must forever nullify the objects for which these corporations were created, to affix upon them such restrictions that hereafter they could not exist. I contend that that has been the burden of his argument, because if what he says is true, the great corporations of Pennsylvania, if this provision should be incorporated in the Constitution, could never exist.

He has said that that committee should have invited Mr. Thomson and Mr. Scott to attend its deliberations. Perhaps they should have done so. Had I been a member of the committee I would gladly have seen those gentlemen present. But, sir, they were not so invited, and I am not here either to apologize or explain. The gentleman from Philadelphia says that in mentioning those names he feels an "emotion" of some kind which he has not explained, but an emotion, are we to presume, which influences him in the course that he takes here? Now, sir, I am not impelled by any such emotion. No man feels a more respectful regard for those distinguished names than myself, but the name of no one man or set of men impels me to the discharge of my duty when I come to discharge it in the light of my convictions and in view of my responsibility.

What do we find? We find in regard to every section of this article that the gentleman is opposed to it. Not one of them finds any sympathy in his bosom; and were we to consult his desires, were we to vote as he has uniformly voted up to this time, and as I presume he will vote to the close, we would not have in the Constitution of our State a single article in regard to railroad corporations. Is this due to the particular "emotion" which the gentleman experienced on naming such gentlemen as Mr. Thomson and Mr. Scott? I presume if the gentleman had happened to have experienced a similar emotion when other articles were under consideration, the State of Pennsylvania, so far as he is concerned, would have no Constitution at all.

Mr. President, I entirely sympathize and agree with all that the gentleman says about the greatness of the Pennsylvania railroad company, not forgetting that there are other corporations that are likewise great, though not so great. I sympathize with feelings of pride with all that may be said in praise of that company so far as its grandeur and its power, considered as mere power, are concerned. But it becomes our duty as citizens of Pennsylvania, as members of a Constitutional Convention, to remember that there may be even in the State of Pennsylvania a power too great, a power which her citizens should not permit to continue, or, if continued, to continue under such salutary restrictions as that that power shall not be dangerous to the rights of the people and the sovereignty of the State itself. Who dare gainsay this proposition? I say to controvert it is to announce that which is hostile to the very principle of our government, and which, if not arrested, will sap the foundations of our State government itself. I say we must rise to the occasion. We must see to it by our votes here that there shall not be, as it were, an imperium in imperio: that there shall not be a sovereignty within this State drawing its life and its support from the people which shall rival, yea, rise superior to the power of the people themselves. I hold that any gentleman here who contends otherwise does not manifest that patriotism which he should as a citizen of Pennsylvania.

But, sir, to come more particularly to the question before us, as I have but a few minutes allotted to me, I regard the proposition of the gentleman from Lycoming (Mr. Armstrong) as not at all meeting the requirements of the case. I regard it as an insidious proposition, one which while on its face it might not seem to suit the railroad companies, would in its operation be prejudicial to the interests of the companies themselves as well as to the interests of the people. I have not sufficient time to enter into any elaborate argument to prove that that is so, but I think a careful examination of it will show that that would be its operation, because it would not furnish the remedy which the people desire, and at the same time it might so interfere with the foreign or outside operations of the railroad companies and so cripple them that they would not be able to transport freight and passengers in the manner that they should for their own benefit and for the accommodation and benefit of the people themselves.

There is another objection that I have to it. It will be observed that, by the language of the amendment, it applies to discrimination in freights in the same direction. It does not prevent discrimination on freights which are returning in an opposite direction; I mean between a schedule of rates for freight carried eastward and a schedule of rates for freights carried westward—or northward and southward. Let me illustrate it. Suppose that persons who are engaged in shipping coal in the bituminous region desire to send the coal to Philadelphia or intermediate points; they are charged a certain rate. Then those who are engaged in the shipping of anthracite coal in the eastern region are permitted to ship coal in various directions. In shipping coal westward, if the railroad companies are not prevented from discriminating, they can ship anthracite coal to the bituminous regions at so much less rates as entirely to destroy the home business—the local trade of the bituminous operators. I give that as an illustration, and that illustration is founded upon fact. I stated before, on this floor, that bituminous coal, which had been shipped for many years for a distance of twenty miles, and the operators enjoying the benefit of a home market, was last year interfered with by the shipment of anthracite coal two hundred and twenty miles off, so that the trade of the operators in bituminous coal was taken from them, although the coal which was put in the market in competition against them was brought a distance of two hundred miles further. An evil of that kind the amendment of the gentleman from Lycoming would not reach.

In regard to the amendment of the gentleman from Allegheny (Mr. T. H. B. Patterson) as a substitute for the section, whilst in some particulars it is not as I would have it, because I do not know that in all respects it protects the corporations themselves to the extent I should like to see them protected, and because also it does not furnish that adequate protection to the shippers in the State of Pennsylvania which I would have. Yet in view of the great difficulty, in view of the various conflicting interests, in view of the exceeding embarrassment which all gentlemen have experienced who have attempted to furnish any proposition to meet the difficulties of the case, I am willing at this stage of the question to accept that amendment.

There is this fact to be remembered in the determination of this question: That the settlement of it as regards corporations bears no sort of analogy to the settlement of questions of trade and commerce between private individuals. It must be remembered that railroad corporations obtain their life and existence from the State, and the State has the right to affix to that corporate existence such terms and conditions as she sees proper to impose; whereas, so far as the rights of private individuals are concerned, they are left to exercise them as they may see proper, and as they may be legitimately affected by the laws of trade, and therefore there is no analogy in the two cases. Gentlemen are incorrect when they say that the same rule should be applied to the transporting companies of the State that is applied to the private individual who is engaged in trade or business. Corporations have not all the rights of individuals, nor individuals all the privileges of corporations. Therefore, when this constitutional provision requires that there shall be certain enactments which may seem to be rigid and binding in their character, it is not for the professed friends of corporations to complain of there being an iron rule, because it is only under the effect and power of some rule of that kind that transporting companies are or should be permitted to transport passengers and freight, and otherwise perform their functions as corporations and as servants of the public.

Now, sir, I have not desired to detain the Convention unnecessarily, but I was desirous of calling the attention of the Convention to the amendment of the gentleman from Lycoming. I hope that amendment will be voted down, as I said before, because it does not meet the case either as the railroad companies would have it, on one hand, or as the people would have it, on the other. The amendment of the gentleman from Allegheny, whilst faulty in some particulars, and whilst not meeting the requirements of the case to that extent that all right and fair-minded men should desire, I am perfectly willing to accept, in view of the difficulties surmounting the question; and when the vote is taken I shall support it.

MR. CLARK. Mr. President: I understand the amendment of the gentleman from Lycoming (Mr. Armstrong) to be the question now under consideration; am I right in that?

THE PRESIDENT pro tem. That is the question now before the House.

MR. CLARK. Then I propose an amendment to that amendment.

THE PRESIDENT pro tem. The pending question is an amendment to an amendment, and the motion is not in order.

MR. CLARK. I will then suggest an amendment or modification which I think the mover of the amendment to the amendment will accept when it is stated.

The proposition of the gentleman from Lycoming (Mr. Armstrong) provides:

"That persons and property transported by any such company shall be delivered at intermediate stations within the State at charges not exceeding the charges for the transportation of persons and property of the same class in the same direction to any more distant station."

What are we to understand by an intermediate station? All stations between the termini of any railroad might be called intermediate. And I think that would be the reasonable interpretation of the term intermediate in this amendment. If this is a fair construction, and I think it is, the amendment proposes that "persons and property transported by any such company shall be delivered at all intermediate stations, (that is stations situate between the termini of the road) within the State at charges not exceeding," &c., &c.

This would cover and prohibit any discriminations against all freight and passengers to be delivered at such intermediate stations; but what of freight and passengers from these intermediate stations to be transported to the termini of the road? All this class of persons and freight is unprovided for by this amendment. I therefore suggest as a modification of this amendment to strike out the word "intermediate" and insert the word "any." The amendment will then read:

"Persons and property transported by any such company shall be delivered at any station within the State at charges not exceeding the charges for the transportation of persons and property of the same class in the same direction, to any more distant station."

MR. ARMSTRONG. I have listened with much interest to the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana, (Mr. Clark,) and I believe that this criticism is well founded. I think it does enlarge the operation of the section within the intention wholly, and I will therefore accept his modification.

THE PRESIDENT pro tem. The amendment to the amendment will be so modified. The question is on the amendment to the amendment, as modified.

MR. COCHRAN. Mr. President: I have not spoken on this amendment and am very reluctant to say a word on it now, but I feel impelled to do so by a sense of duty.

The gentleman from Philadelphia, (Mr. Cuyler,) who discoursed so ably on this question to-day, commenced his address by a reference to the action of the Railroad Committee. He censured that committee for not having called before them certain gentlemen who, he supposed, would be able to give them the information which they did not possess, and he said they were inexperienced, however upright in their intentions, and they should have called for such assistance.

Now, sir, what did the gentleman's conclusion amount to on that subject? What benefit should we have derived if we had done what he has suggested? Why, almost in the next succeeding sentence he went on to tell us that those gentlemen could have given us no information that would have helped us in this case; that the gentlemen to whom he referred had considered this subject, and had said that it was so difficult a question that they were not able to comprehend it in all its details themselves; and at last the conclusion was arrived at in the minds of those gentlemen, and in the mind of the learned gentleman from Philadelphia, that there was nothing that this Convention could do, or ought to do, or was competent to do, except simply to pass a single section allowing a general railroad law to be enacted by which every man or company or association of men might make railroads where they pleased. Now, sir, if it comes to that, whatever fault might have been imputed to the committee, if they were justly chargeable with such, we could have derived no benefit from such consultations as he has suggested here. I do not think that committee were called upon or required to enter into any such consultation. The question here was a question of principle, a question which involved the interests of the people of Pennsylvania, and which sprang out of the fact that the very gentleman whom he wanted us to call into council had imposed the discriminations of which we had complained, and it was not to be expected that those gentlemen would either admit that they had done anything wrong or that there was any remedy for that evil. If those gentlemen had desired to be heard before that committee as other gentlemen requested to be heard before other committees of this Convention, they would unquestionably have been heard, and heard with respect, the respect to which their position and their experience entitled them, but no such application was made, and the committee made no such application to them, and the reason and the futility of doing so are very apparent from the conclusion to which the gentleman from Philadelphia himself arrived in his speech.

It is very easy to say that a panacea for all these evils which we endure is to be found in a general railroad law. It is not so easy, though, when you come to ask an investment of millions of money for the purpose of raising that competition which the gentleman seems to consider the panacea for all these ills. The corporations of this State, it must be remembered, are the creatures of the State, possessing special privileges from the State, of large aggregated wealth, with great advantages and established privileges; and now simply to say that you are to put the community at large to the necessity, in order to remedy an evil which they endure from these creatures of their own making, of seeking around to find capital for the purposes of investment, and for building up an opposition to another company, for instance, which may have one hundred millions of capital and one hundred millions of bonded debt, is to impose upon the people of this State a burden which certainly this Convention never ought to be called upon to impose, in order that they may be saved from unjust discrimination and unjust rates in this matter of the transportation of their goods.

Mr. President, there is no analogy between the growth of individual and corporate wealth, such as has been drawn here to-day. I have heard no man complain of the wealth which grows up in the hands of individuals. Happily under our institutions we have no laws of entail and primogeniture. As sure as a man dies, as was said by one of the judges of the Supreme Court in this State, in a well-known case, so surely his estates go into the orphans' court. I care not how rich any individual in the State becomes; on the contrary, I am always rejoiced to see industry and enterprise rewarded by the accumulation of that material wealth which is their proper and just reward; but, sir, the aggregation of wealth in incorporated companies is a very different and a very distinct thing. It grows out of special privileges conferred; it is subject to no such disposition at stated times; there is no death to your immortal corporation, and there being no such thing, there is no distribution of this wealth; it remains in the corporation, however it may vary in its distribution among individuals. The corporation is the entity, and the wealth abides there and the power which it confers remains with it, and there is a clear distinction and there is a just analogy between the cases.

Mr. President, I have said before and I repeat that the people of this Commonwealth do complain, and it is apparent from all that has been said here by every gentleman, except one gentleman from the city of Philadelphia that there do exist these causes of complaint. There is no one gentleman in this Convention who has yet risen to say that there is no such cause of complaint, except the gentleman from Philadelphia, and I apprehend that with all his ability—and it is not disputed—the views of that gentleman must largely be referred to his peculiar associations and the relations in which he stands; and when I say this I say it with no disrespect, for every man's opinions and views are colored by the circumstances in which he lives. We are not apt to look with disfavor upon the things which we do ourselves or the means by which we undertake to accomplish our purpose.

Now, sir, is this Convention determined that it will do nothing in this regard for the relief of the people of this State? The objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Lycoming was struck at once and directly by the interrogation, as I understood it, of the gentleman from Franklin (Mr. Sharpe.) I understood it to be admitted by the gentleman from Lycoming that his amendment would not prevent such a discrimination against the people of this State, as that the labor, the manufacturing productions, the enterprise, the produce of every kind of other States, might not be brought through here at such rates as would discriminate against and even destroy the enterprise and the industry of our own people. It would not prevent the manufacturer of Chicago, as the illustration was, from bringing his goods to Philadelphia, past the very door of the manufacturer of Pittsburg, and putting them in this market at a lower rate for the expense of transportation than it would place the same articles for the manufacturer in Pittsburg in this market.

Now, sir, any amendment which has that practical effect never ought to receive the sanction of this body. What we ask is simple justice; what we ask is fairness of dealing in this matter as regards the citizens of this State. We do not say that we can come down here and lay a line of strict and accurate demarcation. That is not our idea at all. It is not practicable, I admit, to do that. At the best, you can only approximate it, and at the very best this section and the amendment of the gentleman from Allegheny are but an approximation to the right rule. But it is necessary in a matter of this kind that there should be some play given, that there should be some room for the great transporting corporations of the Commonwealth to arrange their business within certain limits; and the practical limit here defined is that the citizen of the State shall not be put at a disadvantage in comparison with the citizens of other States, and the citizens within the State shall not be injuriously discriminated against as between themselves. That is the whole principle involved in this. It is justice, justice as nearly as you can attain, not exact in all that we should do if it lay in our power, as I apprehend, for the people of the State, but it is all that we can do. We can approach the mark no nearer than that.

Sir, I shall not undertake, and I should not, I suppose, be able to do so, to reply to all the arguments of the gentleman from Philadelphia; but I did want to bring distinctly before the members of this Convention these particular provisions of this section; and I do not think, however ably the argument may be put, as ably as any argument ever was put by any advocate for his clients in any court, that this Convention is willing to consent to the course of policy suggested by the gentleman from Philadelphia, and to surrender everything, without any check, to the corporations of the State, give no relief, whatever, to the people, and pay no attention to their call, because, with regard to this matter, the people have called upon this Convention to act. This report is not the mere spontaneous growth of the Committee on Railroads and Canals. They did not act merely upon their own inward consciousness in preparing something of this kind for the purpose of bringing it before the consideration of this Convention, to manifest that they had a miraculous understanding of all the workings of this great subject. They did not even, in the most particular of these propositions, deserve the credit of originality. As to some of the language, it is an exact copy of that which has been furnished to them by others. They accepted it, because they believed it was intelligible, and because it was as near an approximation as they could get to the exact mark of justice, and with that view they have presented it to this Convention, in the earnest hope that it will meet its approbation and be adopted by it.

Mr. HOWARD. I regret that we are compelled to submit a proposition of this magnitude and importance to the people of this Commonwealth in so small a Convention. It is a little too small, I should think, for practical purposes, and I am afraid it is too small to act with safety for the people of this State. I have listened to the very extraordinary argument of the delegate from Philadelphia, (Mr. Cuyler,) and it certainly was very eloquent. It ought to have been eloquent because a portion of it was expressing his own particular gratitude to the gentleman to whom, I have no doubt, he is under very great obligations; and perhaps some of the rest of us would be equally grateful if placed in the same circumstances. But the butt-end of the argument, and all there was in it, was this: That if we dared to do justice to the people of Pennsylvania, then they would somehow or other be compelled to fall back upon the original rights conferred in their charter and in some way they would have to crush out our trade in order that they might still compete for the trade of other States. There may be something in that argument that looks as if it amounted to something, but it so happens that there is nothing in it at all. I hold in my hand the report of the Pennsylvania railroad company, sworn to by J. Edgar Thomson, in which he swears that the cost of the carriage of freight is so much per ton per mile, and that at their very lowest rates they make thirty-three per cent., and that is certainly enough.

MR. CUYLER. Will the gentleman pardon an interruption. That thirty-three per cent. has to be charged with all the interest on the investment of the company.

MR. HOWARD. I understand that, but still it is a pretty large profit. If any man engaged in any business manages his affairs with any sort of prudence, out of thirty-three per cent. he ought to meet his expenses and have a little over.

MR. CUYLER. That only realizes a net ten per cent. to the stockholders.

MR. HOWARD. I understand that, too; but I say that at this margin of profit on the lowest rate of freight carried by them they ought to realize and do realize a handsome dividend on every share of stock they have issued, and yet every time we come here and ask for justice we are met by the threat, "if you dare to do justice to the people, we will retaliate upon them by going back to our charter." It happens that so far as the main line is concerned, they cannot do it. I have read here the act of Assembly that was passed when they got the tonnage tax repealed. There was then a new deal so far as their charges upon the main line are concerned, and they expressly agreed in that act of Assembly to what they call now one of the most obnoxious features of this section, namely: That they shall not charge for a shorter distance more than they do for a greater. That is expressly stipulated in that act of Assembly, and they signed it as a part of the new contract, and filed it in the office of the Secretary of the Commonwealth.

Here it is laid down in this sworn report of the president of the Pennsylvania railroad company that the actual cost of carrying a ton of freight is a fraction less than seven-eighths of a cent. Why, their average charge, with all this competition, is over a cent and one-third, and that is for through freight, and they charge more than that on their local freights, and they say that if we ask them for justice they will be compelled to retaliate upon the people of the Commonwealth. It is not true in point of fact. According to their own showing, they can make on their own rate thirty-three per cent. over and above the cost.

But they say that they must make their discriminations on account of the through passengers. I want to look at that. I have not had the report for 1872 but I have for 1871, and I find that in that year the Pennsylvania railroad carried passengers to the number of four million six hundred and ninety-nine thousand. How many outsiders, for whom such eloquent appeals are made, do you suppose were included in that number? It has been told us that the people of Pennsylvania are to be destroyed for the sake of this outside passenger trade. I have already said that the entire number of passengers carried over the Pennsylvania railroad company was nearly five millions, and out of this number about one hundred and eighty-six thousand were outsiders, not one outsider to twenty-six Pennsylvanians. And these outsiders are to have more favorable terms than the people of the State, and the oppressive discriminations under which we have labored are to be continued in order that these one hundred and eighty-six thousand outsiders may be carried at less rates! There is no necessity for this state of things. This railroad company can honestly carry the people of this State and of other States for a great deal less money than was originally stipulated as the maximum in their charter. I maintain here that this question does not stand upon the charter as far as that road is concerned, and if it did, I hold that the charter can never be used by the road as an instrument of fraud to crush the industry of Pennsylvania, and it would be so used if they are to be permitted to still keep up the maximum charges fixed in the charter for Pennsylvania passengers and Pennsylvania freights and then to bring New Jersey, Ohio and New York passengers and freights into Pennsylvania at rates so low as to crush out the local industry of this State. Whenever they do that, I have no doubt the courts will step in and say: "This people of Pennsylvania gave you life and vitality and they gave you all the rights you have and you cannot use those rights to crush them." It would never be tolerated.

Then what remains of the gentleman's argument? There is no argument in it. There is no necessity for it. They can carry their freights and passengers at a reasonable price, and they can still make a fair profit and they can do justice to our people, and that is all we ask. We only ask that they shall not discriminate against the people of Pennsylvania. Who would have supposed that we should have been compelled to listen to an able, eloquent and ingenious speech, of very considerable length, to prove that that would ruin the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, a proposition that if the railroad companies should not be allowed to discriminate against the industries of the people of this Commonwealth, the people of the State will be ruined! Why, Mr. President, the man that makes such an argument as that must have been prompted by some very peculiar arrangement. I myself cannot understand it. It is perfectly right that a man should be grateful; it is perfectly right that he should eulogize Mr. Scott and Mr. Thomson and set them up just as high as he pleases; but there are some people in the State who believe that while Mr. Thomson and Mr. Scott may have done much for Philadelphia, they have done injustice to other parts of the Commonwealth; that they have discriminated against them and stricken down their industries, and they know it. Why, sir, the people of Philadelphia to-day, if they would vote for this proposition, would be largely benefited in bringing here the coal that makes the gas which lights their city, for they would get it at a far cheaper rate.

This Convention has already struck out of one of the sections of this article the very important clause that the officers of any railroad company shall not be engaged in mining or manufacturing articles to be transported on roads of which they are officers. Yet we all know that the gas coal that comes to Philadelphia is entirely in the hands of a monopoly. No man west of the mountains can engage in this mining business and compete with the gas coal monopoly, because the officers of the Pennsylvania railroad company have possession of that trade, and possession of the transportation. They can make their own special rates to suit themselves, and they furnish themselves with facilities and with their own cars which no one else can procure. Yet in the face of all these facts, with this industry absolutely prostrate and monopolized by these men, and in the hands of the "ring" men of the Pennsylvania railroad company, we are told that if we adopt the simple proposition here proposed to do justice to the great body of the people, it will be the ruin of the Commonwealth. It ought to be the ruin of some of these monopolies, at least so far as to bring them down to an equality with other men. That is all we ask, nothing more, nothing less, than that the railroad companies shall not discriminate against the people of this Commonwealth.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I now modify my proposed amendment to the amendment by striking out all after the word "thereof," and inserting:

"Passengers and property transported by any such company shall be delivered at any station within the State at charges not exceeding the charges for the transportation of persons and property of the same class in the same direction to any more distant station."

Mr. T. H. B. PATTERSON. I wish to call attention to the fact that this amendment to the amendment leaves out entirely all that which relates to drawbacks and special rates, and does not provide for excursion or commutation tickets at all.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I was about to remark that the subject of drawbacks was covered by the section, and that part of it relating to commutation tickets might be added if any gentleman desired it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, ten members rising to second the call.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. I want to know after the remark of the delegate from Lycoming what is the exact state of the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The amendment to the amendment will be read again.

The CLERK. It is proposed to add these words:

"And no special rates or drawbacks shall, either directly or indirectly, be allowed, except excursion and commutation tickets."

Mr. HARRY WHITE. Does the gentleman from Lycoming adopt that as part of his amendment?

Mr. COCHRAN. I ask that the roll may be called to determine whether there is a quorum present.

Mr. EDWARDS. The yeas and nays will determine it.

Mr. BOYD. I move an adjournment.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What I propose to add to my amendment is:

"But commutation tickets to passengers may be issued as heretofore, and reasonable extra rates within the limits of the charter may be made in charges for any distance not exceeding fifty miles."

Mr. COCHRAN. I do not know now the exact terms of the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Clerk, for information, will read the entire amendment of the delegate from Lycoming.

The CLERK. The amendment to the amendment is to strike out all after the word "thereof" and insert:

"Persons and property transported by any such company shall be delivered at any station within the State at charges not exceeding the charges for the transportation of persons and property of the same class in the same direction to any more distant station; but commutation tickets to passengers may be issued as heretofore, and reasonable extra rates within the limits of the charter may be made in charges for any distance not exceeding fifty miles."

Mr. COCHRAN. I understand there is nothing about drawbacks in it. I should like to appeal to the Convention to adjourn. The House is thin and it is not fair to take the question in its present condition.

Mr. CUYLER. I quite agree with the gentleman from York. I hope the Convention will adjourn, and adjourn until September.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the amendment.

Mr. T. H. B. PATTERSON. A call of the House was asked for before the yeas and nays were ordered. I insist on a call of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The yeas and nays will determine whether there is a quorum present or not. The Clerk will call the names of delegates.

The CLERK proceeded to call the roll on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MANTOR [when his name was called.] I am paired on this question with the gentleman from Dauphin, (Mr. Lamberton,) who was opposed to the section, and I in favor of it.

The CLERK resumed and concluded the call of the roll.

Mr. CUYLER [after having voted in the negative.] I desire to change my vote and to vote for the amendment, not because I agree with the amendment, but because I think it better than the section as originally written. Then I propose to vote against the section. Therefore I ask leave to change my vote.

Mr. T. H. B. PATTERSON. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Did the gentleman vote in mistake?

Mr. CUYLER. I cannot say that I did, but I would prefer to make that change.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. If the gentleman voted in mistake, he has the right to change his vote.

Mr. CUYLER. I cannot conscientiously say that I voted in mistake, but I think it would be wiser to vote for the amendment because I think it is better than the section.

Mr. DARLINGTON. If the gentleman voted under any misapprehension of the effect of his vote, he has the right to change.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I should like to inquire whether we have a rule prohibiting members from changing their votes. Under the general parliamentary law any member has an absolute right to change his vote at any time before the result is announced. In the Legislature by special rule we have no change of vote, but I do not think that rule prevails here.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. I think the gentleman from Columbia is correct, and that the delegate has a right to change his vote.

Mr. COCHRAN. It certainly has been the practice hitherto in this body not to allow the change of a vote unless where a delegate voted under a misapprehension.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. It will not change the result, and I think the delegate may change his vote.

The CLERK again called the name of Mr. Cuyler.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. I rise to a question of order, because this may become an exceedingly important matter. ["No." "No."] I claim my privilege of raising the question of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. What is the question of order?

Mr. HARRY WHITE. My question of order is that the delegate has not a right to change his vote unless he states that he voted under a misapprehension of the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Will the delegate turn to the rule wherein that is laid down?

Mr. LILLY. Rule thirty-six.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. I will read it:

"On the call of the yeas and nays, one of the secretaries shall read the names of the delegates after they have been called, and no delegate shall be permitted to change his vote, unless he at that time declares that he voted under a mistake of the question."

I raise the question of order.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. President: My question is answered. I did not know that we had adopted the rule which prevails in the Legislature on this subject.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. It is the common parliamentary practice.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Under this rule—

The Chair pro tem. The Chair decides that the delegate cannot change his vote.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I would suggest to the Chair that it is after the names have been called. Until that time it is entirely within the discretion of members. The rules say: "One of the secretaries shall read the names of the delegates after they have been called, and no delegates shall be permitted," &c.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. I understand the question to have been decided.

Mr. CUYLER. I will not make any change. I learn that there are other gentlemen whose votes were somewhat affected by mine, and it would perhaps be hardly right that I should make the change. I therefore withdraw my request.

The result was then announced as follows:

YEAS.

Messrs. Ainey, Armstrong, Barclay, Bigler, Black, Chas. A., Boyd, Brodhead, Brown, Buckalew, Carter, Clark, Corbett, Cronmiller, Curry, Darlington, Edwards, Elliott, Fell, Fulton, Hall, Lilly, MacConnell, McCulloch, Mann, Niles, Purman, Purviance, Samuel A., Reed, Andrew, Simpson, Struthers, Walker and White, J. W. F.—32.

NAYS.

Messrs. Achenbach, Alricks, Baer, Bailly, (Perry,) Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Bidle, Bullitt, Calvin, Campbell, Carey, Chureh, Cochran, Curtin, Cuyler, De France, Ellis, Ewing, Finney, Funck, Gilpin, Guthrie, Horton, Howard, Kaine, Landis, Lawrence, M'Murray, Newlin, Patterson, D. W., Patterson, T. H. B., Patton, Reynolds, Rooke, Sharpe, Smith, H. G., Smith, Wm. H., Temple, Turrell, White, David N., and White, Harry,—40.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

ABSENT—Messrs. Addicks, Andrews, Baker, Bannan, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Beebe, Black, J. S., Bowman, Broomall, Cassidy, Collins, Corson, Craig, Dallas, Davis, Dodd, Dunning, Gibson, Green, Hanna, Harvey, Hay, Hazzard, Hemphill, Heverin, Hunsicker, Knight, Lamberton, Lear, Littleton, Long, MacVeagh, McCamant, McClean, Mantor, Metzger, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Palmer, G. W., Palmer, H. W., Parsons, Porter, Pughe, Purviance, John N., Read, John R., Ross, Runk, Russell, Smith, Henry W., Stanton, Stewart, Van Reed, Wetherill, J. M., Wetherill, John Price, Wherry, Woodward, Worrell, Wright and Meredith, President—61.

Mr. COCHRAN. I move that the Convention adjourn.

Mr. CUYLER. Having voted with the majority, I now move to reconsider the vote on the amendment just voted on.

Mr. TEMPLE. I second the motion.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. I submit that a motion to adjourn was made.

Mr. COCHRAN. I moved that the Convention adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at eleven o'clock and fifty-eight minutes, A. M.) the Convention adjourned until Monday next, at ten o'clock A. M.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTIETH DAY.

MONDAY, July 14, 1873.

The Convention met at ten o'clock A. M., Hon. John H. Walker, President pro tem., in the chair.

Prayer by Rev. J. W. Curry.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

Mr. S. A. PURVIANCE asked and obtained leave of absence for Mr. Darlington for to-day.

Mr. CLARK asked and obtained leave of absence for Mr. Metzger for to-day.

PROPOSED RECESS.

Mr. D. N. WHITE. I offer the following resolution, and ask that it be laid on the table:

Resolved, That when all the articles adopted in committee of the whole shall have passed second reading the Convention shall adjourn to meet again on the 15th of September, at ten o'clock A. M.

Resolved, That articles passed on second reading be arranged in their proper order by the Committee on Revision and printed in pamphlet form, leaded pica type, with a broad margin, on sized paper, and three copies sent to each member as soon as possible after the adjournment.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The resolution will lie on the table.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Mr. NEWLIN. I call up a resolution which was offered by me on the 28th of March, and which is now on second reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The resolution will be read.

The CLERK read as follows:

Resolved, That rule twenty-nine be amended by adding a standing committee of fourteen, to be called the Executive Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on proceeding to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. NEWLIN. That has laid over one day under the rules, and I believe is now on second reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Still it must first be taken up. It is for the House to say whether it will proceed to consider it or not. The question is, will the Convention agree to proceed to the consideration of the resolution?

The motion was not agreed to.

INVITATION TO ALTOONA.

Mr. CURRY. I have received a communication which I desire to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The communication will be received and read.

The CLERK read as follows:

CITY OF ALTOONA,
Office of President City Council. }
July 11, 1873. }

Hon. J. W. CURRY, Member of the Constitutional Convention, Philadelphia:

DEAR SIR:—At a regular meeting of the common council of this city, held July seventh, the following resolution, offered by Mr. Samuel Lloyd, was unanimously adopted, viz:

Resolved, That the Hon. J. W. Curry, our member of the Constitutional Convention, be instructed to request the members of that Convention to visit our mountain city previous to their final adjournment.

Certified to be a correct copy of the resolution.

Attest:

T. B. PATTON,
Secretary.

Mr. CURRY. I ask that the communication be laid on the table.

Mr. BOYD. I move that the invitation be accepted.

Mr. CURRY. Let it lie on the table.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I would like to ask the delegate from Blair what they wish us to come for, whether to hold our sessions there or only on a friendly visit?

Mr. BOYD. If it is on a visit, I should like to go.

Mr. CURRY. The city council of Altoona extend an invitation to this body to meet and hold its sessions there. They do this in good faith. I am sure I can say that they will be willing to do anything in their power for the comfort and convenience of the members of the Convention, in case they accept the invitation contained in the communication which has been read. So far as room is concerned, I think we could furnish a very comfortable hall there, and, so far as a place of boarding is concerned, I presume a majority of the Convention could make it convenient to board at the Cresson house, at Cresson Springs, which is only about fourteen miles away.

Mr. BOYD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CURRY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOYD. Do you mean that this is an invitation to go there and spend a day, or to go there and deliberate and finish our work? Which is it?

Mr. CURRY. I will answer the gentleman. It will be for the Convention to decide whether they shall remain one day, or stay and complete their work at the city of Altoona.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. It is moved that the communication be laid on the table, and that the thanks of the Convention be returned to the city council of Altoona for their invitation.

The motion was agreed to.

PRINTING ACCOUNTS.

Mr. HAY. I desire to present a report from the Committee on Accounts.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The report will be read.

The CLERK proceeded to read the report.

Mr. HAY. I did not propose to press the present consideration of the report, but to ask that it be laid on the table and printed, and if that meets the approbation of the Convention, I will move to dispense with the further reading of the report and that the Committee on Accounts be authorized to have two hundred and fifty copies printed for the use of the Convention.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I object. I want to hear it read first.

Mr. D. N. WHITE. I should like to hear the report read also.

The CLERK resumed and concluded the reading of the report, which is as follows:

The Committee on Accounts and Expenditures of the Convention respectfully reports:

That the Convention, in pursuance of an opinion that further warrants for payments for its printing should, under the provisions of the general appropriation act of 1873, be drawn by the Auditor General, on the fifteenth day of May, 1873, adopted the following resolution, viz.: Resolved, That no warrants be drawn for payments to the Printer of the Convention, but that the Committee on Accounts shall continue to ascertain, and from time to time report to this Convention what sums may be due to the Printer, and copies of such reports, when approved by the Convention, shall be forthwith sent to the Auditor General by the Clerk." Whereupon the committee addressed a communication to the Printer, directing his attention to the resolution, and requested him to "present to the committee a complete statement, in detail, of all the printing and binding done by him under his contract with the Convention, and of books furnished, and of all other claims of any kind which he might have against the Convention up to the fifteenth day of May (then) instant, and to state in the account not only the total sum claimed by him up to that date, but also the particular prices charged in every case." An account up to the fifteenth day of May was furnished soon after a repetition of this request had been made. This account when first presented was not accompanied by any vouchers of any kind, and some have not yet been supplied. These facts serve to explain the delay in first reporting upon this subject.

In the examination of this account, the committee has been governed by the same rules and principles which control the settlement of private accounts; and while endeavoring to be accurate and careful, has also endeavored to be strictly just to the accountant. Wherever the Convention has made any order in the matter it has been rigidly observed; and the contract with the Printer, found on page 228 of the Journal, has been kept constantly in view, and its terms undeviatingly followed.

That contract provided, inter alia, as follows: "Now I, Benjamin Singlerly, the State Printer aforesaid, do by these presents covenant and agree to * * do all the printing and binding of the said Convention, and * * that I will execute the said printing for the Debates and Journal, and such other printing as may be ordered, in such form and in such type, and to furnish and bind such number of copies as may be ordered, and that I will execute such orders in the premises as may be given me by the Convention, or the Committee on Printing and Binding thereof; and that all the said printing and binding shall be done and executed on the same terms and in the same manner as now provided by my existing contract with the State of Pennsylvania."

This contract with the State is to "do all the State printing and binding in the manner and in all respects subject to the provisions of the act of 9th April, A. D. 1856, and the supplements thereto, approved February 25, A. D. 1862, and March 27, 1871, for the period of three years from the first day of July, (1871,) at the rate of forty-one and one-fourth ($41\frac{1}{4}$) per centum below the rates specified in said acts."

The act of March 27, 1871, entitled "A further supplement to the act of 9th of April, A. D., 1856, regulating the public printing and binding," provides that "the standard rates of compensation or price for the public printing and binding, and for all objects of charge against the Commonwealth by the public Printer shall be according to the schedule appended to this act."

The rates mentioned in this schedule, so far as applicable to the account before the committee, are as follows:

"Printing.—For all composition, in whatever type, except on legislative bills, per thousand ems, as follows:

"Plain composition, sixty cents.

"Rule and figure work composition, one dollar.

"For press-work, for each token of two-hundred and fifty impressions, or less, fifty cents.

"For each page of legislative bills in pica type, including composition, press-work, folding and delivery, one dollar.

"Tabular work shall be executed in brier or smaller type, without additional charge.

"No composition, except of bills, shall be leaded or scabbarded, without the direction of the superintendent, nor shall any composition, upon any pretence whatever, be fixed at other rates than those herein prescribed.

"Folding, et cetera.—For folding, gathering, stitching and collating, and delivering, per one hundred sheets of any size, twenty cents.

"Binding.—For half-binding, leather back, corner tips, paper sides and labels, per volume, fifty cents. For binding all books or documents in muslin covers, whether plain, gilded or embossed, with lettering on side or back, or both, per volume, twenty cents.

"Miscellaneous.—Per hundred sheets, for cutting "and dry pressing, two cents."

The Committee has adopted, in making this settlement, the invariable rule that, wherever applicable, the prices to be paid the Printer, were those mentioned in the said schedule, less the discount of forty-one and one-fourth per centum from those prices, at which the public printing and binding was allotted to Benjamin Singlerly; and has therefore refused to allow any charge made for work coming within the enumeration of said schedule which was in excess of the prices therein prescribed, less the discount. The Committee understands its functions in this matter to be simply to audit according to law, and not to decide as to the sufficiency of the prices fixed. Wherever the prices for work done were not fixed by law, the Committee has allowed what, in its opinion, was a fair price therefor. There being very little of what may be fairly called extra work, not provided for in the schedule, done for the Convention, it may be that the Printer, under his contract with the Convention and the State, has a hard bargain, and that he would not be fully and fairly remunerated by strict adherence to the terms of his contract; but the Committee, while expressing no opinion upon this subject, has had in the audit of this account to look only to the law existing for its guidance, and to report accordingly, leaving it to the Convention itself to take such other or further action in the matter as may be deemed necessary and proper.

For purposes of convenience and to show in the clearest and readiest manner the differences between the claims of the Printer and the allowances of the committee, there has been prepared, (and is hereby submitted, marked "A,") a statement, on the one side of which is a substantial transcript of the Printer's account, and on the other side, in corresponding columns, the same items as allowed, disallowed or suspended, by the committee.

The Printer's account to May 15th, as rendered, is for a total sum of \$24,970 36, of which he claims that only \$7,599 43 is subject to a discount of $41\frac{1}{4}$ per cent., and that \$17,371 23 is not subject to any deduction; leaving the bill \$21,835 90.

The committee in the appended statement have restated this account.

1. Allowing, as charged, the sum of..... $3,179 75

2. Disallowing entirely, for reasons given in the statement, items amounting to the sum of.....	1,668 08
3. Omitting from present settlement for reasons given in the statement.....	2,060 45
4. Reducing, in different proportions, sundry charges which amount, in the account as rendered, to	18,062 08
	<hr/> 24,970 36

The items omitted from the present settlement will be further examined, and included in a subsequent report.

One of the chief results of the examination of this account has been to place the bulk of the items, the charges for which are claimed as not subject to any discount under the law, in the column of items which in the opinion of the committee are legally subject to the discount of forty-one and a quarter per centum from the rates fixed in the Act of March 27, 1871. The greatest differences made have been caused by this change, by the reduction of charges made for work included in the schedule in excess of the prices therein mentioned, by the variations in the calculation of the quantity of matter printed between the Printer and the committee, and by the reduction of sundry charges for extra work not included in the schedule.

For printing wrappers for newspapers, members of the Legislature and heads of departments, the sum of $974 26 is charged as for regular composition and press work. The charge should have been made as for job work, and it is believed that the sum allowed by the committee, $200 00, is amply sufficient to compensate the Printer, and that the same work could be done in the most responsible printing offices for that sum. For folding and mailing the Debates sent in these wrappers, the sum of $591 00 is charged. This is nearly six dollars per day for work which would be fully paid for by one-third of that sum, and $200 00 has accordingly been allowed. For one thousand one hundred files for Debates, Journal, suggestions and reports on desks of members there is charged $275 00, or $25 00 per hundred. These articles, it is believed, could be supplied at $15 00 per hundred, and the charge has been accordingly reduced to $165 00. For marbling the edges and lettering the backs of the volumes of the Debates, the additional charge of ten cents per volume is made. The committee has allowed five cents per volume, which is a very full price for marbling edges, but has refused to allow any additional sum for the label on the back, for the reason that the cost of the label is included in the price for binding—fifty cents per volume—as will appear by reference to the schedule. The Printer claims that the label mentioned in the description of the style of binding for which fifty cents per volume is allowed is not a gilt but a printed paper label. The committee do not concur in his opinion, but believes that the label contemplated is such a label as would suitably and properly be placed on a volume bound in the manner described in said schedule. Supposing that there would be seven volumes of Debates, of four thousand five hundred copies to each volume, there would be altogether thirty-one thousand five hundred volumes of Debates, and one thousand five hundred volumes of the Journal, the difference upon which, on account of this charge, at five cents per volume, would be $1,650.

Exclusive of the items omitted from the present settlement, together amounting to the sum of $2,060 45, there is due to the printer, up to the fifteenth day of May, 1873, the following amount not subject to any deduction.....$1,196 18
And the sum of.....$13,858 87
Subject to a discount of 41¼ per cent..... 5,716 78 8,142 09

Total sum due.....$9,338 27

The sum of five thousand dollars has already been paid the Printer on account.

The following resolution is reported for the action of the Convention :

Resolved, That there is due to Benjamin Singerly, Printer for the Convention, in full of all claims to the fifteenth day of May, 1873, (excepting items in the account above mentioned yet to be fully audited, together amounting to the sum of $2,060 45,) the sum of $9,338 27, on account of which has been heretofore paid the sum of $5,000 00; and that a copy of this report and the action of the Convention thereon, be forthwith transmitted by the Chief Clerk to the Auditor General of the Commonwealth.

DEBATES OF THE

[A.] STATEMENT showing the differences between the claims of Benjamin and the allowances of the Committee on

CLAIMS OF BENJAMIN SINGERLY.

	Column, No. 1.....		No. 2.....	No. 3. Subject to discount of 4 1/2 per ct.	No. 4. No discount
Debates, Vol. 1,	250	Standing committees.....		$3 64
		Paper for same.....			$3 85
	250	Resolutions, offered by Harry White.....		4 06
		Paper for same.....
	500	Yeas and nays.....		3 00
		Paper for same.....			5 88
	200	Yeas and nays.....		2 50
		Paper for same.....			2 52
	5,266	Copies.
	57	Forms, four having been cancelled by order of committee on printing
	3,129,984	Ems, minion, at seventy-five cents per 1,000 ems.....			2,347 48
	219,648	Ems, cancelled forms, at seventy-five cents per 1,000 ems.....			164 73
	1,342	Tokens, at forty cents per token.....			533 80
		Folding at twenty cts. per 100 sheets.....		645 60
Debates, Vol. 2,		Dry pressing, at two cents per 100 sheets.....		64 65
	4,500	Copies, binding, at fifty cents per volume.....		2,250 00
	450	Copies, marbling edges and extra lettering, at ten cents per volume.....			45 00
		Indexing Vol. 1.....			200 00
	5,266	Copies.
	53	Forms.
	2,910,336	Ems, Minion, at seventy-five cents per 1,000 ems.....			2,182 75
	54,912	Ems, cancelled form, at.....	$0 75		41 18
	1,188	Tokens, at.....	40		475 20
		Folding, at.....	20	572 40
Debates, Vol. 3,		Dry pressing, at.....	2	57 24
		Indexing, Vol. 2.....			200 00
	5,266	Copies.
	58	Forms.
	3,184,896	Ems, Minion, at.....	75		2,388 67
	1,276	Tokens, at.....	40		510 40
*Debates, Vol. 4,		Folding.....	20	614 80
		Dry pressing.....	2	61 48
	5,266	Copies.
	22	Forms.
May 15, 1873.....	1,208,064	Ems, minion, at.....	75		906 04
	484	Tokens, at.....	40		193 60
		Folding, at.....		233 20
		Dry pressing.....		23 32

* These items in Vol. 4 are allowed on account of the Singerly, printer for the Convention, in his first account, (May 15, 1873,) Accounts and Expenditures of the Convention.

ALLOWED BY THE COMMITTEE.

No. 1.....		No. 2.....	No. 3. Subject to discount of 4 1/2 per ct.....	No. 4. No discount of.....
.....	$3 64
.....	4 06	$3 85
.....	3 00	1 21
.....	2 50	5 88
.....	2 52
5, 254	Copies.
57	Forms.
2, 862, 860	Ems, minion, at sixty cents per 1,000 ems.....	1, 717 71
216, 832	Ems, minion, at sixty cents per 1,000 ems.	130 10
1, 254	Tokens, at fifty cents per token.....	627 00
.....	Folding at twenty cents per 100 sheets.....	604 20
.....	Dry pressing, at two cents per 100 sheets.....	60 42
4, 500	Copies, binding, at fifty cents per volume.....	2, 250 00
450	Copies, marbling, (no extra lettering,) at five cts. per volume.....	22 50
.....	Indexing Vol. 1, price fixed by committee on printing and binding.....	200 00
5, 254	Copies.
52	Forms.
2, 815, 428	Ems, at sixty cents per 1,000 ems.....	1, 689 25
1, 144	Tokens, at fifty cents.....	572 00
.....	Folding, at twenty cents.....	551 20
.....	Dry pressing, at two cents.....	55 12
.....	Indexing Vol. 2.....	200 00
5, 254	Copies.
52	Forms.
2, 757, 832	Ems, at sixty cents.....	1, 654 70
1, 144	Tokens, at fifty cents.....	572 00
.....	Folding, at twenty cents.....	551 20
.....	Dry pressing, at two cents.....	55 12
5, 254	Copies.
1, 208, 064	Ems, at sixty cents.....	724 84
484	Tokens, at fifty cents.....	242 00
.....	Folding.....	233 20
.....	Dry pressing.....	23 32

volume, and not particularly to the 15th day of May.

DEBATES OF THE STATEMENT—Continued.

CLAIMS OF BENJAMIN SINGERLY.

	Column, No. 1.....		No. 2.....	No. 3. Subject to discount of 4 1/4 per ct.....	No. 4. No discount off.....
Journal.....	1,500	Copies.
	92	Forms.
	4,121,600	Ems, brevier, at.....	$0 75		$3,091 20
	552	Tokens, at.....	40		220 80
		Folding.....		$276 00
		Dry pressing.....		27 60
Suggest'ns and Amendments...	200	Copies.
	35	Forms.
	1,050,786	Ems, long primer, at.....	60	630 47
	21,054	Ems, long primer figurework.....	1 00	21 05
	35	Tokens, at.....	50	17 50
		Folding.....		14 00
		Dry pressing.....		1 40
Wrappers for newspapers.	436
	834,604	Ems, long primer, plain, at.....	60	500 76
	436	Tokens, at.....	50	218 00
Wrappers for Legislature & Heads of Departments.	155
	296,670	Ems, long primer, plain, at.....	60	178 00
	155	Tokens, at.....	50	77 50
		Folding, packing and mailing 591 copies Debates for 100 days.....			591 00
Populat'n maps	500	Copies.....	12 1/2		62 50
Small's Hd Bk,	140	Copies, at.....	1 25		175 00
	500	Yeas and nays.....		3 00
		Paper for same.....			1 68
	1,000	Yeas and nays.....		3 98
		Paper for same.....			3 36
Man'l of rules...	500	Copies.
	3	Sheets.
	67,200	Ems, minion, plain, at.....	60	40 32
	6	Tokens, at.....	50	3 00
		Folding.....		3 00
		Dry pressing.....		30
	500	Copies binding, at.....	20	100 00
	500	Yeas and nays.....		3 00
		Paper for same.....			1 68
	3	Forms delayed three days, sixty hours, on account of delay in returning proof.....			417 00
	1	Form delayed three hours.....			6 96
	3	Forms debates cancelled, signatures 41, 42, 43.....
	176,640	Ems.....			162 48
	66	Tokens.....			33 00
	3	Forms, forty-eight hours waiting for proof.....			334 08
		Correcting members' first proof, 20 hours.....			46 40
		Correcting members' second proof, 15 hours.....			34 80
		Correcting members' first proof, 5 hours.....			11 60

CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION.

679

STATEMENT—Continued.

ALLOWED BY THE COMMITTEE.

No. 1.....		No. 2.....	No. 3. Subject to discount of 4 1/2 per ct....	No. 4. No discount of.....
1,500 Copies.
1,435,200 Ems, brevier, at.....		$0 60	861 12
260 Tokens, at.....		50	180 00
Folding.....			117 20
Dry pressing.....			11 72
200 Copies.
26 Forms.
350,262 Ems, long primer, at.....		60	210 16
21,054 Ems, long primer, at.....		1 00	21 05
26 Tokens, at.....		50	13 00
Folding.....			10 40
Dry pressing.....			1 04
436 Wrappers.....				$200 00
145 Wrappers.....
500 Copies.....				200 00
140 Copies, at.....		90		62 50
			3 00	126 00
				1 68
			3 98	3 36
500 Copies.
3 Sheets.
67,300 Ems, at.....		60	40 32
6 Tokens, at.....		50	3 00
Folding.....			3 00
Dry pressing.....			30
500 Copies binding, at.....		20	100 00	.
500 Yeas and nays.....			3 00
Paper for same.....				1 68
	[This delay in waiting for proof, so far as made known to your committee, was not by authority of the Convention, or any of its committees, and was in direct contravention of the positive resolution of the Convention, that its Debates should be furnished the day after their delivery.]
	[There was nothing before the committee to show that these forms were cancelled for the fault, or by the order, of any other person than the printer himself.]
	[This is an expense for which the Convention cannot be justly held responsible; and can only be regarded as a matter of private arrangement and agreement between the printer and such delegates as he may have accommodated by this extra care.]

DEBATES OF THE STATEMENT—Continued.

CLAIMS OF BENJAMIN SINGERLY.

	Column, No. 1.....		No. 2.....	No. 3. Subject to discount of 4½ per cent.....	No. 4. No discount of.....
		Correcting members' second proof, 5 hours.....			$11 60
		Correcting members' second proof, 5 hours.....			11 60
		Correcting members' second proof, 5 hours.....			11 60
		Correcting members' third proof, 10 hours.....			23 20
		Correcting members' third proof, 2 hours.....			4 64
		Correcting members' fourth proof, 2 hours.....			4 64
		Cover paper for Hopkins Memorial purchased prior to the order for print'g, it being countermanded(?)			13 75
		Services of an employee at Convention, preparing and laying printed matter upon members desks.....			216 00
	1, 100	Files for Debates, Journal and articles and suggestions.....	$0 25		275 00
	100 qrs...	Lithographed letter heads.....		$10 00
	80 qrs.....	do..... note heads.....		20 00
	60 qrs.....	do..... letter heads.....		24 00
	200 qrs.....	do..... note heads.....		50 00
	80 qrs.....	do..... letter heads.....		32 00
	60 qrs.....	do..... note heads.....		15 00
	80 qrs.....	do..... letter heads.....		32 00
	660 qrs...
	2, 000	Envelopes, No. 6.....			9 30
		Lithographing same.....		5 00
	1, 000	Official envelopes, No. 10.....			10 25
		Lithographing same.....		2 50
	3, 000	Official envelopes, No. 6.....			13 95
		Lithographing same.....		7 50
	3, 000	Envelopes.....			13 95
		Lithographing same.....		7 50
	9, 000
Majority and minority reports of committees.	200 qrs...	Bill paper.....			70 00
	200 qrs...	Journal paper.....			70 00
	1, 000	Copies.
	5	Forms.
	241, 920	Ems, brevier, at.....	60	145 15
	20	Tokens, at.....	50	10 00
		Folding.....		10 00
		Dry-pressing.....		1 00
Reports of committees in bill form.	300	Copies on each bill, 450 pages.....		450 00
	1, 000	do..... do..... 16..... do.....		16 00
	12	Tokens.....		6 00
	433	Copies on each bill, 62 pages.....		62 00
	16	Tokens.....		8 00
	81	Reams double cap paper for same.
	28 lbs.				680 40

CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION.

681

STATEMENT—Continued.

ALLOWED BY THE COMMITTEE.

No. 1.....		No. 2.....	No. 3. Subject to discount of 41 per cent....	No. 4. No discount of.....
.....	[So far as appears, there is no justification for this charge, and the printing and binding of the Memorial was done by other persons.]
.....	[There does not appear to be any ground for this charge, and the Convention has its own employees and officers to perform such duties.]
1, 100	Files, at.....	$0 15		$165 00
.....	[These letter and note heads and envelopes, it appears from the statement of the Chief Clerk and the printer, were not ordered by any officer of the Convention, but were voluntarily supplied, in the hope that they would be eventually paid for. In the opinion of the committee, this is not a "proper expense" of the Convention, so far as the supply to the members is concerned, the State having previously paid to each member the sum of fifty dollars as an allowance for stationery. The fact that this claim would not be reported upon favorably by this committee was made known to the printer, upon his inquiry, at the time they were first seen here, and the reasons therefor fully explained to him.]
.....	[Passed over for want of sufficient vouchers or evidence that the quantity charged for was actually furnished.]
.....	[Passed over for want of sufficient vouchers, information and means for making estimates of correctness of charge.]
.....	[Passed over for same reasons as last above mentioned.]
.....	[Passed over for same reasons as last above mentioned.]

DEBATES OF THE STATEMENT—Continued.

CLAIMS OF BENJAMIN SINGERLY.

Column, No. 1.....		No. 2.....	No. 3. Subject to discount of 41½ per cent.....	No. 4. No discount off.....
	Postage on Debates to 591 newspapers and heads of departments, three quarters Discount of 41½ per cent. off..... Claim'd to be not subject to deduction $7,599 43 3,134 76 4,464 67 17,371 23 21,835 90	$531 90 17,371 23

CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION.

683

STATEMENT—Continued.

ALLOWED BY THE COMMITTEE.

No. 1.....		No. 2.....	No. 3. Subject to discount of 4½ per ct....	No. 4. No discount off.....
	[Passed over for same reasons as last above mentioned.]
	Discount of 4½ per cent. off.....		$13,858 87 5,716 78	$1,196 18
	Not subject to deduction.....		8,142 09 1,196 18
			9,338 27
	Not yet finally audited of this account, marked above as "passed over" for the present.....		$2,060 45

Mr. HAY. I move that the report be laid on the table, and that the Committee on Accounts and Expenditures be authorized to have two hundred and fifty copies of the report printed for the use of the Convention, that members may examine it.

The motion was agreed to.

RAILROADS AND CANALS.

Mr. D. W. PATTERSON. I move that we proceed to the consideration of the article on railroads and canals.

The motion was agreed to, and the Convention resumed the consideration on second reading of the article on railroads and canals.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. When the Convention adjourned on Saturday, the seventh section of the article as printed was before the Convention.

Mr. COCHRAN. According to my recollection, when the Convention adjourned on Saturday, the motion pending was a motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the gentleman from Lycoming (Mr. Armstrong) had been rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. It was. The pending question is on the motion of the gentleman from Philadelphia (Mr. Cuyler) to reconsider the vote by which the amendment offered by the gentleman from Lycoming (Mr. Armstrong) to the amendment of the gentleman from Allegheny (Mr. T. H. B. Patterson) was rejected.

The reconsideration was agreed to, there being, on a division, ayes, thirty-seven; noes, thirty-one.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The amendment of the gentleman from Lycoming to the amendment is before the Convention.

Mr. KNIGHT. Be kind enough to have it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Clerk will read the amendment to the amendment.

The CLERK. The amendment to the amendment was to insert, after the word "thereof," in the amendment, these words:

"Persons and property transported by any such company shall be delivered at any station within the State, at charges not exceeding the charges for transportation of persons and property of the same class, in the same direction, to any more distant station; but commutation tickets to passengers may be issued as heretofore, and reasonable extra rates, within the limits of the charter, may be made in charges for any distance not exceeding fifty miles."

Mr. WHERRY. I ask that the section, as it will be amended if this amendment shall be adopted, be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The amendment as it would read if amended as proposed by the gentleman from Lycoming (Mr. Armstrong) will be read.

The CLERK read as follows:

"No corporation engaged in the transportation of freight or passengers in or through this State shall make any discrimination in charges for the carriage of either freight or passengers between or against the people thereof. Persons and property transported by any such company shall be delivered at any station within the State at charges not exceeding the charges for transportation of persons and property of the same class in the same direction to any more distant station; but commutation tickets to passengers may be issued as heretofore, and reasonable extra rates within the limits of the charter may be made in charges for any distance not exceeding fifty miles."

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I do not desire to reopen the debate upon the question, but there are some members who were not here when this question was taken before, and I merely call their attention to the fact that the effort has been in this proposed amendment to totally prohibit that which has been the great standing abuse against which the people of the Commonwealth have complained, namely, that freights are carried past stations on the line of a railroad and delivered at more distant points for less money than the company are willing to deliver them at points past which they must necessarily carry them. At the same time it is so guarded so as not to interfere with that sound discretion of the companies which is necessary to the safe transaction of business to enable them to compete successfully with other railroad lines. I believe that with this amendment everything is guarded sufficiently to leave a sound discretion in the company and yet to protect the people against the evils which I have indicated.

Mr. COCHRAN. I wish to call the attention of the Convention simply—I do not propose to go into a discussion of this question—to the fact there is nothing in this amendment which refers to special rates or drawbacks, and also that it will not meet, to a very great extent, the object which the gentleman from Lycoming, its author, proposes, as was stated here in the discussion on Saturday. I hope therefore that the amendment to the amendment will not be adopted, and on its adoption I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I second the call.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. One word of explanation, as I do not propose to re-open the discussion upon this point—

Mr. D. N. WHITE. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman has already spoken upon this subject.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I do not intend to to speak upon the question; I merely rise to an explanation.

Mr. D. N. WHITE. I insist upon my point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Chair must decide the point of order well taken.

Mr. BUCKALEW. A single word, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The gentleman from Columbia will give way for a moment. The yeas and nays have been demanded. Do ten gentlemen rise to second the call?

More than ten gentlemen rose.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The call for the yeas and nays is sustained. The gentleman from Columbia will proceed.

Mr. BUCKALEW. But a single word. I shall support this amendment because it contains some matters of which I approve and which are not in the section. I desire to call the attention of the Convention to the fact that after this amendment is agreed to, if the Convention sees fit to adopt it, it will be possible to amend it further by adding anything else; so that the clause which the gentleman from York refers to, and which he desires to have placed in the section, he can still move after this amendment is acted upon. I mention this in order that his objection may not militate against the adoption of the amendment on the present vote.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Was there not an amendment previously offered, and is not this an amendment to the amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The gentleman from the city is correct. There was an amendment offered by the gentleman from Allegheny (Mr. T. H. B. Patterson) pending, and this amendment is an amendment to that amendment.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Then I ask that that amendment be stated.

The CLERK. The original amendment was to strike out all after the word "section" and insert:

"No corporation engaged in the transportation of freight or passengers in or through this State shall make any discrimination in charges for the carriage of either freight or passengers between or against the people thereof, nor make a higher charge for a shorter distance than for a longer distance; and no special rates or drawbacks shall, either directly or indirectly, be allowed excepting excursion and commutation tickets."

Mr. T. H. B. PATTERSON. I desire to call the attention of the delegates to the fact that the only difference between my amendment and the amendment of the gentleman from Lycoming is—

Mr. BRODHEAD. I protest against discussion at this point. The gentleman from Allegheny has on several occasions, just after the yeas and nays have been ordered, taken the floor in this manner in order to have the last word. I protest against it. The yeas and nays have been ordered. Let them be called.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Chair will follow the rules of the House. The yeas and nays have been ordered and the Clerk will proceed with the call.

The yeas and nays were taken with the following result:

YEAS.

Messrs. Addicks, Armstrong, Bigler, Black, Chas. A., Boyd, Brodhead, Broomall, Brown, Buckalew, Carter, Clark, Corbett, Cronmiller, Dallas, Edwards, Elliott, Fell, Fulton, Hall, Harvey, Hunsicker, Knight, Lamberton, Lilly, Littleton, MacConnell, Mann, Niles, Patton, Purman, Reed, Andrew, Simpson, Struthers, Turreil, Walker, Wetherill, J. M., Wetherill, John Price, Wherry and White, J. W. F—39.

NAYS.

Messrs. Alricks, Baer, Baily, (Perry,) Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Baker, Biddle, Calvin, Campbell, Cochran, Curry, De France, Ewing, Funck, Gilpin, Guthrie, Hemphill, Horton, Howard, Kaine, Landis, Lawrence, Lear, McCulloch, M'Murray, Mantor, Newlin, Patterson, D. W., Patterson, T. H. B., Purviance, Sam'l A., Reynolds, Rooke, Ross, Russell, Smith, H. G., Smith, Henry W., Smith, Wm. H., Temple, Van Reed, White, David N., White, Harry and Worrell—41.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Achenbach, Ainey, Andrews, Bannan, Barclay, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Beebe, Black, J. S., Bowman, Bullitt, Carey, Cassidy, Church, Collins, Corson, Craig, Curtin, Cuyler, Darlington, Davis, Dodd, Dunning, Ellis, Finney, Gibson, Green, Hanna, Hay, Hazzard, Heverin, Long, MacVeagh, McCannant, McClean, Metzger, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Palmer, G. W., Palmer, H. W., Parsons, Porter, Pughe, Purviance, John N., Read, John R., Runk, Sharpe, Stanton, Stewart, Woodward, Wright and Meredith, President—53.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question recurs on the amendment of the delegate from Allegheny (Mr. T. H. B. Patterson.)

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question recurs on the section as amended.

Mr. LILLY. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of the section:

"That no discrimination shall be made in favor of any party in carrying freight of the same class the same distance and same direction, by drawback or otherwise."

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment of the delegate from Carbon (Mr. Lilly.)

Mr. COCHRAN. I merely wish to call attention to what I believe to be correct, that while I entirely agree with the object sought to be attained by the gentleman from Carbon in this amendment, I think it has already been attained in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Allegheny, (Mr. T. H. B. Patterson,) which prohibits the granting of drawbacks or special rates. I ask for the reading of the amendment of the gentleman from Allegheny as it has been adopted, as a substitute for the section.

The CLERK. The section as amended reads as follows:

SECTION —. "No corporation engaged in the transportation of freight or passengers in or through this State shall make any discrimination in charges for the carriage of either freight or passengers between or against the people thereof, nor make a higher charge for a shorter distance than for a longer distance including such shorter distance; and no special rates or drawbacks shall either directly or indirectly be allowed, excepting excursion and commutation tickets."

Mr. HARRY WHITE. Mr. President: I suppose we all sympathize, at least I do, with the purpose of the amendment of the delegate from Carbon, but I call his attention to the fact that the matter is provided for. I apprehend the object of his amendment is to meet this objection, that some citizens of Pennsylvania go outside of the State and purchase merchandise to bring into the State, and the companies may now discriminate in their favor. I am satisfied that the wording of the amendment offered by the delegate from Allegheny (Mr. T. H. B. Patterson) which has just been adopted meets that question exactly. It provides that no discrimination shall be made against or between the citizens of the State. As to the drawback matter, we have that provided for.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment of the delegate from Carbon (Mr. Lilly.)

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question recurs on the section as amended.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. President: I understand that this is a substitute for the entire section.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. It is.

Mr. BUCKALEW. This amendment, if I remember correctly, has dropped the provision that extra charges may be made by railroads for distances under fifty miles. That is a very material and a very necessary provision, and without it we will find that the section will become extremely odious. It is impossible for large service to be done by a railroad company for short distance for the public generally or for other corporations under general rates of uniform charge. As for instance, in the county of Luzerne, I remember a case. There a railroad company erected a bridge across the Susquehanna river, and it is obliged under the general law to carry enormous masses of coal for other corporations, a distance of one, two or three miles only. The charge which this company makes under general and uniform provisions of law for that distance will not compensate them for one-fifth the actual cost, and the result is that they are obliged to charge beyond any general rule or rate, of course within the limits of their original character. It will be an absolute stop upon the transaction of all such local business, of all such business over short lines, because it will be extremely oppressive upon the company and they must resort to some device to get rid of performing that service. Besides, it is grossly unjust.

There is another point to which I desire to call attention in this amendment. The gentleman from Allegheny says you shall not charge more for a shorter than a longer distance—the longer distance to include the shorter. Now, I want to know about the practical operation of that provision. You cannot charge more for transportation from Harrisburg to Lancaster than you charge from Harrisburg to Philadelphia; that is, the longer distance from Harrisburg to Philadelphia would include the shorter distance from Harrisburg to Lancaster, and therefore it is forbidden; but it does not follow that the limitation would apply to service running west from Harrisburg, between Harrisburg and Pittsburg. Your limitation would be confined to a case where the longer distance included the shorter one.

As to the first objection which I have mentioned—the omission of the provision that extra charges may be made under fifty miles—that could be corrected by amending the section, and I therefore move to amend by adding at the end of the section as it now stands the words to be found in the twelfth and thirteenth lines of the printed section: "And reasonable extra rates within the limits of the charter of a company may be made in charges for any distance not exceeding fifty miles."

The PRESIDENT pro tem. That amendment is before the Convention.

Mr. T. H. B. PATTERSON. The gentleman from Columbia objects to that exception being left out. I will merely state that the reason why it was left out in the substitute was because the substitute already provides for that emergency, in this: The substitute does not attempt to fix any pro rata rate whatever. It permits the company to fix their rate for fifty or sixty or seventy miles, as they choose, and the only limitation it imposes is that they shall not charge more for a shorter than a longer distance. So they may fix a rate for fifty miles, and then the shorter distances all get the benefit of that fixing. There could be no discrimination against shorter distances. Delegates will readily see how it provides for it fully.

Then the other objection raised by the gentleman from Columbia is that, for instance, the rate between two long points in the same direction would necessarily include the distance to a shorter point, and he objects that that would not necessarily provide that they should charge less for one of those shorter points than they would for a longer distance in another direction. The object of the substitute was to leave that question open, because the great objection made to the section was that, for instance, there might be from Harrisburg to Philadelphia a rate of charge less than a railroad could afford to charge from Altoona to some point along the road, a shorter distance, where they had a precipitous route. Therefore the very object of inserting "including such shorter distance" was that the only effect of it should be over the same ground, in order to leave the questions of inequality for the road to adjust themselves. In other words, this section does not interfere with their pro rata rates over any portion of the road at all, but allows them to impose those fair rates according to the road, but at the same time it provides that when they fix a rate they shall not charge higher for a shorter than a longer distance. Therefore it is an adjustable arrangement in a very few words that will apply to all cases. Neither of the objections of the gentleman from Columbia applies to it, and therefore I think the delegates would do well to vote down the proposed amendment, because it is already included in the substitute.

Mr. PURMAN. It is the interest of the people that the amendment of the gentleman from Columbia (Mr. Buckalew) should prevail. The railroads might, without that amendment, get their full compensation for carrying over a very short distance, as for instance over the bridge referred to by the gentleman from Columbia, by making their charges so high for a long distance that the same rate for a short distance over the bridge would compensate them; but that would be imposing a burden upon the people. We should allow the railroads to carry for the longer distances at the lowest possible rate to accommodate the people. Then that which goes over a greater distance than fifty miles can be carried at the same proportion, and that within the fifty miles would be regulated according to the condition of the road. It is in the interest of the people that the amendment of the gentleman from Columbia should prevail.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment of the delegate from Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question now recurs on the section as amended.

The yeas and nays were required by Mr. Cochran and Mr. Campbell, and were as follow, viz :

YEAS.

Messrs. Achenbach, Alricks, Armstrong, Baily, (Perry,) Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Baker, Biddle, Bigler, Black, Charles A., Brown, Buckalew, Calvin, Campbell, Carter, Cochran, Corson, Dallas, De France, Edwards, Elliott, Ewing, Fell, Fulton, Funck, Gilpin, Guthrie, Harvey, Hay, Hemphill, Horton, Howard, Hunsicker, Kaine, Lamberton, Landis, Lawrence, MacConnell, M'Culloch, M'Murray, Mann, Mantor, Newlin, Niles, Patterson, D. W., Patterson, T. H. B., Purman, Purviance, Samuel A., Reed, Andrew, Reynolds, Ross, Russell, Smith, H. G., Smith, Wm. H., Struthers, Temple, Turrell, Wetherill, J. M., Wherry, White, David N., White, Harry, White, J. W. F. and Worrell—62.

NAYS.

Messrs. Addicks, Barclay, Brodhead, Broomall, Corbett, Cronmiller, Curry, Knight, Lear, Lilly, Littleton, Patton, Rooke, Simpson, Smith, Henry W., Van Reed Walker and Wetherill, Jno. Price—18.

So the section was agreed to.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Ainey, Andrews, Baer, Bannan, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Beebe, Black, J. S., Bowman, Boyd, Bullitt, Carey, Cassidy, Church, Clark, Collins, Craig, Curtin, Cuyler, Darlington, Davis, Dodd, Dunning, Ellis, Finney, Gibson, Green, Hall, Hanna, Hazzard, Heverin, Long, MacVeagh, M'Camant, M'Clean, Metzger, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Palmer, G. W., Palmer, H. W., Parsons, Porter, Pughe, Purviance, John N., Read, John R., Runk, Sharpe, Stanton, Stewart, Woodward, Wright and Meredith, President—53.

The next section of the article was read as follows :

SECTION 8. All railroads and canals are declared public highways, and all individuals, partnerships, and corporations shall have equal right to have persons and property transported thereon, except officers and partnerships or corporations composed in whole or in part of officers of each respective railroad or canal, who are hereby prohibited from engaging in the business of forwarding or transporting on the lines thereof; and all regulations adopted by the companies owning, controlling or managing such railroads or canals, having the effect of hindering or discriminating against individuals, partnerships or corporations, except as above excepted, in the transportation of property on such railroads and canals, shall be void; and no railroad corporation, nor any lessee or manager of the works thereof, shall make any preference in their own favor or between individuals, partnerships, and companies shipping and transporting thereon, in furnishing cars or motive power.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President: I move to amend the section by striking out all after the word "thereon" in the third line down to and including the word "thereof," in the sixth line, and also by striking out in the ninth line the words "except as above excepted."

This amendment, Mr. President, I propose just to make this section agree with section six as amended the other day. It is the same portion that was stricken out of that section.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President: The Convention on Friday, I think, adopted the section which was presented by the gentleman from Philadelphia, (Mr. Bullitt,) who is not now present, which he contended covered the same ground as the matter which is here proposed to be stricken out. If this proposition to amend, offered by the gentleman from Westmoreland (Mr. Fulton) should succeed, it will have the effect, I apprehend, of making the two sections inconsistent with each other. Now, it will be observed, sir, that this section does not operate as a prohibition upon officers of companies engaged in mining or manufacturing. That was stricken out in the sixth section, I think it was, on the motion of the gentleman from Westmoreland, and, therefore, that being stricken out, this section refers simply to the matter of transportation. The object is to prevent inside companies who are connected with railroads, inside parties, officers and others, from undertaking to engage in the business of transporting over the lines of those roads. In other words, it is to prevent special freight lines, or fast freight lines, or whatever they are called, which are gotten up under objectionable circumstances.

Now, if you leave these words in the section, it will be in exact accordance and harmony with the section that was adopted on the motion of the gentleman from Philadelphia (Mr. Bullitt.) If you strike these words out, the probability is you will have two sections conflicting with each other, because Mr. Bullitt's section which precedes this makes a prohibition and this section makes a positive grant to all parties to do a certain thing.

This section thus amended would in point of fact, I apprehend, overrule the section which was adopted on motion of the gentleman from Philadelphia; and that was one reason why we objected, or I did at least, to the introduction of that section at the time. But the Convention having adopted it, I think we ought to retain these words; they have no more scope than the section of the gentleman from Philadelphia, and the two will then be in accord. Otherwise they will be opposed to each other in their operation and effect.

Mr. T. H. B. PATTERSON. I want to call the attention of the Convention to the fact that although this amendment is all right in spirit, and although we ought to strike out these words, yet if we do strike out "except as before excepted," the courts might construe this to overrule the section offered by the gentleman from Philadelphia (Mr. Bullitt.) Perhaps these words ought to be stricken out here, but ought to be re-inserted in place of the third line, which it is now proposed to strike out. Otherwise this section may be construed to overrule or conflict with the former section. I suggest to the gentleman from Westmoreland that he so modify his amendment.

Mr. FULTON. I modify my amendment in that particular. I move to strike out the words, "except as above excepted," where they now occur, and to insert them in the place of the third line, proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. J. PRICE WETHERILL. Read the section entire, as it is proposed to amend it.

The CLERK read as follows:

"All railroads and canals are declared public highways, and all individuals, partnerships and corporations shall have equal right to have persons and property transported thereon, except as above excepted; and all regulations adopted by the companies owning, controlling or managing such railroads or canals having the effect of hindering or discriminating against individuals, partnerships or corporations, except as above excepted, and transportation of property on such railroads and canals shall be void; and no railroad corporation, nor any lessee or manager of the works thereof, shall make any preference in their own favor or between individuals, partnerships or companies shipping and transporting thereon, in furnishing cars and motive power."

On the question of agreeing to the amendment proposed by Mr. Fulton, a division was called for, which resulted thirty-nine in the affirmative and eleven in the negative. So the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The section as amended is now before the Convention.

Mr. CAMPBELL. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. RUSSELL. I second the call.

Mr. LANDIS. Before the vote is taken, I would suggest an alteration in the phraseology of the first portion that I think ought to be made. The section declares "all railroads and canals are declared public highways." I would therefore suggest to the chairman of the committee that some modification be made to meet that difficulty, because it is not contemplated here that private railroads shall be made public highways. "Railroads and canals of incorporated companies," I presume, would meet the difficulty.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Does the gentleman move an amendment?

Mr. LANDIS. I do not move an amendment, but I make the suggestion to the chairman of the Committee on Railroads and Canals.

Mr. COCHRAN. I will make the amendment which the gentleman suggests, and will move to amend the section as amended, so that it shall read, "all railroads and canals owned and operated by incorporated companies."

Mr. CORBETT. That will not cover all cases. There may be private railroads owned by corporations, used for their own corporate purposes. The truth is that while I shall vote for this section, I see no benefit in it. It is simply declaratory of the common law, and I apprehend that there is no danger of the Legislature changing the duties of railroads. I shall vote for the section, but it suggests itself to me that the amendment now moved by the chairman of the Committee on Railroads will not cover every case. Incorporated companies may own railroads, and I presume there are hundreds of them so owned which are used for their own private purposes altogether and not as common carriers at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is upon the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question recurs on the section as amended.

Mr. LANDIS. The Convention having declared that all railways shall be public highways, which would interfere with private railways, I shall vote against the section, although I am in entire sympathy with all the rest of it.

The yeas and nays were taken with the following result:

YEAS.

Messrs. Alricks, Baer, Baily, (Perry,) Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Baker, Biddle, Bigler, Black, Charles A., Brown, Buckalew, Calvin, Campbell, Carter, Cochran, Corbett, Corson, Cronmiller, Curry, Dallas, De France, Edwards, Elliott, Ewing, Fulton, Funck, Gilpin, Guthrie, Hall, Harvey, Hay, Hemphill, Horton, Howard, Hunsicker, Kaine, Lamberton, Lawrence, MacConnell, M'Culloch, M'Murray, Mann, Mantor, Newlin, Niles, Patterson, D. W., Patterson, T. H. B., Purman, Purviance, Samuel A., Read, John R., Reed, Andrew, Reynolds, Rooke, Ross, Russell, Simpson, Smith, H. G., Smith, Wm. H., Temple, Turrell, Van Reed, Wetherill, J. M., Wherry, White, David N., White, Harry, White, J. W. F. and Worrell—66.

NAYS.

Messrs. Barclay, Boyd, Brodhead, Broomall, Fell, Green, Knight, Landis, Lilly, Patton, Smith, Henry W., Struthers, Walker and Wetherill, Jno. Price—14.

So the section as amended was agreed to.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Achenbach, Addicks, Ainey, Andrews, Armstrong, Bannan, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Beebe, Black, J. S., Bowman, Bullitt, Carey, Cassidy, Church, Clark, Collins, Craig, Curtin, Cuyler, Darlington, Davis, Dodd, Dunning, Ellis, Finney, Gibson, Hanna, Hazzard, Heverin, Lear, Littleton, Long, MacVeagh, M'Camant, M'Clean, Metzger, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Palmer, G. W., Palmer, H. W., Parsons, Porter, Pughe, Purviance, John N., Runk, Sharpe, Stanton, Stewart, Woodward, Wright and Meredith, President—53.

Mr. CORBETT. I move to reconsider the vote just taken for the purpose of inserting after the word "canals" the words "doing the business of common carriers."

Mr. HALL. I second the motion.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to, there being on a division ayes forty-eight, nays not counted.

Mr. CORBETT. Now I move to amend the section by inserting after the word "canals," in the first line, the words "doing business as common carriers."

Mr. LANDIS. That meets the difficulty suggested, and I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I am opposed, for one, to this amendment. If we put it in I think we had better omit this first part of the section altogether, for it will amount to nothing. It will amount to about this: All railroads which are common carriers shall be common carriers! That will be exactly what it will mean. I understand that this whole article on railroads is applicable, and applicable only, to companies organized for general carrying purposes, and it does not relate to special or particular privileges which the Legislature have granted under the lateral railroad laws to the owners of private property or private persons. It is confined to those which are of a public nature or quasi public nature, in which all the people of the community are interested. In that point of view this section will not be at all useful. It says "all railroads and canals" shall be declared public highways. What railroads and canals? Those with which this article deals, these institutions of a public nature. Well, the Legislature of this State allows railroads for the improvement of private property, simply connected with public highways under special provisions and not at all affected by this article. If an individual wants to make a lateral railroad, he does not incorporate himself into a public company; he would not be subject to any of the regulations found in this article from one end to the other for the reason that he carries on a private enterprise.

The only effect of putting in this amendment would be to make that doubtful which is now perfectly clear. At present all railroads organized under the general laws of the State or under special laws of the State for carrying purposes are public highways, are treated as such by the people, and are treated as such in the courts; and to put into this section the words that railroads that are common carriers are public highways will mean one of two things: Either that the section shall be considered an absurdity and accepted as such, or that doubts shall be thrown upon the present legal principle, well established and unquestioned, that all railroads organized under our general laws, or for carrying purposes, are public highways.

I think, therefore, we had best not put in this amendment at this point; and if, on revision, there be anything necessary to distinguish public railroads from private ones, let it be done in this article by some special clause or modification of the language of the first section.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I cannot agree with the learned gentleman from Columbia in his construction of this clause in this article of the Constitution. By the first section we have used language, I think, as general as it is possible to express the power granted to "any individual, company or corporation," that is to say, any one person, any company, any corporation "organized for the purpose shall have the right to construct a railroad or canal between any two points in this State." Then follows a provision by which they may connect with other railroads, which seems to contemplate not only the construction of great through lines, but the right to construct lateral railroads which shall connect with other railroads. I do not know how this power could be made more broad than it is.

Then the section under consideration provides:

"All railroads and canals are declared public highways;" that is, all railroads and canals, as the gentleman from Columbia properly remarks, within the purview of this article, but the first section of it has made it as broad as language can make it, and I apprehend that when you come to construe it literally all railroads and canals are declared public highways.

I did not vote upon this section. There are parts of it I should like to vote for, but I cannot vote for it in the general phrase in which it stands, because if a company builds a lateral railroad through or along its own property and that of the adjoining owner, it might under this section use that road without at all contributing to its construction; and I think in that sense it is dangerous, extremely so. But with the amendment of the gentleman from Clarion as he proposes to insert it, it ceases to be dangerous and becomes in my judgment simply useless; but still I would prefer to vote for the section with that clause in to remove obscurity and doubt and prevent a great abuse of the power which is here conveyed.

Mr. COCHRAN. The general policy of our law is, as expressed in all the acts, I believe, on the subject, that these railroads and canals, which have taken the place of our ordinary roads in old times, our turnpikes and public highways, should themselves be public highways; and I do not see why the incorporation into this Constitution of a provision which makes them public highways and leaves it out of the power of the Legislature to give them any other character should be objected to.

I concur with the gentleman from Columbia in part in what he has said here, and that is, that this article has no reference or allusion to private railroads whatever or private canals or private companies. It relates to the public institutions created under the laws of our State. But then if there is a doubt about it, if anybody thinks it has a different application, I am willing for one to accede to the proposition of the gentleman from Clarion; at the same time I am not willing to admit that the section is mere brutum fulmen, simply because it establishes in the Constitution a principle which has been recognized in our legislation. Let it be understood always and everywhere that in this Commonwealth of Pennsylvania a railroad company or a canal company incorporated for public uses is and shall be, and no Legislature shall make it otherwise than, a public highway.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I should like to ask the gentleman from York a question before he sits down. I am surprised at his willingness to accept this amendment. I want to understand his view of it. Take the case of a coal company that has a road for thirty miles in length, does he want to have it understood that it shall not come under classification as a public highway, because that company is not engaged in the business of common carriers for others? They cannot get the right of way except under the broad power of the Commonwealth under the head of eminent domain. They are enabled to make their road simply because they can seize private property on the ground that the road shall be for public use. They cannot go ten feet perhaps from their mine except on that principle, and yet the gentleman from Lycoming seems to suppose that unless you put in this amendment these companies are to be oppressed. I say under the Constitution now but few of the mining companies possess any road which is not a public highway, and if other corporations under proper laws enacted for the purpose connect their road with such road the owners of such road are obliged to permit them to use it; they cannot get a private grant, except under the lateral railroad law; they cannot get a right to build their railroad except they dedicate it to public use.

Now, I am afraid of this amendment. Every one of these private corporations that are not engaged in the business of common carriers properly, that want to make their road a close monopoly for their own use, will insist that by these very words you are putting in here, they are taken out of the class of public highways, and that they can exclude any individual or any rival company from any possible use of the road upon the ground that as they themselves are not engaged in the business of public carriers, their road is not a public highway. So, sir, I desire to understand distinctly from the gentleman from York—I find I am changing my interrogatory into a speech without having intended it—if he is willing to throw open to doubt and difficulty this whole question of public right in all roads that are established under the power of public domain, whereas by the present Constitution there is no doubt or difficulty upon it.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I ask the gentleman from Columbia whether or not any other road would have a right to run cars over a lateral railroad under the lateral railroad act? They have not, and yet they take their franchise under the right of eminent domain.

Mr. BAEK. As the section now stands all railroads and canals are declared public highways, and it is good English. If you insert the words proposed to be put in, it will not be English or anything else. It will then read that all railroads and canals may be public highways, but no railroad or canal can be a common carrier. Railroad and canal corporations are common carriers, but railroads and canals are not. Therefore I think we shall murder this section materially by adopting this amendment.

Mr. BIDDLE. I merely wish to say that I concur entirely with the gentleman from Columbia, for the reasons he has given, and I hope this amendment will not pass.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the section.

The section was agreed to.

Mr. S. A. PURVIANCE. I offer the following amendment as a new section, to be inserted at this point:

"All discriminations made by railroad companies, being common carriers, in their rates of freight or passage over their roads, in favor of transportation companies or others engaged in transportation, by abatement, drawback or otherwise, are hereby prohibited, and the company guilty of such unlawful discrimination shall be liable to forfeiture of charter; and all contracts made with any transportation company or others engaged in the business of transportation, for carrying freights or passengers over any railroad within the State at higher rates than those agreed upon by and between said railroad companies and transporters, are hereby declared void."

I desire to detain the Convention but a very few moments in reference to this amendment. All the propositions which have thus far been made in reference to discriminations relate to the prohibition against the officers of the company. Now, sir, I present to this Convention, in the proposition now before them, a total destruction of transportation companies; and as it is a new proposition, one involving immense considerations, I desire the attention of every member of the Convention to it.

The proposition of the gentleman from Philadelphia (Mr. Bullitt) strikes at a prohibition of the officers of the company from taking part in transportation. That does not reach the evil. The evil consists of these companies within the company forming "rings," and requiring by contract the transportation of their goods at rates greatly less than the maximum established by the charter of the company, and after they have thus made their contracts with the company they drive the shippers into the transportation companies and require them to pay the additional charge, whatever it may be. To illustrate: A transportation company makes an agreement with a railroad company by which they are to have goods carried for one and a half cents per mile per ton. I am driven to the shippers. I have one hundred tons of goods to send from Pittsburg to Philadelphia. I am told by these transportation companies that their rate is three cents per ton per mile. I am thus obliged to pay them one hundred per cent. more than they are paying the railroad companies. Now, sir, my idea in general is this: A railroad company, being a common carrier, is bound to take my goods at the same rate for which they will carry goods for anybody else, whether it be a company or not.

Sir, this is a growing evil in our Commonwealth. There is an aggregation of wealth growing up suddenly like Jonah's gourd, confined to a few men, who bask in the sunshine of these railroads. It is easily to be seen that if they are allowed to charge one hundred per cent. more than the railroads charge, they are making an immense profit; and from whom is that money taken? It is taken from the people in the first instance, and in the second place it is taken from the stockholders of the railroads. They are deprived of the benefits of the dividends which would otherwise be made by the adoption of a higher rate than is adopted between railroads and life transporters.

I am not unfriendly to the railroads; but, sir, I am here as a representative of the people whose business is with railroads, and of the stockholders in railroads, although I have no goods to transport over railroads and although I am not a stockholder in a single railroad company. I call the attention of the Convention to the fact that the rights of the people and the rights of the stockholders are invaded to such an extent as to call for the passage of just such a proposition as I have made.

I listened the other day with astonishment at the declarations of the honorable gentleman from Philadelphia, not now in his seat (Mr. Cuyler.) It struck me that if a stranger had entered the Convention then, not knowing what was going on, he would have supposed that Thomas A. Scott and John Edgar Thomson had been members of this Convention and had recently died. The eulogiums were strong, and I was going to say, but I will not say, fulsome; and in the midst of that eulogium I understood the honorable gentleman to say that these gentlemen and the officers of the Pennsylvania Central road never had committed a wrong against the people, that their course was a pure and upright one. I will only ask, when the Pennsylvania Legislature passed a law authorizing the sale of the public works for seven and a half millions with the tonnage tax on, and ten millions with the tax off, and that road stepped forward and took them at seven and a half millions with the tonnage tax on, was it right for them to go to the Legislature afterwards and ask for a repeal of that tonnage tax, by which they would get the public works for two millions and a half less than their contract? Was that right? And yet these very officers were upon the ground and manipulated the Legislature in the passage of that infamous law. I will not allude to the mode or manner by which that law was passed. I desire to cover it up, to hide it from public view, for I have an entire loathing for it; and whenever I hear gentlemen on this floor talk about the purity of the Legislature in reference to that act I almost incline to put my hands upon my ears that I may not hear such a delusion attempted to be palmed upon an enlightened body of men such as I believe this Convention to be.

Now, Mr. President, this amendment strikes first at the railroad companies by declaring that they shall make no contract with a transportation company for carrying the goods of shippers for less than they will carry the goods of anybody else. It appends a punishment: It declares the contract void, and in addition to that it makes the company liable to a forfeiture of their charter, and until you append such a punishment as this, you will have this evil to continue. The second branch of the proposition provides that with regard to a contract made with the transportation companies, that such contract, if made at higher rates than the transportation company has agreed to carry for, under its contract with the railroad, that it shall be declared to be void; so that if the railroad company hereafter stipulates to carry goods for a transportation company for two cents per mile per ton the transportation company shall not charge me three cents per mile per ton. It strikes at the root of this evil, one which I think is very great, one which tends to the aggregation of sudden wealth in this Commonwealth amongst a few; for who cannot bear testimony to the fact that men who but to-day have been inaugurated as officers of a great railroad, like that of the Pennsylvania Central, worth nothing any one of them, become in the course of a few years possessed of an amount of wealth far beyond that of the aggregated wealth of the hundred lawyers of this Convention. Therefore I ask at the hands of every member of this body a careful consideration of this important proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment of the delegate from Allegheny (Mr. S. A. Purviance.)

Mr. J. PRICE WETHERILL. I should like to ask the delegate from Allegheny one question. Incorporated companies, under the article now before us, have a right to place cars upon the road, the railroad company only furnishing the motive power and the road-bed. Certainly for the use of those cars there must be an agreement in regard to freight. I heartily agree with every word that the gentleman has said, and I am in favor of the amendment and believe if we can reach the transportation companies and keep them in check, we shall do good and accomplish a good purpose; and yet if they furnish the rolling stock they certainly ought to be entitled to something for that rolling stock, and they certainly ought to be entitled to a discrimination in favor of that stock as against freighters not furnishing rolling stock. I do not think the amendment as offered by the gentleman from Allegheny covers that ground.

Mr. S. A. PURVIANCE. In answer to the gentleman from Philadelphia, I will simply say that the railroad company, being a common carrier in the first instance, it is bound to carry my goods, and if it has the power under its charter to fluctuate between a maximum of three cents per ton per mile and a lower rate, all I ask is that it shall protect itself as far as necessary for furnishing cars, but that the rates shall be entirely uniform.

Mr. LILLY. I should like to ask the gentleman whether under the general railroad law the charge for freight covers the case of cars? The freight is a separate charge and does not cover the cars. The Reading railroad makes a contract with a mining company that is engaged in mining coal to carry its coal, but the rate of freight is a different thing from the use of the cars.

Mr. S. A. PURVIANCE. I answer the gentleman in this way: The railroad structure, the ground and the rolling stock of the railroad, constitute an entirety; it is but one railroad.

Mr. MANN. Mr. President: If I understand the section offered, we have already adopted all its principles, and the only thing now in it is imposing a penalty. Now, as the courts have abundant power to enforce the Constitution, it seems to me that it is hardly worth while to adopt a new section simply to put a penalty in. We have already adopted all the principles of this section, and I desire to record my vote against it, and call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BOYD. I second the call.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. It requires ten delegates to second the call for the yeas and nays.

More than ten delegates rose.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I ask that the amendment be read again. Several gentlemen desire the reading.

The amendment was read.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I desire to inquire whether this is beyond the reach of amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. It is not.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I move to strike out that part of the section which provides for the forfeiture of charter.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on that amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BUCKALEW. There ought always to be some proportion between offence and punishment. It would be very unreasonable that all the stockholders of the great corporations, many of them residing beyond the limits of the State, many of them widows, persons interested in estates, should be fined heavily in their property for the most minute misconduct of the officers of a company of which they were the stockholders. The slightest amount of discrimination—to the extent of five dollars—would throw all the immense property of the stockholders in railroad corporations into a condition of confiscation. If you make it illegal to make these contracts, they can be arrested at the instance of anybody by the courts in an equity proceeding. Besides that, the Legislature could pass any additional remedies in the way of punishment. I think this latter part of the section is so grievous that unless it is struck out I must vote against it.

Mr. S. A. PURVIANCE. I will say, in answer to the gentleman from Columbia, this: If a railroad company through its officer is guilty of a violation of a constitutional provision, such as several of those in the Constitution now, ought not the company to suffer? Why should they not suffer, because they are responsible for the election of their officers? Beside that, the language of this provision is "may be liable to forfeiture of charter." There may be cases in which a proper discrimination would be made. I hope, therefore, that this clause will not be stricken out.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. I sympathize entirely with the amendment offered by the delegate from Columbia (Mr. Buckalew.) I also sympathize with the spirit of the amendment of the delegate from Allegheny (Mr. S. A. Purviance.) I regard this itself as an exceedingly important proposition; and the section of country which I more immediately represent is very largely affected by the evil at which this section aims. I recollect a few years ago when the Judiciary Committee of the Senate of Pennsylvania investigated this question of discrimination in freights; and this matter of fast freight lines, of "rings" within rings, was the subject of investigation more particularly, and I remember at that time the testimony of some of the most prominent business men in this Commonwealth, some of whom indeed are members of this Convention, who were large shippers, who detailed that their business was largely affected by the existence of these lines; and the report of that committee, together with the testimony as it stands, any gentleman who desires to be informed on the crying evil against the trade of Pennsylvania created by these transportation lines in which the officers of the roads are so largely interested, can find by reference to the proceedings of the session of 1869.

Whilst this is true, there is much wisdom in what the delegate from Columbia has said, that it is possible to make a penalty so severe, so out of proportion to the offence committed, that it will not be enforced, that its severity will prevent its enforcement. Therefore I am in favor of the amendment offered by the delegate from Columbia and am opposed to the forfeiture of the charter because of a malfeasance of this kind by the officers managing the road. It is a penalty out of proportion to the offence; but if it only affected the officers of the roads themselves we might not complain. But we must not understand that all corporations are presumed to be for the benefit of the stockholders; the rank and file of the people, persons who may have trust funds invested in the stock of this railroad will be largely affected.

For this and other reasons, which I could suggest if I desired to take the time of the Convention, I am in favor of striking out that provision and will vote for the amendment and then for the section.

Mr. KNIGHT. Mr. President: From the votes this morning it would seem that all these sections and perhaps many more will pass the Convention. If they do I think the railroads will require some protection, and if in order, I want to offer this:

"No railroad company shall grant free passes or passes at a discount to any persons except officers or employees of the company."

The PRESIDENT pro tem. There is an amendment to the amendment of the delegate from Allegheny already pending.

Mr. KNIGHT. I will offer this when there is an opportunity.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment of the delegate from Columbia to the amendment of the delegate from Allegheny.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question recurs on the amendment of the delegate from Allegheny as amended.

Mr. MANN. The yeas and nays were called for on that.

Mr. KNIGHT. Is my amendment now in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. It is.

Mr. KNIGHT. I move to add to the amendment:

"No railroad company shall grant free passes or passes at a discount to any person except an officer or employee of the company."

The PRESIDENT pro tem. I do not think it will come in well to any part of this proposed section.

Mr. KNIGHT. Then I will offer it as a new section hereafter.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Clerk will call the roll on the amendment of the delegate from Allegheny.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. Do I understand that this is a new section offered by the delegate from Allegheny as amended on the motion of the delegate from Columbia?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. That is the question.

SEVERAL DELEGATES. Let it be read.

The CLERK read the amendment as amended as follows:

"All discriminations made by railroad companies, being common carriers, in their rates of freights or passage over their roads in favor of transportation companies or others engaged in transportation, by abatement, drawback or otherwise, are hereby prohibited; and all contracts made with any transportation company or others engaged in the business of transportation for carrying freights or passengers over any railroad within the State at higher rates than those agreed upon by and between said railroad companies and transporters are hereby declared void."

Mr. KAINE. I call for a division of the question, the first division to end with the word "prohibited."

Mr. MANN. I rise to a question of order. The yeas and nays having been ordered, it is too late to call for a division.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Chair sustains the point of order, if insisted upon. The Clerk will call the yeas and nays on the amendment of the gentleman from Allegheny as amended.

The question was taken by yeas and nays with the following result :

Y E A S .

Messrs. Alricks, Baer, Baily, (Perry,) Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Baker, Biddle, Black, Charles A., Brown, Buckalew, Bullitt, Calvin, Campbell, Carter, Cochran, Corbett, Corson, Cronmiller, De France, Elliott, Ewing, Fulton, Funck, Gilpin, Guthrie, Hall, Harvey, Hay, Horton, Lamberton, MacConnell, McCulloch, McMurray, Mantor, Patterson, D. W., Patterson, T. H. B., Purman, Purviance, Samuel A., Read, John R., Reynolds, Russell, Smith, H. G., Smith, Wm. H., Struthers, Turrell, Van Reed, Wherry, White, David N., White, Harry, White, J. W. F. and Worrell—60.

N A Y S .

Messrs. Barclay, Bigler, Boyd, Brodhead, Broomall, Edwards, Fell, Green, Howard, Kaine, Knight, Lear, Lilly, Mann, Niles, Patton, Reed, Andrew, Rooke, Simpson, Smith, Henry W., Walker and Wetherill, Jno. Price—22.

So the amendment as amended was agreed to.

ABSENT. — Messrs. Achenbach, Adicks, Ainey, Andrews, Armstrong, Bannan, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Beebe, Black, J. S., Bowman, Carey, Cassidy, Church, Clark, Collins, Craig, Curry, Curtin, Cuyler, Dallas, Darlington, Davis, Dodd, Dunning, Ellis, Finney, Gibson, Hanna, Hazzard, Hemphill, Heverin, Hunsicker, Landis, Lawrence, Littleton, Long, MacVeagh, M'Camant, M'Clean, Metzger, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Newlin, Palmer, G. W., Palmer, H. W., Parsons, Porter, Pughe, Purviance, John N., Ross, Runk, Sharpe, Stanton, Stewart, Temple, Wetherill, J. M., Woodward, Wright and Meredith, President—51.

Mr. KNIGHT. I now offer the following amendment as a new section, to come in at this point :

"No railroad company shall grant free passes or passes at a discount to any person except officers and employees of the company."

Mr. COCHRAN. I am entirely in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from the city and hope it will be adopted, but I propose to amend it by adding the following, to come in at the end :

"Every ticket, except excursion tickets, issued to any passenger by any such company, shall entitle the holder of any such ticket to transportation over the works of such company from his place of departure to his place of destination either by continuous train or by any other train on which the same rate of fare is charged, without any additional charge or subjecting him to any inconvenience because of his stopping off at intermediate points."

I merely wish to say in regard to this amendment—I do not intend to detain the Convention long on this subject—that it is designed to prevent an evil which I think ought to be corrected and which it is probably necessary for us to correct here. A very great injury is done to parties by compelling them to pay double fare in case of their merely stopping off at an intermediate point. There seems to be no necessity why that should be done, and why a man should be compelled to go clear through to his destination on the train on which he starts. If he fails to do so, the punishment inflicted is the punishment of paying fare over again. I cannot see any justice in that, and the fact is that in very many cases these tickets are given in such a way that parties can stop off at particular points and use their tickets at any time.

I give this illustration : A man can get a ticket at some western point all the way through to the city of Baltimore cheaper than he can buy it to the town of York, sixty miles less distant. These tickets are so arranged that he can take off a coupon when he gets to York and have left a coupon from York to Baltimore, which he can sell to another party at any time. I know that this has been done, because I have had it from gentlemen who have done it more than once. Why, then, should any penalty be imposed upon a man merely for stopping off at an intervening point and getting on another train? It certainly cannot be because the railroad company is inconvenienced by it, because if that were so the same argument would apply to the case which I have cited. There would be no inconvenience to the railroad company. It is useless to say that a railroad company gets up its trains to accommodate a certain number of passengers that are to go in any special train. That is not so. It is impracticable, because no company knows the number of passengers who are to go on any train, in advance of its starting; and there is no train that runs, unless it is a through train that does not stop, which will not take up a passenger at any point where it stops, provided he pays his fare. Why, then, should a man who has a ticket entitling him to ride from Philadelphia to Harrisburg, and who may desire from any business whatever to stop over two or three hours in Lancaster, be required to pay an additional fare from Lancaster to Harrisburg, as a penalty for his stopping off?

I know that it has been decided, very wrongfully in my judgment, in our courts that a man who takes a ticket of that kind without any notice on it that he is not permitted to stop off, if he does stop off may be made to pay additional fare. That has been a decision of the Supreme Court. They say that he is bound by a notice he never saw. The notice is not even printed in the smallest possible type on the back of his ticket, but it may be stuck up in some office where it has never attracted the attention of the purchaser of the ticket. I think it is nothing more than justice that passengers in this State should have a right of this kind to stop off at any point, and be carried on to their place of destination without additional charge being made. The company have actually no greater expense, and the argument that there might be any inconvenience to them arising from it seems to me to be without foundation.

Mr. KNIGHT. I trust that this amendment will not prevail. We, this morning, voted down a similar clause proposed by the gentleman from Lycoming (Mr. Armstrong.) The section that I have offered is short, plain and can be easily understood. If the gentleman's amendment is coupled with it it may embarrass it in such a way as probably to interfere with its passing. If the gentleman is desirous of having his views submitted to the Convention, I much prefer that he would offer them in the form of a separate section.

Mr. BOYD. I rise to a point of order. Is the amendment to the amendment germane to the proposition to which it is offered?

Mr. COCHRAN. I think it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. It is not so ungermane that the Chair will not recognize it as an amendment.

Mr. KNIGHT. I hope the gentleman will withdraw it.

Mr. COCHRAN. I do not desire to embarrass the amendment of the gentleman from Philadelphia, and therefore I will withdraw my amendment for the present.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. I move to amend by striking out the words "except officers and employees."

Mr. KNIGHT. I hardly think that would be proper because the conductor and brakemen of trains are employees of the road and they must ride on the train.

Mr. BIDDLE. Let us take the vote on it.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. I merely want to explain my purpose. The word "employee" is a very large and comprehensive one. If we want to strike, as I have no doubt my friend from Philadelphia does, by this proposed new section, at what some regard as an evil—I do not know whether all the members of this Convention so view it or do not—let us make it effective. The word "employee" is a very comprehensive expression. It is customary for railroad officers to issue, as matters of courtesy, passes to members of the Legislature and members of Congress. I do not know that some people do not consider that they are actually employees of the railroad companies.

Mr. BOYD. I call for the orders of the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The hour of one o'clock having arrived, the Convention will take a recess until three o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention re-assembled at three o'clock P. M.

RAILROADS AND CANALS.

The Convention resumed the consideration on second reading of the article on railroads and canals.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. When the Convention took its recess the pending question was on the amendment of the delegate from Indiana (Mr. Harry White) to the amendment of the delegate from the city, (Mr. Knight,) offered as a new section. The amendment and the amendment to the amendment will be read.

The CLERK. The amendment was to insert as an additional section:

"No railroad company shall grant free passes or passes at a discount to any person except officers or employees of the company."

The amendment to the amendment was to strike out the words "except officers or employees of the company."

Mr. HARRY WHITE. Mr. President: I desire to be heard upon that amendment. I am perfectly sincere in offering it. It is consistent entirely with the amendment offered by my friend, the delegate-at-large from the city of Philadelphia (Mr. Knight.) I am entirely sure that it is perfectly practicable to adopt this amendment. I recall the attention of the Convention to the fact—

Mr. BOYD. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman has already spoken on this amendment, and he is therefore out of order.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. When the Convention adjourned at noon I was on the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The delegate from Indiana had only spoken eight minutes. He has two minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. BOYD. I withdraw my point of order.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. I protest that I had not spoken eight minutes, but I desire to be brief in my remarks now.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Chair is so informed.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. I am perfectly sincere in offering the amendment, for if we are to adopt a proposition of this kind I submit it is entirely impracticable to insert the exception allowing passes to be issued to employees of the road. Delegates in this Convention who are business men can recall to their minds the ingenuity with which officials of railroad companies can imagine temporary employment upon the part of individuals applying for passes or persons whom they may desire to accommodate, to evade the letter of the law while they come within its spirit.

I am entirely sincere in the amendment I offer. If we are really to strike at this system, if there is abuse in the matter of issuing passes, which I am not prepared here to say, desire this Convention to go the whole length, not to stop half way, not to allow a bartering with pretexts that will allow them to select their favorites for the purpose of giving them passes and exclude those who are actually entitled to them for charitable or indigent reasons.

I know that a great many railroad passes are issued. I do not think any man can be influenced in his vote or in his action by the privilege of a ride upon the road of any corporation of this Commonwealth by virtue of a free pass. I submit, if there is any corruption in our Legislature, if there is any corruption in any of our public assemblies, it is not to be attributed to the issuing of passes. Men who will sell themselves and sell their votes require a greater consideration than the mere privilege of riding upon these roads by themselves or their friends.

I submit that it is perfectly practicable to prevent the issuing of passes to anybody. It may be said that employees must have passes from time to time to transact the business of the company. Let the companies pay them their expenses, add to their salaries, and in that way reach the privilege of issuing passes. I know that members of the Legislature, I know that the members of Congress, I know that United States Senators and other officials in this Commonwealth receive passes, and I verily believe that fact has no influence whatever upon their official conduct; but I am not going to be a laggard in the march for reform in this regard, if the majority of this Convention think it is a reform; and if we do take this step I do not want to stop half-way, but desire to go the whole length, and for that reason I have offered the amendment which is now before the body.

Mr. CURTIN. I sincerely trust that the subject of issuing free passes on the railroads of the State will be treated by this body as a serious question, not only for the benefit of the railroads themselves, for surely they cannot ask that free passes shall be granted to any person, but also for those who are traveling.

Sir, the man who ought to have a free pass never gets it. The rich man gets the pass because he has influence. The member of the Legislature gets the pass because he has votes in that body and can pass bills. The members of this Convention get passes because they have influence in passing upon the Constitution. Whether it affects the mind of the member of the Legislature or the member of this body is of no consequence at all; it is the fact that such persons get passes.

That a great public work should not be permitted to give passes to the persons employed on that public work is to me a most remarkable proposition, and I am surprised at the gentleman from Indiana offering such an amendment. That the officials of a railroad should not be permitted to pass over it at the pleasure of the company seems improper and unjust. While the gentleman says he is in sober seriousness, I think that he either has designs on this wholesome provision in the Constitution, or that his remarks are to be taken in a Pickwickian sense; and sometimes I think that the intelligent delegate from Indiana is slightly Pickwickian in this Convention. [Laughter.] To the exercise of charity by railroad companies to paupers and indigent people there can be no objection; but that passes shall be given by a railroad company to the few and the favored, and those who ought to have them shall not get them, is a distinction in society which is unjust, and it is a means of corruption which is well known.

If the railroad pass was confined to the member of the Legislature alone, it might be proper, and if we put into the Constitution a section that all members of the Legislature during their official terms should travel free on the railroads of the State, it might be a judicious provision; I think they have a provision of that kind in New Jersey; but when you suffer a railroad company not only to give the member of the Legislature his pass, but to as many of his constituents as he chooses to ask for or to give a defined number which he may sell at his pleasure, which is an indirect means of getting at the conscience of the member which your constitutional provision against bribery or the double-stitched oath of Judge Black might not fully reach.

I trust, therefore, Mr. President, that this question will be seriously treated by this Convention. I lived in a despotic government for three years and a half, where such a thing as a free ticket on a railroad is unknown. The Czar of Russia pays his fare when he travels on the railroads in his own empire, precisely as the humblest citizen of his empire. I do not think the system of giving passes prevails in Germany, or France, or to any large extent in England. It is only in this country that the stockholders of railroads are taxed to pay for the official indulgence given by the controllers of their work to their favorites, to members of the Legislature, and to those in official station, to judges and others. It is one of the expectations of the people of Pennsylvania, that, fairly and honestly this Convention shall put into the Constitution an enactment which shall forever put a stop to the granting of such indulgences, and I trust that this Convention will meet that public expectation promptly.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President: I have no doubt that this Convention mean to treat this subject seriously, and no doubt they intend to adopt this amendment, and I hope it will be adopted unanimously. I do not agree altogether with the delegate-at-large, the gentleman from Centre, that the issuing of free passes comes off the stockholders. I believe it comes off the shippers and the men who have business on the road. Everybody has to be taxed a greater rate to make up for this loss, and so the community after all have to pay for these passes. It would be far better for the community, no doubt, and far better for the railroads in the end if we adopted some provision of this kind. If we adopt it, then the railroads are done with importunities from everybody. I think, however that they should have a right to pass without any objection whatever their officers, and I do not know why they should not pass their employees on the line of their roads.

The best law that ever was made can be evaded. We have a law that "thou shalt not kill, and yet men kill; we have a law that "thou shalt not steal" and yet men steal; we have a law that men shall not commit burglary, and yet they do it; they violate the ten commandments and all the statute laws now existing.

I can see no reason why the amendment of the delegate from Indiana should be accepted by this body. I should hope it would be voted down and that we would adopt the proposition presented by the delegate from Philadelphia unanimously and let the people of the Commonwealth understand that we mean earnestly to effect a reform upon this question.

Mr. KNIGHT. I trust the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana will be voted down. It would be impossible to manage a railroad if the conductor, brakemen, firemen, engineers and other employees of a company could not travel on its trains to take them along. I offered this section in entire seriousness. In the early part of the sessions of this Convention I declared that if such a section was to be put in the Constitution it should be put in here. I know of a road of this State to which it costs half a million of dollars a year for free passes. I know further that those people who, as a general rule, ought to be entitled to free passes, if anybody, do not get them; and I know that it has a corrupting influence on parties in high position, because they can get passes whenever they want them.

If passes were done away with the public generally could travel at a lower rate, because there would not then be three traveling in a car on a free pass and two paying fare; all would travel on the same fare alike, and the company could take them at a lower rate. This section will not affect excursion tickets or coupon tickets, because it does not fix any rate on tickets; it only says that when a rate is fixed by the company it shall not be deviated from, but all persons, rich and poor, shall alike travel on the same terms.

A director is not an officer of a road, and under this section a director would have to pay his fare. Some of the best managed roads of this country do not issue any free passes. I am a director in three companies, the Pennsylvania railroad company, the North Pennsylvania railroad company, and the Philadelphia and Trenton railroad company, which connect directly with the Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore railroad company, and when I go to Baltimore I always buy my ticket. There is no way of getting a free pass over it. If we were to adopt this section, it would save a great deal of trouble, a great deal of corruption, and the result in my judgment would do a great deal of good.

Mr. COCHRAN. I do not rise to discuss this matter. I merely wish to suggest to the consideration of the gentleman from Philadelphia whether it would be inexpedient to insert in his amendment, as the Committee on Railroads and Canals did in the section which was rejected in committee of the whole, to include among the excepted persons not only officers and employees, but poor and indigent persons who are objects of charity.

Mr. KNIGHT. I do not want to include that exception.

Mr. COCHRAN. It seem to me that railroad companies ought not to be prevented from doing acts of charity.

Mr. CORSON. It seems to me that it is utterly impossible to meet this case by a constitutional provision. If railroad companies are to derive any advantage from this, let them make it a general regulation of the company. If we undertake to go into these details, we shall never get through with our work, and we shall have a Constitution so long that it will fall to pieces of its own weight. The idea of our attempting to say here that no man, woman or child in the State of Pennsylvania shall have a free pass unless employed on a railroad is perfectly absurd. The man who works on a farm is as much entitled to a pass as a man who works for a railroad company; but that is a matter for the railroad companies to regulate. I think it is greatly to their credit that the Governor of Pennsylvania and the President of the United States do not have to pay for their tickets, and in that respect we are far ahead of Russia. I think it is too late in the day to turn us back to the dynasties and the despotisms of the old world. It is time for us to put a stop to all this special business. I believe that this section is about as wise as one-half of the sections that were proposed by this committee on the subject of railroads, and I believe when we come finally to vote upon it, it will share the fate of one half of these propositions and be voted down.

Mr. ALRICKS. Mr. President: We have all been anxious that this provision should be introduced into the Constitution. It comes from a source we have not expected. I feel my indebtedness to the gentleman for making the suggestion. The committee had reported it. Here is their own report:

"No railroad, canal or other corporations engaged in the business of a common carrier or transporter shall permit the gratuitous transportation over its road or canal of any person or persons, except its own officers or employees, or poor and indigent persons."

Now, I am obliged to the gentleman for it, because I believe as it was reported by the committee we should have adopted it.

I hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana will not prevail, for the reasons that have been given by the distinguished delegate from Centre (Mr. Curtin.) It appears to me a frivolous objection, and therefore I trust that we will not think for one moment of adopting it. We ought not to allow the directors of companies to be continually annoyed by persons for passes; just as the judge has gone upon the bench who was to try a cause in which the railroad company was a party, he has been tendered his pass, and after the jury were called to the bar and they were challenged four jurors had free passes in their pockets, and they had been called to sit upon a jury in which the railroad company was a party!

Now, Mr. President, I know the evil that this system is working. It is ruinous to shareholders; it is ruinous to the morals of the country. It has demoralized the Legislature, and I for one trust that this Convention will vote down the amendment and unanimously adopt the section that has been offered by the gentleman from Philadelphia.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President: I hardly suppose that the gentleman from Montgomery (Mr. Corson) was in earnest in the expression he made of the hope that he had that this section would be voted down unanimously. I hope it will be voted in unanimously, and I think it would do the Convention vastly more credit than the other course. If this was a matter in which only the interests of the railroads were concerned, and not the public at large, it would be something, perhaps, not fit to introduce into the fundamental law, but we have reason to believe that it has had a deteriorating influence upon the public, and that it has been abused. The gentleman from Indiana says that free passes have had no bad effect, and never will have any such effect. I can scarcely believe that he is serious. I can scarcely believe it possible. So far as the money value of the pass goes it is an indirect bribe or inducement held out for favorable consideration.

The gentleman from Centre (Governor Curtin) mentioned to me, sometime back, that he had known as many as thirty passes given to each of the members of the Legislature and Senators. These were matters of familiar knowledge, and it is idle to attempt to justify the practice.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. Allow me to interrupt the gentleman. May I ask the delegate whether he, as a member of this Convention, has accepted and traveled on a free pass or not?

Mr. CARTER. You may ask that with perfect safety. I have not; nor have I used any; I thought it was proper for me to return my passes and I did so.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. I am satisfied.

Mr. CARTER. What I did or did not do does not matter. I only say it is a matter of notoriety that passes have been given and given extensively in cases where thought to be useful. As I was saying, the gentleman from Centre stated that he had known between thirty and forty passes given to each member. These possessed a certain market value and no doubt were supposed by the donors to be well applied. Will gentlemen say that there was nothing corrupt in that? I do not say that those individuals were corrupted by it, or at least influenced, or they were more than human, and it was unquestionably of a corrupting character. It could not be otherwise in the nature of things, and therefore it does concern us that if we wish to purify the legislative bodies, if we wish to keep pure the judiciary, that we remove this temptation. I think it is eminently proper this thing should be done.

The instance was referred to of the Emperor of Russia, and it was sneered at as taken from one of those despotic dynasties, as the gentleman from Montgomery termed them. I apprehend that we can copy what is good from any source with propriety.

Mr. BIDDLE. Certainly; "business is business."

Mr. CARTER. It is a good example; and the source from which this amendment came, the most excellent delegate from Philadelphia, who sits behind me, (Mr. Knight,) having known and seen the necessity of such an enactment, entitles it to consideration. It may not answer all the purposes intended, but unquestionably it is a movement in the right direction. I hope, therefore, that it will pass.

One word more. The late delegate from Philadelphia, (Mr. Gowen,) among certain reforms in reference to railroads which he said it was the duty of this body to pass, specified this matter of free passes as one of them. No doubt he had seen the abuses of the system, and was desirous to correct them.

Mr. SIMPSON. I shall vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, because if this inflexible rule is to be put in the Constitution it should bear alike upon every human being; there should be no exception to the rule. If the employees and officers of a railroad company are required to travel on the road, the company can furnish them with tickets and charge them to expenses, and there should be no device and no means by which any human being could travel free of charge on the railroads. If it is to be put in the Constitution, let us make it so inflexible that it cannot be evaded or escaped from under any circumstances. Unless you adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, you will have railroad companies who want to avoid this provision employing thousands and tens of thousands of persons to do trivial work for the mere purpose of furnishing them the means of riding on their road free.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment of the delegate from Indiana (Mr. Harry White) to the amendment of the delegate from Philadelphia, (Mr. Knight,) to strike out the words, "except officers and employees."

Mr. BOYD. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, ten delegates rising to second the call, and being taken resulted as follows:

YEAS.

Messrs. Baer, Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Boyd, Broomall, Brown, Campbell, Corbett, Corson, Edwards, Fulton, Gilpin, Green, Guthrie, Hanna, Hunsicker, Lear, Lilly, MacConnell, M'Murray, Mann, Patterson, T. H. B., Purman, Purviance, Sam'l A., Russell, Simpson, White, Harry and White, J. W. F.—27.

NAYS.

Messrs. Alricks, Bally, (Perry,) Bannan, Barclay, Biddle, Bigler, Black, Charles A., Brodhead, Buckalew, Calvin, Carter, Cochran, Cronmiller, Curtin, Dallas, De France, Elliott, Ewing, Funck, Hall, Harvey, Hay, Horton, Howard, Kaine, Knight, Lamberton, Landis, M'Culloch, Mantor, Newlin, Niles, Patton, Read, John R., Reed, Andrew, Reynolds, Rooke, Smith, H. G., Smith, Henry W., Smith, Wm. H., Temple, Turrell, Van Reed, Walker, Wherry, White, David N. and Worrell—47.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Achenbach, Ad-dicks, Ainey, Andrews, Armstrong, Baker, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Beebe, Black, J. S., Bowman, Bullitt, Carey, Cassidy, Church, Clark, Collins, Craig, Curry, Cuyler, Darlington, Davis, Dodd, Dunning, Ellis, Fell, Finney, Gibson, Hazzard, Hemphill, Heverin, Lawrence, Littleton, Long, MacVeagh, M'Camant, M'Clean, Metzger, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Palmer, G. W., Palmer, H. W., Parsons, Patterson, D. W., Porter, Pughe, Purviance, John N., Ross, Runk, Sharpe, Stanton, Stewart, Struthers, Wetherill, J. M., Wetherill, Jno. Prieg, Woodward, Wright and Meredith, President—59.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. I move to amend the amendment, by adding after the word "company," the words "traveling on the business of such company," so as to read:

"No railroad company shall grant free passes or passes at a discount to any person, except officers or employees of the company traveling on the business of such company."

Mr. KAINE and others called for a division on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. Before a division is called or a vote is taken, I submit that if we are sincere in this matter and want to except officers and employees, this expression should be included. It is perfectly reasonable and proper. I submit that there are gentlemen, officers of railroad companies, traveling in palace cars and indulging in luxuries that the stockholders of such companies cannot indulge in.

Mr. KAINE. I have just a word to say in reply to the gentleman from Indiana. A pass is given by a railroad company to one of its employees. He proposes to insert an amendment there that the employee shall only use that pass when he is traveling on the business of the company. How are you to make that definition? Are you going to leave it to the employee to say "now I am going on business of the company and I will use this pass," and "now I am going on my own business, and I will pay my way." How is the officer or conductor of the road to know anything of that kind? The thing is utterly impossible.

SEVERAL DELEGATES. Swear him.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I desire to say a few words upon the main question, as I perceive we are to have debate pending amendments, and I may as well say what I desire now. I intended originally to vote against this proposition abolishing free passes; but I have changed my mind, and now, being one of those who intend to vote against this proposition—

Mr. M'MURRAY. I rise to a point of order. Is it in order to discuss the question now while the vote is being taken and a division called for?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. A division was called for.

Mr. M'MURRAY. When the vote is being taken, I submit whether discussion is in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The yeas and nays were not called for. The delegate from Columbia is in order.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I say, sir, that now, being classed among the supporters of this proposition, I appeal to its friends to keep all amendments off. It is obviously intended by putting amendments on this proposition to break it down. Of course, that will be the ultimate effect. By the section itself we have a simple rule, that railroad companies shall not issue free passes unless to their officers and employees, of course while they are in their employment or officers of the company; and if there is any abuse, we must leave it to the Legislature to correct it.

But I undertake to say that this amendment will be one of the most acceptable amendments that you can propose to the railroad companies themselves. The officers of railroad companies now are harassed, absolutely harassed with applications from all quarters for free passes, and so long as the fashion of issuing them is permitted to exist at all, the harassment of railroad companies will continue, and they will be obliged to do more than the interests of their own stockholders require, under this general system of favoritism. I believe that every well regulated railroad company in the State will rejoice in accepting, along with their fellow citizens, an amendment of this kind. It will not only relieve them from great abuses in the management of their own companies by ending the issuing these passes on the principle of favoritism, but it will also protect the interest of the stockholders and relieve the companies from a great deal of public odium which now attends upon the pass system; and while that is the aspect of the question as to the railroad companies themselves, it will be about the same as to the great mass of the community outside of those organizations.

The amendment will be very acceptable to the people, and they will accept it as a proclamation against the exercise of a species of illegitimate influence of railroad companies, not only upon members of the Legislature but upon the judges of our courts, upon the jurymen who are im-pannelled in our courts; and upon men of high influence and position throughout the Commonwealth who apparently are subsidized to some extent by these corporations by the issuing of these passes to them.

Taking into account that these are the views that honorable railroad companies and the general public will hold upon this subject, I believe this to be one of the most popular amendments which we can place in the Constitution.

Yet I can perceive that it is an imperfect measure in itself, and that there will be various modes of evading it to some extent. You must permit the issuing of commutation tickets, and they may be issued at nominal rates if the railroads choose, and in other respects to some extent the operation of this amendment may be avoided. But as to that you can rely to some extent upon the interest of the railroad companies and their stockholders against the issuing of free passes. This will be to some considerable extent a security against attempted evasions.

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. President: I have not uttered a word since the railroad report has been under consideration. I desire to say that I was in favor of this reform when this subject was before the Convention before; but, like the distinguished delegate from Columbia, I have changed my mind upon this subject; and it is for this reason that I desire to express my views in about a dozen words before the vote is taken.

The reason I shall vote against this proposition is that I believe it to be a blind only for the purpose of giving a railroad corporation an opportunity to refuse railroad passes to the citizens at large, whereas they can issue them to politicians and legislators and others in authority, without stint.

Now, Mr. President, I submit to the delegates upon this floor that it is a mere blind to undertake to place a thing like this in the Constitution. It is admitted here by delegates that members of the Legislature can become employees of a corporation temporarily. It has been admitted also by delegates upon this floor that legislators can buy commutation tickets for, if you please, five or ten cents apiece, and yet the great bug-bear will go out into the community, leaving the business interests and the business men of this State to believe that this Convention has effected a great reform in this respect, when it really has effected nothing.

I do not believe in such a reform, and I say to delegates upon this floor if this be an abuse at all, which I do not undertake to say here, so far as legislators are concerned, it is traceable directly to the corporations themselves.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment of the delegate from Indiana (Mr. Harry White) to the amendment of the delegate from the city (Mr. Knight.)

Mr. HARRY WHITE. I call for the yeas and nays.

Ten members rose to second the call.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The call is sustained.

The question was taken by yeas and nays with the following result :

Y E A S .

Messrs. Alricks, Baer, Bailly, (Perry,) Broomall, Campbell, Corbett, Corson, Cronmiller, Edwards, Fulton, Gilpin, Guthrie, Hanna, Howard, Hunsicker, Lilly, MacConnell, M'Culloch, M'Murray, Mann, Mantor, Patterson, T. H. B., Patton, Purviance, Sam'l A., Read, John R., Russell, Simpson, Smith, Henry W., White, David N., White, Harry and White, J. W. F.—31.

N A Y S .

Messrs. Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Bannan, Barclay, Biddle, Bigler, Black, Chas. A., Boyd, Brodhead, Brown, Buckalew, Bullitt, Calvin, Carter, Cochran, Curtin, Dallas, De France, Elliott, Ewing, Funck, Green, Hall, Harvey, Hay, Horton, Kaine, Knight, Lambertson, Landis, Newlin, Niles, Purman, Reed, Andrew, Reynolds, Rooke, Smith, H. G., Smith, Wm. H., Temple, Turrell, Van Reed, Walker, Wherry and Worrell—43.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Achenbach, Addicks, Ainey, Andrews, Armstrong, Baker, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Beebe, Black, J. S., Bowman, Carey, Cassidy, Church, Clark, Collins, Craig, Curry, Cuyler, Darlington, Davis, Dodd, Dunning, Ellis, Fell, Finney, Gibson, Hazzard, Hemphill, Heverin, Lawrence, Lear, Littleton, Long, MacVeagh, M'Camant, M'Clean, Metzger, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Palmer, G. W., Palmer, H. W., Parsops, Patterson, D. W., Porter, Pughe, Purviance, John N., Ross, Runk, Sharpe, Stanton, Stewart, Struthers, Wetherill, J. M., Wetherill, J.

Price, Woodward, Wright and Meredith, President—59.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question recurs on the amendment of the delegate from Philadelphia (Mr. Knight.)

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move to amend the amendment, by striking out all after the word "section" and inserting the following :

"No corporation engaged in the business of a common carrier shall permit the gratuitous transportation over the road or canal owned or controlled by it of any person except its own officers and employees."

That is stronger than the section offered by the gentleman from Philadelphia (Mr. Knight.) It is substantially the section reported by the Railroad Committee. I like the formation of it better, and it will prevent any possibility of the railroad company evading this prohibition. I propose to call for the yeas and nays upon it.

Mr. NILES. I should like to inquire if the amendment of the gentleman from Philadelphia will allow an employee to ride upon a gravel train? It seems to me it will not.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes, it will.

Mr. KNIGHT. I do not think the amendment is as strong as the proposition I offered. The language of my section is that there shall be no ticket issued at a discount. The amendment does not cover that point.

Mr. COCHRAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Philadelphia, (Mr. Campbell,) and which is now pending, was considered in the Committee on Railroads, and was reported in this form. I think it is probably better expressed than the one originally offered by the other gentleman from Philadelphia, (Mr. Knight,) and I certainly prefer the form of expression of that amendment to that of the original amendment. It differs from it in extending also to poor and indigent persons.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I call for the yeas and nays on the amendment to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, ten delegates rising to second the call.

Mr. CARTER. Let it be read.

The CLERK read the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. KNIGHT. Now, I should like to say one word. It will be observed that the language of that amendment is that no railroad shall permit of gratuitous transportation. The language of my amendment is that the tickets shall not be free or sold at a discount. If a man can get a ticket for a five cent piece, it is not gratuitous; he pays something for it. I do not think the amendment is in any way a substitute for the one offered by myself.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I withdraw my amendment and will vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Philadelphia, as there seems to be some difference of opinion on the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question then recurs on the amendment of the delegate from the city (Mr. Knight.)

Mr. HANNA. I move to amend the amendment by adding the following:

"And shall provide every purchaser of a ticket with a seat in the cars of said company and with ice in the water coolers." [Laughter.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. I hope such nonsense as that will be voted down at once.

Mr. EWING. I submit that that is not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The amendment to the amendment is not in order. The question is on the amendment of the delegate from the city (Mr. Knight.)

Mr. CAMPBELL. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, ten delegates rising to second the call, and being taken resulted as follows:

YEAS.

Messrs. Alricks, Baer, Baily, (Perry,) Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Barclay, Biddle, Bigler, Black, Charles A., Boyd, Brodhead, Broomall, Buckalew, Calvin, Campbell, Carter, Cochran, Cronmiller, Curtin, Dallas, De France, Edwards, Ewing, Fulton, Funk, Gulpin, Green, Guthrie, Hall, Heverin, Horton, Howard, Kalne, Knight, Lamberton, Landis, MacConnell, M'Clean, M'Culloch, M'Murray, Mann, Mantor, Newlin, Patterson, T. H. B., Patton, Purman, Purviance, Samuel A., Read, John R., Reed, Andrew, Reynolds, Rooke, Russell, Smith, H. G., Smith, Henry W., Smith, Wm. H., Turrell, Van Reed, Walker, Wherry, White, David N., White, J. W. F. and Worrell—62.

NAYS.

Messrs. Armstrong, Bannan, Bullitt, Corbett, Corson, Elliott, Hanna, Harvey, Hay, Hunsicker, Lilly, Niles, Simpson, Temple and White, Harry—15.

So the amendment was agreed to.

ABSENT—Messrs. Achenbach, Addicks, Ainey, Andrews, Baker, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Beebe, Black, J. S., Bowman, Carey, Cassidy, Church, Clark, Collins, Craig, Curry, Cuyler, Darlington, Davis, Dodd, Dunning, Ellis, Fell, Finney, Gibson, Hazzard, Hemphill, Lawrence, Lear, Littleton, Long, MacVeagh, M'Camant, Metzger, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Palmer, G. W., Palmer, H. W., Parsons, Patterson, D. W., Porter, Pughe, Purviance, John N., Ross, Runk, Sharpe, Stanton, Stewart, Struthers, Wetherill, J. M., Wetherill, Jno. Price, Woodward, Wright and Meredith, President—56.

Mr. COCHRAN. I offer the following as a new section, to come in at this place:

"Every ticket except excursion tickets issued to any passenger by any railroad company shall entitle the holder of such ticket to transportation over the works of such company from his place of departure to his place of destination, either by continuous train or by any other train on which the same rate of fare is charged, without any additional charge or subjecting him to any inconvenience because of his stopping off at intermediate points."

I merely wish to say that this is the same form which I offered as an amendment to the section proposed by the gentleman from Philadelphia this morning, and I withdrew it in order that he might have his section voted on without any embarrassments. I ask that this may be considered and disposed of, and I ask for the yeas and nays on its passage.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I rise to a question of order. That having been already voted down, is out of order now.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. It was withdrawn, not voted down.

Mr. BRODHEAD. A similar section was voted on.

Mr. HOWARD. It was voted down in committee of the whole in connection with the same subject offered by the delegate from Philadelphia, (Mr. Knight,) but has not been considered at all at this stage.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CALVIN. I second the call.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Do ten members rise to second the call?

More than ten members rose.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The call is sustained, and the Clerk will proceed with the call.

Mr. LILLY. I offer the following as an amendment,

"Provided, That the conductor shall punch the ticket of every passenger on passing each station."

I simply have offered this amendment to show into what a ridiculous position we are getting. We are running this whole thing into the ground, and putting the smallest things possible into the article, probably leaving out, at the same time, some of the larger things that ought to go in; of course I was not serious in offering this amendment—and I now withdraw it.

Mr. CORBETT. I hope that the Convention will pause here. It will be perceived that we are running into very small details in this article. We are undertaking to control things that ought to be left to the Legislature. We can certainly trust that body with something. We are not making an article declaring general provisions that are to govern railroads, but we are descending to details. What is this proposition? What is it but a proposition to regulate tickets and the manner in which they shall be used by railroads. If a man purchases a ticket from one point to another, he understands the rule of the company. If the rule of the company be that he may upon that ticket ride continuously upon one train, he understands that fact distinctly. If he wants to drop off at a point in his journey, he can purchase his ticket to that point and drop off, and then he can purchase a ticket from that point to the end of his journey, and he is not in any sense compelled to pay two fares. It is all wrong for us to attempt to descend to regulate this matter by a constitutional provision. The fact is, I think, that we have enough of detail in this article now, when it comes up as an article before the people, to defeat it. There is enough to defeat it, and it ought to be defeated. I hope the Convention will pause. We cannot possibly put in this article provisions that are to regulate railroads for all time to come, and it is time I think that we stop.

Mr. HOWARD. Before the vote is taken, I should like very much myself, personally—of course I have no right to dictate terms to anybody else—to state that I would very much prefer that the offering of new sections should be stopped for the present, in order to allow us to finish the work of the Committee on Railroads and Canals. I think the way we are going on is only calculated to embarrass the rest of our work, and I think it is due to the Committee on Railroads that the Convention should go forward with their report, and complete it first. We have now stopped here, in the middle of the report, and clogged up enough new sections for two railroad articles, after we had adopted several sections that preceded them, and while we have several sections still under consideration. I now propose that we go straight on and complete this report before any more new sections are introduced.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Chair would state that this section was offered by the chairman of the Committee on railroads, and as such the Chair certainly did not deem it his duty to interfere, although he believes that the suggestion of the gentleman from Allegheny is wise and proper.

Mr. COCHRAN. We have just passed a section which was reported by the Committee on Railroads and Canals and which was stricken out by the committee of the whole. This new section which I offered was also part of the same section which was originally reported along with that which we have just adopted. As far as this matter of going into detail is concerned, this is a question of as great public interest, and is as much due to the protection of the parties having charge of our public highways, as any other that we have adopted, because it has been determined by the highest judicial authority of this State that whether a man may have seen a notice or had a notice put on his ticket or not, he shall not be permitted to stop at any intermediate point and then go on in another train unless he pays full fare.

Mr. MANN. I think it would be wise to postpone the consideration of this section for a short time, so that we can have a full code of regulations by which the railroad companies shall be run. We seem to have come down to that now, and I do not think that we ought to stop at a little matter of issuing tickets. We ought to pass an entire set of rules for the management of the railroads in the State. We have undertaken to frame laws for the Legislature. Now we have commenced framing laws for the railroads. I believe next we shall commence to frame rules for school directors.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment. The yeas and nays have been called on that question and the Clerk will proceed with the call.

The yeas and nays were taken, and were as follow, viz:

Y E A S .

Messrs. Alricks, Baer, Baily, (Perry,) Boyd, Calvin, Campbell, Carter, Cochran, Curtin, De France, Funck, Gilpin, Hanna, Howard, Landis, Lear, M'Culloch, Patterson, T. H. B., Reynolds, Russell and Turrell—21.

N A Y S .

Messrs. Achenbach, Armstrong, Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Bannan, Barclay, Biddle, Bigler, Black, Charles A., Brodhead, Broomall, Brown, Buckalew, Bullitt, Corbett, Corson, Cronmiller, Curry, Dallas, Edwards, Elliott, Ewing, Fulton, Green, Guthrie, Hall, Harvey, Hay, Heverin, Horton, Hunsicker, Kaine, Lamberton, Lilly, MacConnell, Mann, Mantor, Newlin, Niles, Patton, Purman, Purviance, Samuel A., Read, John R., Reed, Andrew, Rooke, Simpson, Smith, H. G., Smith, Henry W., Smith, William H., Temple Van Reed Walker, Wherry, White, David N., White, Harry, White, J. W. F. and Worrell—55.

So the amendment was rejected.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Addicks, Ainey, Andrews, Baker, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Beebe, Black, J. S., Bowman, Carey, Cassidy, Church, Clark, Collins, Craig, Cuyler, Darlington, Davis, Dodd, Dunning, Ellis, Fell, Finney, Gibson, Hazard, Hemphill, Knight, Lawrence, Littleton, Long, MacVeagh, M'Camant, M'Clean, M'Murray, Metzger, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Palmer, G. W., Palmer, H. W., Parsons, Patterson, D. W., Porter, Pughe, Purviance, Jno. N., Ross, Runk, Sharpe, Stanton, Stewart, Struthers, Wetherill, J. M., Wetherill, John Price, Woodward, Wright and Meredith, President—57.

The PRESIDING OFFICER [Mr. Simpson in the chair.] The Clerk will read the next section of the article.

The CLERK read as follows:

SECTION 9. No railroad, canal, or transportation company shall issue any stock or bonds, except for money, labor, or property actually received and applied to the purposes for which such corporation was created, and all stock dividends and other fictitious increase of the capital stock or indebtedness of any such corporations shall be void. The capital stock and corporate indebtedness of railroad, canal, or other corporations engaged in the business of common carriers or transporters shall not be increased, except in pursuance of a general law, nor without the consent of a majority in value of the stockholders of such corporation first obtained at a meeting to be held after sixty days' notice given in pursuance of law. All laws heretofore enacted by which an increase of the capital stock or of the bonds or other evidences of indebtedness of any corporation, railroad or canal has been authorized, are hereby declared void, except so far as may be necessary to maintain the obligation of contracts made and executed in accordance therewith.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I move to strike out in the fourth line the words "all stock dividends and other" and insert the word "any," so as to make the section read—

Mr. COCHRAN. I appeal to the gentleman from Northampton to let me offer a section as a substitute for this for the purpose of perfecting it, and then, if agreeable to him, he can move his amendment.

Mr. BRODHEAD. If the amendment is agreeable to good sense so that we can all vote for it, I will withdraw my amendment to let the gentleman from York offer his substitute.

Mr. COCHRAN. I move the following as a substitute for the entire section:

"No corporation shall issue stock or bonds except for money, labor or property actually received; and all stock dividends and fictitious increase of stock or indebtedness shall be void. The stock and indebtedness of corporations engaged in the business of common carriers or transporters shall not be increased except in pursuance of general law, nor without the consent of the persons holding the larger amount in value of the stock first obtained at a meeting to be held after sixty days' notice given in pursuance of law. Laws heretofore enacted by which an increase of stock or bonds or other indebtedness of any corporation has been authorized are hereby declared void, except so far as may be necessary to maintain the obligation of contracts."

I merely wish to say that the amendment which I have offered is intended to make the language of the section less verbose. It does not materially affect the provisions of the section. An expression in the original section provided that no increase of indebtedness in these cases should be made without the consent of a majority in value of the stockholders, which I think to be a very unfortunate form of expression. I have modified that so as to read: "Without the consent of the persons holding the larger amount in value of the stock."

In all other respects, the amendment is the same in substance and effect with the printed section, except that it is made larger in applying not merely to railroad corporations and corporations doing the business of common carriers, but to all corporations, that no corporation shall issue stock or bonds, but the part with regard to the increase of capital is confined to railroad and canal companies only. "No corporation shall issue stock or any other indebtedness except for money or labor actually received; and all stock dividends and other fictitious increase of capital stock invested in any corporation shall be void." That is general, but the second clause is confined to railroad corporations.

MR. BRODHEAD. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the words "stock dividends and." All my observation and all my experience in corporations has been that as a general thing stock dividends are generally the most honest that are made, but this amendment classes them with fictitious increases of the capital stock. I am perfectly willing that a section shall be inserted which shall declare void all fictitious increase of stock or indebtedness; but stock dividends in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred are not fictitious. They are the result of earnings of the company which have been appropriated to improvements and extensions, and are, I am very free to say, the most honest dividends that are made. In the manner in which this section is framed it classes stock dividends with a fictitious increase of stock. Now, sir, when corporations have earned money and have put it into their improvements or into extensions, and the stock which is issued upon that is very frequently more genuine, more money goes in there, than any of the stock originally issued. The full intent and meaning of the committee will be attained by declaring that all fictitious increase of stock or indebtedness shall be void, striking out the words "stock dividends and," because, as I remarked before, the stock dividends nine times out of ten are the most genuine dividends made by any companies in this Commonwealth.

MR. BROOMALL. I have a suggestion to make which I hope will meet the approbation of the Convention. We are making no headway. We shall not get a railroad article that will suit the Railroad Committee and the people; at least I am very much afraid of it. All of us desire to get this business on second reading and let the people see what it is; and I propose that we let the opponents of railroads have their own way upon this article; that we offer no amendments and no objections, but permit them to get it up exactly to suit themselves, and that we fall back upon our opportunity of requiring a separate vote upon any article by a vote of forty-five of our number. If, then, there should be more people in the State in favor of stage coaches and Conestoga wagons than of railroads, they can adopt the article. If, on the other hand, a majority of the people of the State are opposed to running the civilization of the age back a century or so, they need not vote down our whole Constitution in order to get rid of this very singular production. I think if we had adopted a rule when we first met, requiring the Railroad Committee to ride a week in stage coaches before they attempted to prepare an article, we should have had an article that probably the people of the State would adopt.

MR. BULLITT. Before the vote is taken on this section, I desire to say a word or two.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER, [Mr. Simpson in the chair.] The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from Northampton (Mr. Brodhead.)

MR. BULLITT. I so understand, but I understand it is a substitute for the section.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. No; it is to strike out certain words in the proposed substitute.

MR. BULLITT. I will wait until that vote is taken.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Northampton.

MR. BRODHEAD. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

MR. BOYD. That is a very important proposition, and I hope we shall have the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered, ten delegates rising to second the call, and being taken, resulted as follows:

YEAS.

Messrs. Armstrong, Baer, Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Bigler, Black, Charles A., Boyd, Brodhead, Broomall, Brown, Buckalew, Bullitt, Carter, Corbett, Corson, Cronmiller, Curry, Curtin, Dallas, De France, Edwards, Elliott, Ewing, Green, Guthrie, Hall, Harvey, Heverin, Hunsicker, Kaine, Lamberton, Lilly, Mann, Mantor, Newlin, Niles, Patton, Purman, Read, John R., Reed, Andrew, Russell, Simpson, Smith, Henry W., Smith, Wm. H., Van Reed, Walker, White, David N., White, Harry, White, J. W. F. and Worrell—49.

NA YS.

Messrs. Achenbach, Alricks, Baily, (Perry,) Bannan, Barclay, Biddle, Calvin, Campbell, Cochran, Funck, Gilpin, Hay, Howard, Landis, MacConnell, M'Culloch, Patterson, D. W., Patterson, T. H. B., Purviance, Samuel A., Reynolds, Rooke, Temple, Turrell and Wherry—24.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

ABSENT. — Messrs. Addicks, Ainey, Andrews, Baker, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Beebe, Black, J. S., Bownan, Carey, Cassidy, Church, Clark, Collins, Craig, Cuyler, Darlington, Davis, Dodd, Dunning, Ellis, Fell, Finney, Fulton, Gibson, Hanna, Hazzard, Hemphill, Horton, Knight, Lawrence, Lear, Littleton, Long, MacVeagh, M'Camant, M'Clean, M'Murray, Metzger, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Palmer, G. W., Palmer, H. W., Parsons, Porter, Pughe, Purviance, John N., Ross, Runk, Sharpe, Smith, H. G., Stanton, Stewart, Struthers, Wetherill, J. M., Wetherill, John Price, Woodward, Wright and Meredith, President—60.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the substitute as amended.

Mr. BULLITT. Before the vote is taken on this section, I propose to call the attention of the Convention, and especially of the chairman of the Railroad Committee, to what appears to me to be rather remarkable language used in this section. I understand that the amendment offered substantially agrees with the section as we have it before us. Now, the first two lines of this section provide as follows:

"No railroad, canal, or transportation company shall issue any stock or bonds except for money, labor, or property actually received and applied to the purposes for which such corporation was created."

I believe the amendment is substantially the same.

SEVERAL DELEGATES. Oh, no; it has been changed.

Mr. BULLITT. I should like to hear the amendment read as it now stands.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read for information.

THE CLERK read as follows:

"No corporation shall issue stock or bonds, except for money, labor, or property actually received, and all fictitious increase of stock or indebtedness shall be void. The stock and indebtedness of corporations engaged in the business of common carriers or transporters shall not be increased except in pursuance of general law, nor without the consent of the persons holding the larger amount in value of the stock first obtained at a meeting to be held after sixty days notice given in pursuance of law. Laws heretofore enacted by which an increase of stock or bonds or other evidences of indebtedness of any corporation has been authorized are hereby declared void, except so far as may be necessary to maintain the obligation of contracts."

Mr. BULLITT. The remarks which I intended to make were applicable particularly to the words "and applied," and therefore I have nothing to say now as they do not appear in the substitute.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I desire to call the attention of the Convention to the fact as I believe it is under the construction of this section. It will read thus, leaving out all except that which applies to this point:

"No railroad company or transportation company shall issue any bonds except for money actually received."

Under this section they could not discount a bond. If they issued a bond for one hundred dollars and got ten cents less than one hundred dollars, it would be a violation of this Constitution. I say it is entirely wrong, in my judgment; and it cannot be carried out.

Then they are confined to six per cent. interest. How are railroads to get along? If they issue a bond for one hundred cents and only get ninety-nine they do not issue a bond for the money received; they issue it for more than the money received, and it is just as much a violation of this Constitution as though they only received one cent for a bond of $100. It totally forbids discounts on bonds, and as it stands I certainly cannot vote for the section with that provision in it. That part of it which provides against fictitious stock and that the stock shall not be increased without the consent of the stockholders I approve of; but with this provision in it I do not see how I can vote for it. I will move to strike out—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman that if he calls for a division of the question terminating with the word "void," in the fifth line, he will accomplish his purpose.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Well, sir, I was going to move an amendment but I suppose it would not be of any use, and I shall not do it.

Mr. EWING. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the words "engaged in the business of common carriers or transporters, so that that portion of the section will read: "The stock and indebtedness of corporations shall not be increased except in pursuance of a general law."

The effect of this amendment, if adopted, would be to make the provision applicable to all corporations. The amendment offered by the gentleman from York strikes out in the first part of the section the limitation to railroad, canal and transportation companies, and very properly I think; but when he comes to the second portion of it, which says that the stock of these corporations shall not be increased without the consent of the majority of the stockholders, he limits it to railroad and transportation companies. The section as offered is a kind of conglomerate. Now, if the provision requiring notice and requiring the consent of all the stockholders is a good one for railroad corporations. I cannot see why it is not a good one for all corporations. The evil intended to be corrected is one which prevails in other corporations, bridge companies, gas companies, and a great many others, just as much as it does in railroad corporations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the delegate from Allegheny (Mr. Ewing) to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "sixty" and inserting "thirty." Thirty years ago sixty days notice would have been proper, but in these days of telegraphs and fast lines, a notice of thirty days is all that is necessary. I believe we have uniformly hertofore on all the other sections of the Constitution stricken out "sixty" and inserted "thirty," and I therefore move the same amendment here.

Mr. COCHRAN. I hope the limitation in point of time will not be reduced. There ought to be an opportunity for the stockholders to have fair notice.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment offered as a new section as amended.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. EDWARDS. I second the call.

Mr. BOYD. I should like to know what we are to vote about.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from York as amended.

Mr. BOYD. I should like to hear it read, because nobody understands what is going on here to-day.

The CLERK read as follows:

"No corporation shall issue stock or bonds except for money, labor or property actually received, and all fictitious increase of stock or indebtedness shall be void. The stock and indebtedness of corporations shall not be increased except in pursuance of general law nor without the consent of the persons holding the larger amount in value of the stock first obtained at a meeting to be held after sixty days notice given in pursuance of law. Laws heretofore enacted, by which an increase of stock or bonds or other evidences of indebtedness of any corporation have been authorized, are hereby declared void, except so far as may be necessary to maintain the obligation of contracts."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will proceed with the call.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. Mr. President: I wish to call for a division.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The call will proceed.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I rise to a point of order. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will proceed with the call of the roll. It is too late to call for a division. The amendment was read merely for information. The Clerk will proceed with the call of the roll on the amendment as amended.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. I should like to have a division of the section. ["Too late."]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That cannot be done now. The call will proceed.

The question being taken by yeas and nays resulted as follows:

Y E A S.

Messrs. Achenbach, Alricks, Bailly, (Perry,) Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Biddle, Black, J. S., Brown, Calvin, Campbell, Carter, Cochran, Dallas, De France, Ewing, Fulton, Funck, Gilpin, Guthrie, Hall, Hay, Horton, Howard, Landis, M'Culloch, M'Murray, Mantor, Newlin, Patterson, D. W., Patterson, T. H. B., Purviance, Samuel A., Reynolds, Rooke, Russell, Simpson, Smith, H. G., Smith, Wm. H., Turrell, White, David N., White, Harry and White, J. W. F.—40.

N A Y S.

Messrs. Armstrong, Bannan, Barclay, Bigler, Black, Chas. A., Brodhead, Broomall, Buckalew, Bullitt, Corbett, Corson, Cronmiller, Curry, Edwards, Elliott, Green, Harvey, Heverin, Hunsicker, Kaine, Knight, Lamberton, Lear, Lilly, MacConnell, Mann, Niles, Patton, Purman, Reed, Andrew, Smith, Henry W., Temple, Walker, Wetherill, J. M., Wherry and Worrell—36.

So the amendment was agreed to.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Addicks, Ainey, Andrews, Baer, Baker, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Beebe, Bowman, Boyd, Carey, Cassidy, Church, Clark, Collins, Craig, Curtin, Cuyler, Darlington, Davis, Dodd, Dunning, Ellis, Fell, Finney, Gibson, Hanna, Hazzard, Hemphill, Lawrence, Littleton, Long, MacVeagh, M'Camant, M'Clean, Metzger, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Palmer, G. W., Palmer, H. W., Parsons, Porter, Pughe, Purviance, John N., Read, John R., Ross, Runk, Sharpe, Stanton, Stewart, Struthers, Van Reed, Wetherill, Jno. Price, Woodward, Wright and Meredith, President—57.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the section as amended.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. I presume now we shall have the yeas and nays on the section as amended, and before the vote is taken I wish the first part of the division divided at the word "law," in the eleventh line, preceding the words, "Laws heretofore enacted."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the substitute as amended.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. Let that be divided as I have suggested at the word "law." The second division then will commence with the words, "Laws heretofore enacted," &c.

Now, Mr. President, my reason for asking for this division is this: I have voted for the report of the Railroad Committee in the main; I design to do so still; but it is not my desire to do impracticable or unwise things if I know it; but if I voted for this entire section it seems to me I should be doing an unwise and imprudent thing. I desire and design to vote for the first clause of this section as amended; I design to vote against the second clause, which is as follows, in the print, though somewhat different in words in the amendment now pending:

"All laws heretofore enacted by which an increase of the capital stock or of the bonds or other evidences of indebtedness of any railroad or canal company has been authorized are hereby declared void, except so far as may be necessary to maintain the obligation of contracts."

Mr. President, for many years the Legislature has authorized the increase of the capital stock to a certain amount of large railroad corporations of this Commonwealth. A few years ago the Pennsylvania railroad asked for the increase of her capital stock, in the Legislature of 1867. I believe the then Executive of the Commonwealth vetoed the bill. There was an effort made to pass it over his veto which succeeded in one House but failed in the other, and a compromise was made between the parties who opposed and those who favored—

Mr. BOYD. I rise to a point of order. My point of order is that it is not in order for the gentleman to discuss what the Pennsylvania railroad company has done in the Legislature and the history of the legislation upon that subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Simpson.) The point of order is not well taken.

Mr. BOYD. I am sorry that I must appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now before the Convention is a matter upon which it may be very proper for gentlemen to refer to legislative proceedings by way of illustration.

Mr. BOYD. I understand that there is a distinct proposition at issue here, and the gentleman's remarks are in relation to specific legislation with regard to a particular railroad company and the course of the Legislature upon that subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reason why such a clause should be in the Constitution or not in the Constitution is proper to be discussed, and arguments may be advanced and illustrations used.

Mr. BOYD. I appeal from the decision of the Chair. I say the ruling of the Chair is incorrect, and he should decide that the gentleman is not in order in discussing—

Mr. DALLAS. I rise to a point of order. Debate is not in order pending an appeal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is not in order. The Chair will state the question to the Convention.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. May I proceed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The gentleman from Indiana will pause until the gentleman from Montgomery submits his appeal in writing.

Mr. NILES. What is the question on which he has appealed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The gentleman from Montgomery raised a point of order; the Chair made his decision; and the gentleman from Montgomery has been directed to reduce his appeal to writing, when it will be submitted to the Convention by the Chair.

The appeal having been reduced to writing was submitted and read as follows:

"Mr. Boyd appeals from the decision of the Chair that the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. Harry White) is in order in stating what the Legislature did in 1867, in relation to the passage of an act by the Legislature authorizing the Pennsylvania railroad company to borrow money, and the course of the members of the Legislature in relation to the passage of said act, which is, in the opinion of the undersigned, not relevant."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the appeal seconded?

Mr. HEVERIN. I second the appeal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Convention?

Mr. BOYD. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HEVERIN. I second the call.

Mr. MANN. Mr. President: I rise to a question of order. The appeal must be signed by two members in writing.

Mr. BOYD and Mr. HEVERIN thereupon signed the appeal.

Mr. HUNSICKER. Now, I move an adjournment.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. No, no; let us settle this matter.

Mr. HUNSICKER. Very well.

Mr. WHERRY. I ask that the question be distinctly stated before the yeas and nays are called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state the question. The gentleman from Indiana was discussing the pending proposition and referred to some action of a railroad company in the Legislature. The gentleman from Montgomery objected to his proceeding as not being in order. The Chair ruled that he was in order, from which decision an appeal has been taken. The question is, shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Convention, upon which question the yeas and nays have been called for.

Mr. BOYD. Mr. President: In addition to what you have stated, you omitted to state that the gentleman was discussing, or making remarks in relation to, the conduct of members of the Legislature. ["Question." "Question."]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been called for and the call seconded. The Clerk will call the names of members.

The CLERK proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SIMPSON, [when his name was called.] I ask leave of the House to be excused from voting upon this question, so that it shall not appear upon the Journal that I was absent when the vote was taken.

Unanimous leave was given.

The result was announced, as follows:

YEAS.

Messrs. Achenbach, Armstrong, Baer, Baily, (Perry,) Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Bannan, Barclay, Biddle, Bigler, Black, Charles A., Black, J. S., Brodhead, Brown, Buckalew, Bullitt, Calvin, Campbell, Carter, Cochran, Corbett, Cronmiller, Curry, Dallas, De France, Edwards, Elliott, Ewing, Fulton, Funck, Gilpin, Green, Guthrie, Hall, Harvey, Hay, Horton, Howard, Hunsicker, Kaine, Lamber-ton, Landis, Lilly, MacConnell, M'Clellan, M'Culloch, M'Murray, Mann, Mantor, Niles, Patterson, D. W., Patterson, T. H. B., Patton, Purman, Purviance, Samuel A., Read, John R., Reed, Andrew, Rooke, Russell, Smith, H. G., Smith, William H., Van Reed, Walker, Wetherill, J. M., Wherry, White, David N., White, Harry, and White, J. W. F.—67.

NAYS.

Messrs. Boyd, Heverin, Reynolds, and Smith, Henry W.—4.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Addicks, Ainey, Alricks, Andrews, Baker, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Beebe, Bowman, Broomall, Carey, Cassidy, Church, Clark, Collins, Corson, Craig, Curtin, Cuyler, Darlington, Davis, Dodd, Dunning, Ellis, Fell, Finney, Gibson, Hanna, Hazzard, Hemp-hill, Knight, Lawrence, Lear, Littleton, Long, MacVeagh, M'Camant, Metzger, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Newlin, Palmer, G. W., Palmer, H. W., Parsons, Porter, Pughe, Purviance, John N., Ross, Runk, Sharpe, Simpson, Stanton, Stewart, Struthers, Temple, Turrell, Wetherill, J. Price, Woodward, Worrell, Wright and Meredith, President—62.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The gentleman from Indiana will proceed.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. The act of 1867 increasing the stock of the Pennsylvania railroad company became a law. At the same session an act was passed increasing the stock of the Allegheny Valley railroad company, and as the result of that law large improvements have been projected and are now being made in the construction of a low grade railroad in a region of country which previously had not been traversed by rail. The Lehigh Valley railroad company also had extended to it the privilege of increasing its capital stock, all of which has not been used. The Reading railroad company also had conferred upon it an increase of its capital stock, and acts were passed authorizing an increase of the capital stock of the Pittsburg, Charlestown and Virginia railroad company, and the Connells-ville railroad company. These corporations were all legitimate corporations, enterprises engaged in good faith in the development of the resources of the Commonwealth, and they will all be directly affected by the operation of this section and affected injuriously to the interests of their stockholders. They have never complained of the passage of these acts. Since the General Assembly passed them there have been meetings of these corporations; there have been meetings of the boards of directors and meetings of the stockholders, and no successful complaint has ever been made against the acts of Assembly increasing their stock. Therefore I am opposed to the latter part of this section.

Mr. HOWARD. I desire to say a few words in reply to the gentleman from Indiana. I understand that he is opposed to the latter clause of this section.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. Only.

Mr. HOWARD. Yes, "only;" and, Mr. President, that clause was introduced by the unanimous vote, if I remember aright, of this Convention, which instructed the Railroad Committee to report such a provision.

Mr. MANN. It was not unanimous.

Mr. HOWARD. If it was not unanimous it was nearly so. The instruction was given by a full vote of this Convention after deliberation, and there is no doubt that this concluding clause is a very valuable part of the section. Some of the corporations of this Commonwealth have wrung from the Legislature the right to increase their capital stock to any extent that they please. There is no limit to the power of some of them in this respect. They have the power to borrow money without limit, with which to buy up and monopolize all the coal and mineral land in this Commonwealth, and there is no way of reaching this monstrous abuse except by a provision of this kind, that so far as they have issued stock, and so far as innocent purchasers have taken it, so far they shall be protected. It would be monstrous to leave this matter in the position in which it is at present. We know perfectly well that there are corporations in this Commonwealth which have the right to issue stock and bonds without any limit whatever. This provision is intended to apply to corporations of that description, and it certainly ought to be adopted by this Convention.

There are three divisions of this section, and each division is valuable, valuable for the people of the Commonwealth, for the business interests of the State, and for its individual enterprises. We all know perfectly well that one of the great and wealthy corporations of this Commonwealth has already obtained a charter whereby it has the right to buy up all the coal lands and all the mineral lands of the State. It is wrong in principle, and I have no doubt that the people of this Commonwealth, especially the people on the seaboard, will find it so to their cost. That great monopoly now talks about putting up the price of coal, and it will do it. It will wring the necks of the people of the city of Philadelphia, and its manufacturers, before it gets done with them. It has laid its giant hand upon the coal interests of Pennsylvania, east of the mountains, to such an extent that it is bound to control them. It has the power to issue stock and bonds to an unlimited amount to enable it to do so, and if it is necessary that power will be backed by English capitalists to the amount of $100,000,000 or more if necessary.

Is not the necessity for the adoption of this clause, that the delegate from Indiana is so anxious to strike out, apparent? He says that it will affect several railroad companies which have already received such unlimited power at the hands of the Legislature. Suppose these companies are arrested by this section in further issues of stock. It is easy to apply to the Legislature, and in a proper case they can have conferred upon them the right to increase their capital stock to any proper amount. But hereafter it should be known that stock will not be allowed to be increased without limit. We should know that the stock is to be used for a legitimate and a valuable purpose, that it is to build railways, that the issue of stock is necessary to build them, and that it is not the intention to water the stock or increase it unnecessarily. After this stock is increased it must be made to earn dividends. It must make its proper interest, and the people of the Commonwealth must be taxed in the price of transportation for the purpose of raising money to pay dividends on that stock, and therefore it is the right of the people to know that those issues of stock are necessary and that the proceeds are to be used for legitimate and proper improvements.

That is all this section contemplates. It is good in all its parts. It was considered by the Committee on Railroads and Canals long and laboriously, and I desire to say that while we did not happen to have upon that committee the president of any railroad, nor any of the very distinguished railroad lawyers of this Convention, we had the proper and the necessary information at our command to direct us in our work. I see that one of the Philadelphia papers, in reporting the proceedings of this Convention upon the consideration of this railroad article, states that the gentleman from Philadelphia (Mr. Cuyler) made the tremendous point against the Railroad Committee that it did not have upon it or before it a railroad officer to enlighten it. That Railroad Committee labored faithfully and honestly and they had all the knowledge which it was possible to obtain by honest industry. I talked with railroad men in order to ascertain their views, and all the idea that I could obtain from them was that they would like to cut each others' throats. [Laughter.]

Suppose we had called before the Committee on Railroads and Canals from the Pennsylvania railroad company Thomas

A. Scott, and then gone to Baltimore and called Mr. Garrett of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad company, then gone to New York and called upon Mr. Gould and Vanderbilt; do you suppose that they would have ever, upon the face of this earth, been able to agree as to what would be a proper provision to be put into the Constitution? No, sir; it would be simply a game of sharpers to see which could get ahead of the others, and we would have never been able to get a sensible and logical idea from any one, or all of them, as to what would be best for the interests of the country. The Railroad Committee had the benefit of the information of as good men as there are in the Commonwealth and far better than the newspapers of Philadelphia. I understand perfectly well that the people of the Commonwealth have got the idea into their heads that the delegates from Philadelphia are entirely running this Convention, because no matter what any other delegate may say, the Philadelphia papers only give half of his name, while everything, or the substance thereof, that is said by the delegates from Philadelphia gets into the papers, and anyone reading the newspapers of this city would naturally suppose that all the rest of the Convention sat here listening and voting in silence. That is what we got for coming to Philadelphia. Part of the contract was that if we came to this city the great city of Philadelphia had plenty of newspapers that would publish our proceedings so that the people of the Commonwealth would understand what we were doing.

The section is a good one. It is good in all its parts, and the last part is the best, and it is of the very utmost importance that this Convention shall place this part of that section in the Constitution. If this Convention desires to protect the citizens of the Commonwealth against some, at least, of the giant monopolies that have been created by the Legislature, either unguardedly or by some stupendous corruption, let them vote this section in entire; do not strike out its most important and vital part.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the first division of the section as amended.

Mr. CORBETT. I think that the latter part of the section is very important.

Mr. ANDREW REED. The latter clause is not before the Convention.

Mr. CORBETT. Has a division been called?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes, sir; the first division is to end with the word "law."

Mr. CORBETT. Then, as it is only the latter part of the clause to which I wish to allude, I believe I had better wait till that comes up.

Mr. BIDDLE. I should like to hear the first division of the section read.

The CLERK read as follows:

"No corporation shall issue stock or bonds except for money, labor, or property actually received; and all fictitious increase of stock or indebtedness shall be void. The stock and indebtedness of corporations shall not be increased, except in pursuance of general law, nor without the consent of the persons holding a larger amount in value of the stock first obtained at a meeting to be held after sixty days notice given in pursuance of law."

Mr. EDWARDS. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HUNSICKER. I second the call.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays are called for upon the question of agreeing to the first division of the section, and the Clerk will proceed with the call.

The yeas and nays being taken, resulted as follows:

YEAS.

Messrs. Achenbach, Alricks, Armstrong, Baer, Baily, (Perry,) Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Bannan, Biddle, Black, J. S., Brown, Buckalew, Calvin, Campbell, Carter, Cochran, Cronmiller, Curtin, Dallas, De France, Ewing, Fulton, Funck, Gilpin, Guthrie, Harvey, Hay, Horton, Howard, Landis, MacConnell, M'Culloch, M'Murray, Mann, Mantor, Patterson, D. W., Patterson, T. H. B., Purman, Purviance, Samuel A., Read, John R., Reynolds, Rooke, Russell, Simpson, Smith, H. G., Smith, Wm. H., Turrell, Van Reed, Wetherill, J. M., White, David N. and White, Harry.—50.

NAYS.

Messrs. Barclay, Boyd, Brodhead, Bullitt, Corbett, Corson, Curry, Edwards, Elliott, Green, Hunsicker, Kaine, Knight, Lamberton, Lear, Lilly, Niles, Patton, Reed, Andrew, Smith, Henry W., Walker, and Worrell.—22.

So the first division of the section was agreed to.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Addicks, Ainey, Andrews, Baker, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Beebe, Bigler, Black, Charles A., Bowman, Broomall, Carey, Cassidy, Church, Clark, Collins, Craig, Cuyler, Darlington, Davis, Dodd, Dunning, Ellis, Fell, Finney, Gibson, Hall, Hanna, Hazzard, Hemphill, Heverin, Lawrence, Littleton, Long, MacVeagh, M'Camant, M'Clean, Metzger, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Newlin, Palmer, G. W., Palmer, H. W., Parsons, Porter, Pughe, Purviance, John N., Ross, Runk, Sharpe, Stanton, Stewart, Struthers, Temple, Wetherill, John Price, Wherry, White, J. W. F., Woodward, Wright and Meredith, President—61.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the second branch of the section.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the gentleman rises to discuss the question it is too late. The question is on the second division.

Mr. COCHRAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. LILLY. I second the call.

SEVERAL DELEGATES. Let the division be read.

The CLERK read as follows:

"Laws heretofore enacted by which an increase of stock or bonds or other evidences of indebtedness of any corporation has been authorized, are hereby declared void, except so far as may be necessary to maintain the obligation of contracts."

The question was taken by yeas and nays, with the following result:

YEAS.

Messrs. Alricks, Baer, Baily, (Perry,) Campbell, Cochran, Ewing, Funck, Gilpin, Guthrie, Hall, Hay, Horton, Howard, M'Culloch, M'Murray and Patterson, T. H. B.—16.

NAYS.

Messrs. Achenbach, Armstrong, Baily, (Huntingdon,) Bannan, Barclay, Biddle, Black, J. S., Boyd, Brodhead, Brown, Buckalew, Bullitt, Calvin, Carter, Corbett, Corson, Cronmiller, Curry, Curtin, De France, Edwards, Elliott, Fulton, Green, Hunsicker, Kaine, Knight, Lamberton, Landis, Lear, Lilly, MacConnell, Mann, Mantor, Niles, Patterson, D. W., Patton, Purman, Purviance, Samuel A., Reed, Andrew, Reynolds, Rooke, Runk, Russell, Simpson, Smith, H. G., Smith, Henry W., Smith, Wm. H., Turrell, Van Reed, Walker, Wetherill, J. M., White, David N. and Worrell.—54.

So the second division of the section was rejected.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Addicks, Ainey, Andrews, Baker, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Beebe, Bigler, Black, Charles A., Bowman, Broomall, Carey, Cassidy, Church, Clark, Collins, Craig, Cuyler, Dallas, Darlington, Davis, Dodd, Dunning, Ellis, Fell, Finney, Gibson, Hanna, Harvey, Hazzard, Hemphill, Heverin, Lawrence, Littleton, Long, MacVeagh, M'Camant, M'Clean, Metzger, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Newlin, Palmer, G. W. Palmer, H. W., Parsons, Porter, Pughe, Purviance, John N., Read, John R., Ross, Sharpe, Stanton, Stewart, Struthers, Temple, Wetherill, John Price, Wherry White, Harry, White, J. W. F. Woodward, Wright and Meredith, President—63.

The CLERK read the next section as follows:

SECTION 10. All municipal, railroad, canal and other corporations, and individuals, shall be liable for the payment of damages to property resulting from the construction and enlargement of their works, as well as to owners of property not actually occupied as to those whose property is taken, and said damages shall be paid or secured to be paid before the injury is done.

MR. BRODHEAD. Mr. President: This subject was fully discussed while we were on the second reading of the article on corporations, and we adopted the section, which I will take the liberty of reading:

SECTION 6. No corporation shall engage in any other business than that expressly authorized in its charter, nor shall it take or hold any real estate except what may be necessary and proper for its legitimate business; and the Legislature is hereby prohibited from depriving any person of an appeal from any preliminary assessment of damages against corporations made by viewers or otherwise. The amount of such damages in all cases of appeal shall on the demand of either party be determined by a jury.

This is on exactly the same point, and it fully covers all that is endeavored to be met here.

MR. KAINE. I move to amend the section in the fifth line by striking out the words "to be paid." They are unnecessary. It will then read: "And said damages shall be paid or secured before the injury is done." "Secured" is sufficient.

MR. COCHRAN. I hope that amendment will not be adopted. We have used the ordinary legal language in this case.

MR. FUNCK. I offer the following as a substitute for the section—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not now in order and will not be until after the vote is taken on the pending amendment to strike out three words in the section. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Fayette (Mr. Kaine.)

The amendment was rejected.

MR. FUNCK. I move to amend by striking out all after the word "section" and inserting the following:

"No corporate or municipal body or individual shall take private property for public use or injuriously affect it by change of character of highway or otherwise, without being required to make compensation to the owner thereof for all damages, direct or consequential, resulting from such taking or injury, and such compensation shall be paid or secured before such property shall be taken or injured."

Mr. President, I have offered this substitute for the section because the section as adopted by the committee of the whole is too narrow and does not embrace several items of injury for which compensation should be made. A careful reading of the section as adopted will disclose the fact that it provides only for the payment of actual or direct damages. It makes no provision whatever for the payment of proximate consequential damage. For instance, if a railroad company in the construction of its railroad takes possession of the land of an individual and by means of a cut or the throwing up of a high embankment injures the property of an adjoining proprietor, that adjoining proprietor can recover no damages for the injury done him, no matter what the extent of the injury may be.

The damages provided for by the section are of this character: Suppose in the digging of a cut on the land of a proprietor, a house standing on the land of an adjoining proprietor should be injured by the caving in of its foundation. That is a case of direct injury and will be covered by the original section. Again, suppose in blasting rocks in making an excavation the house of the adjoining proprietor should be shivered. In that case damages could be recovered under the original section; but all other damages of a consequential character are not embraced in it.

Then, again, suppose a public highway has been laid out under the right of eminent domain—a public roadway for horses and teams to travel over. That may not be injurious to the property of the owners along the track; it may, on the contrary, be beneficial to them; but subsequently a railroad corporation acquires the right to construct a railroad over this public highway, and in doing it throws up an embankment or cuts a ditch by which the houses on both sides may be materially injured, there can be no recovery of damages under the original section. Nor does the original section apply at all to the case of a municipal corporation, for I should like to know what municipal corporation in anything that it may do properly comes within this section, unless it travels outside of what is usually done by municipal corporations—such as the construction of water works or the like “construction and enlargements of their work,” being the only term that applies to municipal corporations. Now, in the opening of streets, in the regulation of grades, in the construction of sewers and otherwise, the property of a citizen of the municipality may be very seriously injured, and yet the original section makes no provision for compensation. I submit to this Convention that whenever the property of an individual is injured by the exercise of the right of eminent domain, whether that injury be direct or consequential, the person should be compensated to the extent of his injury.

It may be said that if a railroad or any other public improvement is constructed over the land of A and the land of B is entirely untouched, the land of B is not injured, and consequently he should have no right to recover damages. In answer to that, I say that if, by the construction of this public highway, the land of B has been depreciated in value so that if it were put up at sale it would bring a thousand dollars less than it brought before the improvement was made, it is an injury to him to that extent, for which he should be compensated; it is just as clearly and manifestly a loss to him as if that much money had been taken out of his pocket. What difference can it make to him whether a portion of his property is appropriated to the construction of this public highway or whether his property is consequentially injured by reason of the work which has been done by the corporation? In either case, he has lost just as much as his property will bring less if put up at public sale, and whatever that may be is the extent of the injury for which he should be compensated.

It has been said heretofore that if a railroad corporation or any other corporation shall be called upon to pay injuries of this kind no public improvement can be made. I answer that in this way: If people are to be injured to this extent in order to allow these public improvements to be made, it is levying a sort of compulsory contribution upon them to the extent to which their property has been injured to make the improvements. That certainly is unjust. But, as I said before, whether that property is injured or whether it is taken can make no difference to them. Whatever the amount that it will bring less if sold at public sale, to that extent they have suffered; and all these injuries should be paid for, because public highways, although of great public utility, are not built by the stockholders for the purpose of benefiting the public or developing the resources of the Commonwealth, but mainly with the intention of making money for those who have invested their capital in the enterprise. That a great benefit results to the public is incidental to the improvement, and assimilates itself to the case of an individual who resides in a town and expends $20,000 or $30,000 in erecting a magnificent mansion for himself. All the property around him is enhanced in value on that account, and yet he would never think of going to his neighbors and levying an assessment on them to assist him in paying for his building. They are consequentially benefited. He never contemplated that, but it is one of the incidents of the improvement which he made. Precisely so with these corporations. No; whenever any such improvements are made any citizen of the Commonwealth injured thereby, whatever the extent of the injury may be, should be paid; they are not made at his instance, but frequently against his will under the authority of the government. And in many instances the injury falls upon individuals who are little able to bear it.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Lebanon.

MR. TURRELL. I wish to detain the Convention a moment to call to mind the fact that this section was very thoroughly considered on a former occasion and we had a great deal of declamation and argument upon it; and especially after a very luminous speech by the President of the Convention, Mr. Meredith, the language seemed to be adapted to express the idea that the Convention wanted to put into the section; and I do not believe that at this time we shall benefit by changing it. I hope it will be adopted just as it came from the hands of the committee of the whole.

Mr. EWING. Mr. President: This is a very important section if we adopt it either as it stands or as the amendment proposes to make it. It is one that I do not think can be considered properly to-night, one that proposes a radical change in several respects, and in order that the amendment may be seen and examined, I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

The question was put, and the motion was declared not to be agreed to.

Mr. LAMBERTON and Mr. WORRELL called for the yeas and nays, and they were taken.

Mr. ALRICKS. I rise to a point of order. This House is in session after six o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Nothing can interrupt the roll call. The result must be announced to the Convention.

The result was then announced as follows:

Y E A S .

Messrs. Alricks, Armstrong, Baer, Bailly, (Perry,) Biddle, Black, J. S., Buckalew, Cochran, Elliott, Ewing, Fulton, Funk, Hay, Kaine, Knight, Lamberton, Lear, Lilly, Niles, Patterson, T. H. B., Purviance, Samuel A., Smith, H. G., Smith, Henry W., Walker and White, Harry—25.

N A Y S .

Messrs. Achenbach, Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Bannan, Brodhead, Bullitt, Calvin, Campbell, Corbett, Corson, Cronmiller, Dallas, De France, Edwards, Gilpin, Green, Guthrie, Hall, Horton, Howard, Landis, MacConnell, M'Culloch, M'Murray, Mann, Mantor, Patterson, D. W., Patton, Reed, Andrew, Reynolds, Rooke, Russell, Simpson, Smith, Wm. H., Turrell, Van Reed, Wetherill, J. M., White, David N. and Worrell—38.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Addicks, Ainey, Andrews, Baker, Barclay, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Beebe, Bigler, Black, Charles A., Bowman, Boyd, Broomall, Brown, Carey, Carter, Cassidy, Church, Clark, Collins, Craig, Curry, Curtin, Cuyler, Darlington, Davis, Dodd, Dunning, Ellis, Fell, Finney, Gibson, Hanna, Harvey, Hazzard, Hemphill, Heverin, Hunsicker, Lawrence, Littleton, Long, MacVeagh, M'Camant, M'CLean, Metzger, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Newlin, Palmer, G. W., Palmer, H. W., Parsons, Porter, Pughe, Purman, Purviance, John N., Read, John R., Ross, Runk, Sharpe, Stanton, Stewart, Struthers, Temple, Wetherill, John Price, Wherry, White, J. W. F., Woodward, Wright and Meredith, President—70.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to adjourn is not agreed to. The hour of six o'clock having arrived, however, the Convention stands adjourned until tomorrow morning at nine o'clock.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-FIRST DAY.

TUESDAY, July 15, 1873.

Y E A S.

The Convention met at nine o'clock A. M., Hon. John H. Walker, President pro tem. in the Chair.

Prayer by Rev. J. W. Curry.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

Mr. KAINE asked and obtained leave of absence for Mr. Hanna for a few days from to-day.

Mr. BRODHEAD asked and obtained leave of absence for himself for a few days from to-day.

Mr. BOYD asked and obtained leave of absence for himself for the residue of this week.

Mr. LAWRENCE asked and obtained leave of absence for Mr. J. N. Purviance for a few days from to-day on account of sickness.

SUBMISSION OF CONSTITUTION.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I move to take up the resolution which I offered a few days ago in relation to an adjournment and the submission of the Constitution.

Mr. TEMPLE. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SIMPSON. I second the call.

Mr. D. N. WHITE. I understood a few days ago that that resolution came up and was rejected.

Mr. SIMPSON. I rise to a point of order. Is debate in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. It is not after the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. D. N. WHITE. I just wish to say that I offered a resolution the other day very similar to this, and I hope this resolution will be voted down for the purpose of taking up the other.

Mr. H. W. SMITH. Debate is in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Clerk will call the roll of members on the motion of the gentleman from Columbia to proceed to the consideration of the resolution offered by him.

The yeas and nays were taken with the following result:

Messrs. Ainey, Alricks, Baer, Bannan, Black, J. S., Brodhead, Broomall, Brown, Buckalew, Calvin, Cronmiller, Curry, Curtin, Elliott, Ewing, Green, Hall, Hanna, Harvey, Hemphill, Kaine, Knight, Lamberton, Littleton, MacConnell, M' Murray, Mantor, Newlin, Palmer, G. W., Patton, Porter, Pughe, Read, John R., Reynolds, Rooke, Ross, Smith, H. G., Smith, Henry W., Struthers, Turrell, Van Reed, Walker, Wetherill, J. M., White, J. W. F. and Worrell—45.

N A Y S.

Messrs. Achenbach, Bailly, (Perry,) Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Biddle, Bigler, Black, Charles A., Boyd, Campbell, Carter, Clark, Cochran, Corbett, Dallas, De France, Edwards, Fulton, Funck, Gilpin, Guthrie, Hay, Horton, Howard, Lawrence, Lear, Lilly, Long, M'Clean, M'Culloch, Mann, Patterson, D. W., Patterson, T. H. B., Purman, Purviance, Samuel A., Reed, Andrew, Russell, Simpson, Smith Wm. H., Temple, Wetherill, Jno. Price, White, David N. and White, Harry—41.

So the resolution was ordered to be read a second time.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Addicks, Andrews, Armstrong, Baker, Barclay, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Beebe, Bowman, Bullitt, Carey, Cassidy, Church, Collins, Corson, Craig, Cuyler, Darlington, Davis, Dodd, Dunning, Ellis, Fell, Finney, Gibson, Hazzard, Heverin, Hunsicker, Landis, MacVeagh, M'Camant, Metzger, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Niles, Palmer, H. W., Parsons, Purviance, John N., Runk, Sharpe, Stanton, Stewart, Wherry, Woodward, Wright and Meredith, President.—47.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The resolution is before the Convention and will be read.

The resolution was read the second time, as follows:

Be it resolved as follows:

First, That when the article on railroads shall have passed second reading the Convention will adjourn to meet again on the 15th of day of September, at ten o'clock A. M.

Second, That articles passed on second reading, including the legislative article, be re-printed as amended, and that three thousand copies thereof, in pamphlet form, be published for general distribution.

Third, That the Convention will submit the new or revised Constitution proposed by it to a popular vote at such convenient time as will secure its taking effect, in case of adoption by the people, on or before the first day of January next.

Mr. S. A. PURVIANCE. I move to amend, by inserting after the words, "article on railroads," the words, "and the article on the Legislature."

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment of the delegate from Allegheny.

Mr. BIGLER. Mr. President: I desire to say a very few words on this subject generally. Like yourself, sir, I have stood out against this idea of a recess; but on looking for public reasons why we should struggle through this business in the hot weather, I have become satisfied that we may very wisely take a recess.

It seemed desirable to the Convention, as I am sure it did to right-minded men all over the State, that the proposed reforms should apply to the coming elections. I believe that has been decided to be impracticable; the coming election must be held under the old forms.

Then I see only one remaining public reason for attempting to get through without a recess; that is, that the reforms in legislation may operate upon the coming Legislature. I believe it is the understanding of those who favor the recess that that purpose shall be accomplished. It is to be understood that we are to assemble here in September and prosecute this work with that diligence which will secure its completion and submission some time in November, so that it may go into operation about the first of January next, so that the restrictions on legislation may operate upon the coming Legislature.

With that view I can see no public reason for holding out in the condition in which we are now. Indeed, sir, I think I can see reasons why a little more deliberation and better opportunities on these grave questions may prove useful to the people of the State. I confess that I am somewhat despondent and discouraged about the work of the Convention for the last week or so. For one, I am willing to say that I would be better prepared to enter upon these questions after some rest and relaxation.

Why, sir, to those of us who are somewhat advanced in years this is rather a serious business. I found it absolutely necessary to leave the city for the purposes of health and comfort and go out to Chestnut Hill, a distance of ten miles. To get here, it is necessary for me to be ready for breakfast before seven o'clock, and take the train and come here in time for the sessions of the Convention. Then we sit until one o'clock. Then we go out in the midst of the heat, in the hottest hours of the day, to get a lunch, after which we sit until six o'clock. I must then take the train and between seven and eight o'clock get a meal called a dinner and a supper mixed up. Now, sir, ten days of that kind of labor has somewhat exhausted me, and I feel, for one at least, that I should be better able to perform my duties after some relaxation. This is only a private reason. Those of a public character I have given heretofore. I confess that I have come to this ground with great reluctance, for I had a great anxiety to meet the public expectation that the Convention would accomplish its work within this month.

Mr. MANN. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Allegheny will prevail. I am sure the people will be sufficiently disappointed if this Convention adjourns without completing its work, without giving them the additional cause of disappointment of not completing upon second reading one of the most important articles of the entire Constitution. There will be very great disappointment if the Convention adjourns without passing to second reading the article upon the Legislature. All over the State the people have been asking for months, "What are you going to do in relation to the number of members and the manner of their distribution throughout the State?" Now it is proposed to adjourn without answering that question. I think it would be a very unfortunate movement. Now, here we are just prepared to enter upon that question. I have no doubt the mind of every delegate is made up upon it, and all that is needed is that we come to a vote. We are as ready to vote upon it to-day as we ever shall be. What earthly reason therefore can be given for attempting to adjourn this body without answering the just expectations of the people on that question?

We have been told on various occasions that it was necessary to adjourn this body for some particular reason. I ask any gentleman here to say that he believes any single adjournment of this body has heretofore worked any good. In my judgment, the time wasted in efforts to adjourn this body would have completed our entire work before this time if it had been devoted to legitimate work rather than to these attempts to adjourn; and now this motion is sprung upon us right in the midst of the consideration of the article on railroads. We stop work upon that when our minds are all prepared to finish it, and talk about adjournment again.

It was said last November that it was necessary to adjourn in order that the committees might prepare work for the Convention. I assert that there was not a single preparation made during our adjournment, and that we came together in January precisely as we separated in November. If we adjourn now we shall come back at the end of the recess not as well prepared to finish our work as we are to-day. That will be the result. We shall spend weeks before we can get back to that condition in which we are now. Our minds are made up. We have thought over these subjects and we are ready to vote to-day intelligently, and complete our work.

But, sir, I foresee that an adjournment is a foregone conclusion. All that I ask then, all that I beg for, is that the amendment of the gentleman from Allegheny shall be adopted, so that we shall send out to the people a completed work, so far as the second reading is concerned. We can complete this work this week if we will stop talking and wasting time in reference to adjourning, and go to work. I therefore hope that the amendment will prevail.

MR. W. H. SMITH. Mr. President: This Convention met at Harrisburg in November last, and since then much of our time has been frittered and trifled away. As for myself, I am opposed to adjournment until this business is finished. I believe it can be done in three weeks and I think it ought to be done. These adjournments bear very hard upon those of us from the west who have subordinated our business to our duties here. One-sixth of our time was voted away for adjournments on Saturdays. Then we have had numerous other adjournments for trivial reasons; we have had the yeas and nays constantly called upon the most unimportant questions. All these things have consumed the time, and now it is proposed that we shall adjourn again. We can finish in three weeks. If we adjourn now and come back again it will take us three months to get through. It is very hard, very unjust to us who come here from a long distance and are compelled to stay here over Saturdays and short adjournments. Other gentlemen who live within a hundred miles of this city can go home on Saturdays and attend to business and keep up the chain of what they have to do. It is not so with those of us who come from the extreme west, or even come two hundred miles to attend to their duties here. These adjournments are very hard and very unjust upon us. I trust that this resolution will be voted down finally, but if not I hope we shall certainly finish the legislative article before we adjourn.

MR. SIMPSON. I trust the amendment will be adopted and that the Convention will not vote for any recess at least until we have finished the whole of our work on second reading. I am opposed to all recesses and shall vote against the proposition, although I shall vote for the amendment. I think we ought to sit here and finish this work. It is my conviction that if we take a recess now and come back again next fall, we shall be three months in session where we can finish now in this present month of July. I can work in hot weather, and I suppose I am quite as susceptible as most of the delegates on this floor. To my mind a recess is an indefinite extension of the sessions of the Convention. Now, if the ideas of some delegates on this floor are to control our action, that there must three months elapse between the time of our promulgating the Constitution and before a vote can be taken upon it, and we take a recess, we cannot submit the Constitution and put it in force on the first of January next. It will take from two to three months to get through with it here, and there will not be time to give sixty or ninety days notice and have it voted upon by the people this year, and it will carry it into next year before the Constitution can be put in force. But if you go on with it now you can submit it to a vote and put it in force prior to the assembling of the Legislature on the first of January next. We can make this organic law begin on the first day of January; but if we now take a recess, the result in my opinion will be that we shall not be able to complete our work until after that time; this will of course postpone the time of its taking effect until long after the first of the year.

Mr. AINEY. I simply rise to object to any attempt to make the Convention vote on this question under false impressions. When I submitted a few remarks to the Convention two weeks ago, it was said by the same gentlemen who opposed a recess now that we could finish this work in two weeks. That was the assertion that was made here by these gentlemen. Now we are told we can finish our work in three weeks if we go on with it. We have spent the two weeks in diligent work, and what progress have we made? We have made reasonable progress, but it does not warrant the belief—from what has been done in these last two weeks—that we can finish this work in three weeks, or in less time than was then predicted by those who favored a recess. It was then said it would take at least two months to finish up this work in any manner that will be acceptable to ourselves or to the people. I earnestly hope the Convention will decide the question understandingly and not under the belief that by remaining here we will be able to finish in three weeks. I, for one, do not believe it possible or at all practicable. I do not believe the people expect or desire us to continue this work during the heated term. On the contrary, several newspapers throughout the State have expressed the opinion that the Convention ought to adjourn over the hot weather. I hold one in my hand, published in Allentown, which has a long and sensible article on the subject, taking the position that if this Convention continues its sessions, in the nature of things our work will run great risk of being spoiled by hasty and inconsiderate action. Every lawyer knows—and we have upwards of a hundred in this Convention—that he cannot try a cause as well in hot weather as he can in cold; he knows he cannot do the same justice to it then. While every lawyer knows this, the people know it also.

Mr. CARTER. Permit me to ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. AINEY. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. I ask whether he is responsible for that article himself?

Mr. AINEY. In no possible form. I never saw, heard or knew of it until I ad it in the newspaper. I never spoke to the editor on the subject, to suggest, solicit or request its publication in any shape or form; but it is a very good article, very well written, and the best part of it is that it contains reasons why this Convention should adjourn that cannot be successfully answered or controverted, in my judgment.

Mr. LILLY. I believe this work could have been finished in two weeks from the time the gentleman speaks of. If gentlemen had staid here and attended to their business, if they had staid here from nine o'clock in the morning until six o'clock in the afternoon, if we had settled down to do our work as we ought to have done, it ought to have been through. Instead of taking six weeks, the whole matter can be put through in one week or less, if the Convention will make up their minds to do it; but if they will come here in the morning from ten to half-past ten, and stay until twelve, and then go away and come back at three, and then go away again at four, and go home two or three times a week, I should like to know how any work could be done in that kind of way. I dare say, if we all come here and put our minds to work, as we could do, it might have been done long ago. Now, I want to say that I have been in favor all the time—

Mr. AINEY. I rise to a point of order. Is it in order for the schoolmaster of this Convention to read a lecture to the Convention this morning? [Laughter.]

Mr. LILLY. The gentleman has not been here long enough to become a scholar even in this Convention. [Laughter.] Consequently I cannot give him a lecture on that subject. He is not here long enough. Now, sir, I have been opposed to this adjournment. I want to get through here and go home. I have enlisted for the service.

Mr. HAY. "For three years or the war."

Mr. LILLY. I have enlisted for the war until we complete this Constitution. I have tried to attend to it and mean to attend to it until we get done, and I have opposed adjournments or recesses because I think we can do more now than we can do hereafter if we will only settle down and do it; but such work as we have done for two or three days past when gentlemen say all the time we are going to adjourn, and they do not sit right down to business as they ought to do, will not have been well done. Some gentlemen may vote one way and want the other way. Now, I say here in my place that I have never felt any other way than that this Convention should stay here until we get through.

Mr. AINEY. I desire to ask the gentleman a question with his permission.

Mr. LILLY. I am not on the witness stand, especially to answer any questions of the gentleman from Lehigh.

Mr. AINEY. I want to ask the gentleman from Carbon if he does not ask the Convention to adjourn whenever he wants to go home.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The delegate cannot be interrupted.

Mr. LILLY. If I was like the gentleman I would ask for an adjournment every other hour in the day almost, because he always wants to go home during the intervening hours. But, sir, I do not wish to talk about my attendance here. I arrange my business in such a way that I can stay here. Some other gentlemen cannot do it. I do not blame them for going home to attend to their business, but I do not think it is in their mouths to come here and talk about this Convention and what they have done. Let them go home and stay if they want to. But, sir, what I want to say is that I am desirous to see the work done and done well, and then let us go about our business. I shall vote against all adjournments.

Mr. EWING. Mr. President: I have not as yet made any speech whatever on questions of adjournment. I have steadily voted against any long adjournment, and been very anxious to finish up this business entirely and go home and stay and submit the Constitution to a popular vote, but I have changed my mind and am satisfied we cannot do so, and I believe we are at this time doing no good here. A large portion of the Convention has become utterly demoralized, and I am satisfied we are not giving proper consideration to our work. Even the delegate from Carbon (Mr. Lilly) within the past week has failed to speak on three or four different motions that were up, which never happened before. [Laughter.] My friend from Potter (Mr. Mann) seems to be demoralized. He has not taken up more than half the time that he did formerly. [Laughter.]

I believe that instead of gaining time, every day we sit here we are adding about two days to the time we shall take when we meet again in September or October, and I am ready to adjourn to-day. I do not believe we shall do any good by going on with the article on the Legislature, and I shall vote for the adjournment at any time.

Mr. BAER. Mr. President: Having the right to speak ten minutes, I will waive the ten minutes if the Convention will take a vote. ["Yes."] So I will make the effort by moving the previous question.

Mr. H. W. SMITH. I second the call.

Mr. BAER. If the vote can be taken, I will withdraw it; if not I will take my ten minutes.

Mr. BUCKALEW. The gentleman prevents me from making an explanation by the call for the previous question.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The delegate from Somerset has the floor.

SEVERAL DELEGATES. But he yields for a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Then the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Columbia.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. President: I desire to state the grounds upon which this resolution can fairly stand for the justification of those who vote for it.

Now, sir, we are opposed to running our amendments through with the idea of having them submitted to a vote at the October election. There can be no other sufficient motive for sitting here at this season of the year and performing our work as we are performing it, very hastily, than a desire to submit our work at the October election, along with the political issues of the year. I am for taking a recess and concluding our work at a favorable season of the year when we can do it well, and submitting it to a vote at a special election to be held in the month of November or December, and to secure the action of the people upon our amendments so that they shall take effect upon the next session of the Legislature.

Our former resolution of adjournment fixed too late a date, and public opinion was against it for that reason. It fixed the twenty-first day of October, and there was reason to apprehend that if we adjourned to so late a day as that, there would not be sufficient time to conclude our work and have it voted upon by the people, so that it would take effect on the next Legislature. I have selected the middle of September in my resolution, and that is a compromise date. It will accommodate perhaps as many gentlemen as any other which we can select. Some prefer the first of October or some other early day in that month and some the first of September. I have selected the middle of that month, which will be at the close of the hot season; and if we meet at that time there will be no difficulty in concluding our work and giving a month and a half's notice if you please, and having a vote on that work in time to have it take effect before the Legislature shall meet in January.

Mr. President, the Convention of 1838 adjourned from the 14th day of July to the 17th of October. We have here a precedent by a body similarly constituted with ourselves and assigned to similar duties.

My resolution is that when we conclude the railroad article, which will probably take us a day or two longer, we shall adjourn until ten o'clock upon the 15th day of September next. The gentleman from Allegheny (Mr. S. A. Purviance) proposes to amend by saying that we shall go on and take up the subject of the organization of the Legislature. I am opposed to that on several grounds. I am opposed to it because the chairman of that committee is absent, as well as a large number of the leading members of the Convention whose judgment and aid we require in passing upon that article. I am opposed to it because confessedly this Convention is not now in a condition to act upon that important subject. I am opposed to it because when we meet in September under circumstances very different from those which now exist, we can give to that important subject such consideration as it deserves.

Now, one of the gentlemen who has spoken has said that we have not determined anything about the Legislature, and the people desire to know what we intend to do regarding it. That is not so. The most important question, to wit, the number of members of the two Houses of the Legislature, has been substantially decided upon. The section with regard to the constitution of the Senate has passed second reading fixing the number at fifty, and virtually fixing the number of the House also at one hundred and fifty; and there is nothing remaining except to pass upon the question of the manner in which apportionments shall be made of members of the House of Representatives. That is the only subject remaining. Members will observe that by my resolution I provide that this article on the Legislature shall be printed along with the other articles, of course so far as it has passed second reading. The nineteenth section will be printed along with the rest, and also the pending thereto amendment of the gentleman from Philadelphia, (Mr. J. Price Wetherill,) regarding the composition of the House, may be printed at the end, and the whole people as well as the members of the Convention during the recess will have before them our work as it now stands, and form their opinions upon it preparatory to our reassembling here.

Mr. BIDDLE. I am opposed to any adjournment, and I will state my reasons. I do not believe that we are doing our work more hastily and more crudely than at any other period of our session; certainly not more hastily, because if any fault be urged against us, it is the delaying too long by too much discussion, especially on the articles which we have had under consideration latterly. The article relating to Legislature has been over-discussed; the article relating to the judiciary has received a very large share of discussion; and the present article, so far from being passed over hastily, is consuming a great deal of time.

Whether the work be done duly or not is not for me or any other delegate to say. Whatever is done by a majority of this Convention we are bound to submit to. That we may have made some mistakes in introducing too much matter into the Constitution I, for one, do not deny; but by going away and returning, members will return surcharged with new ideas and with new speeches to express those ideas, and it is not likely that we shall save time or bring a great deal more enlightenment to the work.

In regard to the supposed slim attendance of the Convention at this time, I beg to say that this morning I casually picked up, when I heard that subject broached, the Journal of this Convention, and by turning it over in a few places I find that on the twenty-first of January, the first place where the yeas and nays were called, there were only one or two more members present than are present to-day. In the first place where we find them called, the yeas were forty and the nays fifty, making ninety; and again we find fourteen and twenty-four, which make eighty-eight; and turning to the first of February, when the yeas and nays were called again, I find fifty-one and twenty-one, in all seventy-two, whereas to-day, if I recollect aright—and I wish to be corrected if I am wrong—we had forty-one and forty-five, making eighty-six. We have therefore, a full average quorum in attendance, and by going on continuously, when the mind is warmed up and alive to the work, in my judgment we shall do a great deal better, as well as proceed a great deal more rapidly.

What remains to be done? The sag end of this article and one or perhaps two sections of the article on the Legislature relating to apportionment. All that remains after that, is the arrangement of the schedule, the perfection of the style, and the third reading, which as a general rule I am told is a formal reading, because unless the House goes into committee of the whole for the purpose of amendment, the vote is simply yea and or nay upon the different sections of the different articles.

Mr. NILES. On the whole article.

Mr. BIDDLE. On the whole article. Still better.

Now, I put precedent against precedent. The gentleman from Columbia (Mr. Buckalew) has found a precedent for our action now in the action of the Convention of 1837 and 1838. The Convention which framed the Constitution of 1776, and I vouch for this upon the authority of my friend from Greene (Mr. Purman) who sits before me, assembled on the 15th of July and sat to the 28th of September, the very time during which we are now called upon to adjourn. I am amazed at gentlemen standing up here and saying that they cannot work at this season when they have only to step out into any street in Philadelphia and they will find hundreds of men under this blazing sun running up and down a ladder with a hod upon their shoulders. They will find the wharves and public marts swarming with people working in the open air; every man of business in his counting-house, and the courts of the whole State sitting almost universally throughout the month of August. It is the month in which the courts generally sit. It is idle to tell me that we cannot work. We can cut off one-fourth of the whole year under this pretext.

Such an objection was never urged before. Men who stay away now will always stay away. They have stayed away in winter; they have stayed away in spring; they will stay away in the autumn just as they are staying away in the summer. Let them go in relays if they choose to go, but when I find the most venerable member of this House (Mr. Carey) at his place ready to work on, I appeal to the younger members of the House to do the same. I hope the resolution will not prevail.

Mr. S. A. PURVIANCE. Mr. President: Whilst I submitted the present amendment to insert the article on the Legislature, I am nevertheless unyielding in my opposition to any adjournment of this Convention until we have closed our labors entirely.

Now, in furtherance of what has been said by the honorable gentleman from Philadelphia, (Mr. Biddle,) is there any suffering in this body now? Why, sir, to my own knowledge the XXXVth Congress at Washington city, on a sand bank, the hottest place in the Union, sat through the months of July and August until the eleventh of September, and according to my recollection not a single man suffered. No one was delayed from the performance of his duties on account of sickness.

Sir, we are now here in the middle of July, and one month more brings us into the middle of August, when the days become cool and the nights sometimes exceedingly so.

Now, again, why not remain here until August? Sir, I am of the opinion, formed deliberately, that this Constitution, if it is to be carried by the people, must be submitted at the October election, and I invoke the aid of the friends of reform throughout this body to stand by that idea or otherwise they will put in jeopardy the Constitution.

At the October election all the people will be out, and, sir, you are aware, as well as I am, of the fact that there will be a serious opposition to the carrying of this Constitution by corporations, by railroad men, by those who desire a continuance of the mode of legislation at Harrisburg. They will be out whether you have a special election or a general election; whilst on the other hand if you have a special election many of the friends of reform may remain at home.

Now, can we prepare this Constitution and submit it at the October election? I say we can, because we can close our labors here before the latter end of next month at most, and then we have almost two months between that and the October election, which comes on the fourteenth of October. Why not, then, sit on?

Sir, as Mr. Biddle very properly observed, we are now at the sag end, we might say, of the last article except that of the Legislature, and that article we have had under discussion for days and for weeks, and there is a plan by which we can in one single day close our labors in reference to the construction of the Legislature, and that is this: Some twenty gentlemen have submitted plans for the construction of your Legislature, and I would suggest, inasmuch as there has been full discussion upon all these plans, that they be permitted to be read from the Clerk's desk, one by one, and the gentlemen who submitted them be allowed ten minutes to explain them, and then the vote can be taken upon them, the one having the lowest vote from time to time to be dropped, until we arrive at the plan of construction.

That I say is a feasible plan because we have discussed the subject for probably ten days already.

Now, sir, I do hope that we shall go through with the labors of our Convention here and be soldiers in the cause of reform, sitting here until the end of August if it be necessary.

Mr. BROOMALL. Mr. President: The great argument in favor of an adjournment is not the hot weather nor the probable sickly season ahead of us—

Mr. S. A. PURVIANCE. On a hot day the question of adjournment is brought up; on a cool day it is not.

Mr. BROOMALL. Although it is a matter of some importance that just to the southwest of us is a district worse a good deal than any other in Philadelphia, a district over which all the southwest winds come, through which the gentleman from Allegheny will not walk without holding his breath—I say that is something, but the great argument in favor of an adjournment is not that. I have advocated before and I advocate now an adjournment or this reason: In order that before we finally part with the Constitution we shall have an opportunity of seeing what our constituents are going to say about it. It is the publication and getting the document before the people for their criticism that I desire in this adjournment. Why, to talk about passing a Constitution without any reference whatever to the people until we have gone to a stage beyond which we cannot amend it seems to me to be nonsense. If I am rightly informed, the first Constitution that was adopted in Pennsylvania after the Revolution was required to be submitted to the people not in the way of voting, but that the people should have a chance to talk over it four months before the Convention finally parted with it, and it was a valuable proposition. I would rather have that than the vote, if I must have one and not the other, but I want both. It is an important consideration with me that we are a single body. If we want a law passed it must pass first the House, then after a while the Senate, and the object of that is to give an opportunity for deliberation in order that things may not be hastily done, but we submit the highest order of legislation to a single body, and we ask them to put that through without even hearing what their constituents are going to say about it before it is too late to amend it.

Now, my word for it, if we finish this business now, or at any time, without having submitted it, before we finally part with what we have done, to the people, we shall regret it before we have been at home two weeks, and if it was in the middle of winter, or at any other time of the year, wholly without regard to health and hot weather, I would say, let us see what our constituents say about what we propose to do before it is too late to amend, for be sure our constituents know that all the wisdom of the State is not in this body.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President: I want to speak only three minutes; one minute in reply to the gentleman from Delaware, and two minutes in reply to the gentleman from Columbia.

There is nothing practical, it appears to me, in the suggestion of the gentleman from Delaware at all. He appears to think it necessary that this work shall be submitted in some way to the people before we take final action upon it. Now, the gentleman did not indicate how this is to be done.

Mr. BROOMALL. By publication, according to the resolution.

Mr. CARTER. How is the opinion of the people to be had on it? That is what I mean. Does he propose to hold a series of township meetings? Does he propose merely to consult around among his constituents? So far from any good being done in that way, I hold that it will make confusion ten times worse confounded. Every member will come back here with the crude ideas of his constituents and think it is his duty to represent them on this floor, and we shall not be half as well prepared to come to a conclusion as we are now. I say there is nothing in the gentleman's suggestion, not a scintilla of anything for rational men to consider for a moment. He proposes no way in which this thing is to be got at. Does he propose a series of township meetings and to take a vote, or how is an expression of the people to be had, or merely to talk around among his constituents? The more he talks the worse they and he will be confounded. We were sent here supposed to have sufficient intelligence to perform this work.

Mr. BROOMALL. Will the gentleman allow me to explain? My constituents have no crude ideas. I cannot talk with them a week without knowing more than I do now. His may be different; I do not know. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARTER. No, sir; but my constituents are so intelligent probably that they do not believe in buncombe. Mine are sufficiently intelligent not to believe in it, whether the gentleman's do or not. Both they and I can tell buncombe when we hear it, whether from the gentleman from Delaware or others.

You see now, Mr. President, that there can be nothing whatever practical in the gentleman's view. Now, in regard to physical ability, &c., you, Mr. President, are next to the oldest man in this body, the senior by years of most of us, and I heard you, sir, the other day, say that you never felt better. I never felt better in my life, myself, and I have but very few seniors in this body. You can go to no healthier city. Only about one hundred and fifty adults died here last week, which is less mortality than most other places, and this room is the perfection of comfort, and we are here working and in good working order at this time—if we will only settle down to it.

Now, in regard to the remarks of the gentleman from Columbia, (Mr. Buckalew,) it seemed to me that his argument stultified itself before he concluded. It was to this effect: That we should adjourn because the body was not full, but the gentleman forgot that we have nearly ninety votes here to-day, which is more than we have had in times past. He then went on to argue that we should adjourn in deference to gentlemen who were absent. I am not disposed to defer to the wishes of the gentlemen who are absent. If they chose to desert their posts, that is no reason why we should, in deference to them, adjourn this Convention and the great work which I believe it is destined to perform. The gentleman then went on to say that he thought their counsel would be necessary, that we were not in proper condition to finish our work, and finally concluded by saying that everything had been talked over and argued at length in reference to the legislative article. If that be the case, are we not prepared to vote? Are we to wait until these gentlemen who are now visiting and gallivanting about come back and assist us in voting upon it. If we have discussed the legislative article, and they assisted in that discussion, are we not now prepared to dispose of it? Have we not had the benefit of their wisdom? Are not their thoughts and arguments and our own thoughts fresh in our minds?

Sir, I do not believe that the discussion of this legislative article will take the time the gentleman seems to suppose. I think it cannot be talked about much longer without danger of running ourselves into idioy. We have repeated each other's thoughts and ideas so much that it is psychologically unsafe for us to keep repeating and grinding over the same thoughts and ideas.

I think the time has come when we must exhibit a spirit of compromise and concession. I have a most determined repugnance to having every little county in the State represented in the Legislature, but inasmuch as on a fair and square vote of this body, there was a majority of twenty in favor of that idea, I yield. I know that one hundred and thirty-three men cannot get together on a work of this kind and succeed without making some concessions to each other's opinions; and I shall oppose no article for the reason that it does not carry out my ideas in every particular when I have done my duty in opposing it. I believe if we will go to work and discuss the legislative article, we shall astonish ourselves at the rapidity with which we shall get through our work.

I believe we are in just as good working order now as we ever shall be. I am talking to sensible men of this Convention. If there be members here who have a kind of boyish, school-boy haste to get away from their duty, I do not address myself to them, but to the thinking men of this Convention. I believe the adjournment will be unpopular, notwithstanding the Allentown Gazette. That is only one paper among six hundred. I think the general tone of the press is averse to our adjournment, and that it does reflect public sentiments.

One word more and I am done. The gentleman from Allegheny (Mr. Ewing) stated that he thought we had better ad-to make the regulations proper for ordinary corporations in connection with jourm, we were becoming demoralized, because the gentleman from Potter (Mr. Mann) and the gentleman from Carbon (Mr. Lilly) did not talk as much as they used to do. It strikes me that is rather a reason for our continuing in session. If they are nearly talked out, as I think we all are, that certainly is a reason why we should go on with our work. Now, gentleman, I implore you, go to work; cease this talk about adjournment, and in ten days time this work can be consummated and perfected.

Mr. KAINE. I do not believe that this Convention is any better nor composed of any better material than the Conventions that have preceded it, no better than the Convention of 1790 or the Convention of 1837-8. Now, sir, the act of Assembly under which the Constitutional Convention of 1790 assembled had this provision in it:

Resolved, That in the opinion of this House a Convention being chosen and met, it will be expedient, just, and reasonable that the Convention should publish their amendments and alterations for the consideration of the people and adjourn at least four months previous to said confirmation."

Under that they acted. They assembled here in the city of Philadelphia in November and they remained here until the last of February. They then adjourned until the eighth of August, and during that time they published in the newspapers of the State the Constitution as they had framed it. They met here on the eighth of August, and after four weeks consideration they finished the Constitution and adopted it. The Convention of 1837-8 met in Harrisburg on the second day of May and they remained in session until the fourteenth day of July of that year. They then took a recess until the fourteenth day of the following October. During that time the amendments that they had proposed to the Constitution were published and discussed by the people. I do not think we are so far in advance of those Conventions that our labors will lose anything by being submitted for a short time to the consideration of the people. I believe if we adjourn upon the completion of the article on railroads on second reading, to meet here in the middle of September, it will be an advantage to this Constitution and an advantage to ourselves.

I do not know that we are in such elegant working order. The gentleman from Lancaster (Mr. Carter) may be, but I confess that I am not. If there are enough gentlemen in this Convention, and a few of them would be sufficient to take up this Constitution and finish it so that one hundred and thirty-three men could sign it here within two or three or four weeks, I would say amen; but I must confess I do not want to be one of that number. I confess my inability to be one of that number. Therefore I hope the resolution offered by the gentleman from Columbia will prevail.

Mr. MANTOR. Mr. President: I have never spoken in favor of an adjournment. I believe on all occasions, save once or twice, and then for a temporary adjournment only. The other morning when this proposition was called up by the gentleman from Columbia (Mr. Buckalew) I voted against taking it up, and my reason for doing so was that I thought if we then adopted the proposition and we should meet here yesterday (Monday) morning, as we did, we should be unable to carry out the terms of the resolution; we should be left without a quorum. Now, I call upon the delegates here this morning to look around this Hall, and they will find there is absent about sixty members. Sir, why is it that sixty members are out of this Hall this morning?

SEVERAL DELEGATES. ["Forty." "Forty."]

Mr. MANTOR. I am told by the Clerk there are sixty absent, and I think my authority is good; but no matter whether the number be forty, fifty or sixty, what is the cause of their absence? Are the courts in session over this State? Not many that I know of. Gentlemen have got up on this floor and asked for leave of absence because of their inability to sit here, and this House has very kindly granted them leave of absence. Other gentlemen have got up here and asked leave of absence on the account of ill-health. I would not ask leave of absence because of ill-health; neither do I desire the Convention to adjourn because it is said we are sitting here in a malarious district. I am not afraid of the cholera or small-pox or yellow fever. I do not propose to die in Philadelphia at all. [Laughter.] I do not propose to be carried home in a box. I may be, but such is my determination just now. [Laughter.] I look over this body and I ask myself this morning the reason why I shall vote for an adjournment. I voted for taking up the question this morning, and it is because there are from fifty to sixty members absent, and those men have gone home, and to my certain knowledge many of them with excellent health, and they will not return soon.

Now, we are told this morning that if this Convention adjourns we shall injure our work. There are men sitting in this body, and they are within the sound of my voice, who desire an adjournment, but yet are afraid of their constituents. God bless you, I say, and God bless our constituents. They do not, nor will not, make unreasonable demands on you or me. I believe a respite will work great good to every member, because "all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy." [Laughter.] Just eight months ago, on the twelfth of this month, this Convention assembled in the city of Harrisburg to do its work. What is the result? We have worked diligently, faithfully, and, I believe, honestly. I am going home if we adjourn, and if my constituency do not like it they can do the other thing. I must be the judge in some matters. The necessities of this Convention demand an adjournment just now, for to all appearance it is not in a condition to work. Delegates are tired and worn out with work.

MR. DE FRANCE. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. I ask, when there was these forty or sixty here, when was it that there were not that many members absent?

MR. MANTOR. I have never known so many absent at one time before. I have known there were always a great many men out of this Convention, but it was for business purposes. I understand the reason men are away now is for other purposes, some on the account of bad health, others because they cannot stand the heat of the city.

THE PRESIDENT pro tem. The delegate is under no obligation to answer the question.

MR. MANTOR. Certainly not, but I was doing it because I have the greatest respect for that gentleman, and his question is a civil one, and I cannot pass it by without a like answer. I shall vote for this proposition, because I think the time has come for a short adjournment, think that when we have consulted with our constituency, given them an idea of what we have done and what we propose to do, they will be prepared to sanction our work by their ballots at an election called expressly to vote on this Constitution.

MR. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President: If I consulted my personal convenience and my personal interests, I would prefer to stay here until this Constitution is completed, for I suppose, in common with a great many others here, I have sacrificed a great deal of personal convenience as well as pecuniary interests in being here at all. It has been long evident that there is a large minority of this Convention decidedly in favor of an adjournment. Something is due to them. They have a right to be heard in a matter not touching any vital interest of the Constitution. It seems to me that the mere request, the expressed desire of so large a proportion of this Convention is entitled to such weight as that, from courtesy alone, we should adjourn if no evil is to befall our work by reason of it.

Now, sir, as to the question of the submission of this Constitution. After some reflection on this subject, I am satisfied that it is not practicable even if it would be judicious to submit it to the people at the October election, not only because if we attempted to do it we must hurry our work, but because we can at that time provide no guarantees against a fraudulent election. If we submit it in November at a special election we can provide in the schedule of the Constitution all necessary guarantees of a fair election. I do not mean to say that this Convention would have the right to pass an election law. I do not believe they could; but if we insert in the schedule of the Constitution certain limitations as to the mode of holding the election, as to the counting of votes and as to the returns of the election—by thus putting it into the Constitution itself to be passed upon by the people, we have, in this manner, the right to declare the forms and mode in which we will submit our work. We cannot provide such separate forms for the election in October, and the gentlemen who are best acquainted with Philadelphia, and I speak upon the authority of what has been said here, have no hesitation in saying as they have repeatedly done that if we submit this Constitution in October there will be counted against it just as many votes as the corrupt rings of both parties deem necessary to defeat it. In November we can provide our own machinery, without being at all complicated with the necessities of the ordinary elections for State officers. Therefore my judgment is that we should be safer, as to the completion of our work, to submit it at a special election in November. If we continue to sit now, we cannot prevent these recurring discussions on the subject of adjournment; they spring up constantly; and we waste on an average about one-sixth of our time in these fruitless and dilatory discussions.

Now let us end this question by an adjournment which will be reasonable and will leave us time enough to consider all that remains to be considered and to come back with the question of adjournment entirely eliminated from our discussions, come back say in the middle of September, and with one solid month's work we can do all there is to be done. The ten minute rule will apply then as it does now; the debates will be limited, and the subjects of debate will be limited. We probably on third reading cannot go into the consideration of these articles section by section, but must vote upon the articles, going into committee of the whole for amendments occasionally when the Convention shall determine so to do.

We shall lose nothing by this recess. We shall come back refreshed, invigorated, and the people, having all our work before them, will have it thoroughly examined. There is probably not a paper in the State that would not be glad to publish the Constitution if it can be had in such a form that they can publish it in a connected and intelligible form; heretofore it has been in detached pieces, so that the members of the Convention themselves have not a very clear idea of what it is as a connected whole. Let us then have it published in pamphlet form for the use of the members; let it be circulated and published throughout the State, and we may derive some advantage from the comments of the press, from intercourse with individuals, and above all we shall have settled this question of adjournment and come back at a time when we have nothing to do but to go directly to work and finish it without interruption. We can complete it so as to leave at least one month for consideration by the people before the time we may fix for a November election. Under these circumstances, and voting, as I believe, both against my personal interests and my personal convenience, I shall vote to adjourn to the middle of September.

Mr. H. G. SMITH. After what has been so well said by the gentleman from Lycoming, I have very little to add. Two weeks ago, when contrary to what has been my course hitherto in this Convention, I voted for an adjournment, we were told that two weeks at the outside would finish the work of this Convention. We are here to-day confessedly a month at least from the end of our labors, if we sit on continuously.

The reasons for adjournment have been urged on this floor in such a manner as ought not to make this a doubtful question any longer. We can proceed, if we adopt the resolution now before this body, to the end of this article on railroads, then our work will be nearly completed, and it can be furnished to the entire press of the Commonwealth, and when you give to the newspapers of the Commonwealth a Constitution formed and finished up to that part on second reading, you will furnish them with other work to do than to carp and criticise the Convention. You will call their attention to the work so far formed as to be nearly complete, to the serious consideration of every newspaper editor in the Commonwealth, and you will have from the hour that this Convention adjourns until the time it re-assembles, from every honest and conscientious newspaper editor in this Commonwealth, the proper kind of criticism upon the work which you have done. If you will learn nothing from it, if the criticism will furnish you with no new ideas, you will at least know the opinions of the press upon your labors, and you will also be able to hear what your constituents think of the Constitution. They will read the Constitution as you have framed it, because it will be published in every newspaper in this Commonwealth without a dollar of cost, and you can learn from your constituents what their opinions are upon this question. Then you will return to your labors in the middle of September prepared to do your work well, with more enlightenment on the subject than you can possibly have at this time.

For these reasons, because I believe that the third reading of this article will be more important and should be more carefully attended to than any other stage of its creation, because I do not believe that this Convention is in proper condition to-day to finish its labors, I advocate the adjournment before it, and beg gentlemen to allow this recess, being assured that it will do more to secure the final passage of their work than anything that can be done.

Mr. CURTIN. If the Convention will indulge me, I desire to say a very few words on this question of adjournment.

It is not that we shall finish our work and submit it to the people that should be the important question for us to consider, but whether our work will be adopted by the people. The serious consideration is that the work will be well done so that it shall commend itself to the sound judgment and discretion of the public. In the beginning of this Convention it was decided to print the Debates in books of reports, and early in the session, after we had moved to this city, I offered a resolution to publish the Debates, with the amendments offered and adopted, in two papers of the city, every morning after the Debates occurred or the amendments were offered; but this was found to be too expensive, and the resolution fell.

The people know little of what we have done. Our work is in the volumes to be distributed to the members of this body, and very little has appeared in the public journals, and the people up to this time are not informed as to what we have done or what we propose to do. I cannot understand, therefore, that an eight weeks adjournment in this heated term can possibly effect the rejection or the adoption of our amendments to the Constitution; but I can well understand how that eight weeks may give the people an opportunity of discussion and examination.

I can understand how it is that the learned gentleman from Philadelphia (Mr. Biddle) desires to remain here. This is his home. It is not the season at which the courts wherein he has his large and lucrative practice are in session. I can well understand why other gentlemen of Philadelphia desire to remain here, and the gentleman from Lancaster, (Mr. Carter,) my excellent friend, has given us reasons for his desire to remain here from his robust and unimpaired constitution. I would that all the members of the Convention could boast of the good health and strong physical powers of that hale and hearty old man. We were not all cast in the same mould. We have not all enjoyed the pure invigorating air of Lancaster. It is impossible indeed to believe, from what he says of the morality of his constituents, that all the members of this Convention have not dwelt in that simplicity of high-toned and rigid morality which the gentleman so ably represents upon this floor. [Laughter.] I hope all his constituents may live to his advanced age and enjoy his robust health and the confidence and respect with which he has inspired every member of this Convention for him personally.

But I beg my excellent friend to remember that some of us do not bear the heat quite as well as he does. We are not all salamanders. [Laughter.] Nor do I think all the people of Lancaster county are salamanders. [Laughter.] For I notice that while that gentleman retains the thick woolen clothing which he wore in the winter and sits in this heated period in a hall which he pronounces delightfully ventilated and beautifully cool, [laughter,] when the perspiration is rolling from many of the members that come from the interior of the State, I notice also that his colleague from Lancaster (Mr. H. G. Smith) is here in pure virgin white to-day, and he pleads in a most eloquent manner to be let out from this heated place that is so delightful and pleasant and healthful to the aged and robust gentleman. [Laughter.]

My friend from Potter (Mr. Mann) has said that we are now considering an article upon which we have all made up our minds. That is true, but unfortunately for the consumption of the time of this Convention, when we make up our minds we desire to express our reasons and conclusions, and I am quite sure that if my friend from Potter has made up his mind he will desire to express his reasons to us, which we always treat with respect. We all desire to express our views on all subjects considered because they go into a book, and in that book the members of this Convention find marked a highway to immortality. Will my friend from Potter now stifle debate at this very important period of our deliberations? When immortality is constantly approaching, and the highest measure we can get from our published Debates will be just at the end of the volume. Conscious that I have not consumed much of the time of this Convention—for I believe I have never spoken ten minutes at a time, and the volumes show but rarely—I do not go down to posterity in the books. [Laughter.] I wish I could get in a little more. It is a beautiful vehicle to go down to posterity in, and I think I will ask to go down as an outside passenger and have my name put on the fly-leaf. [Great laughter.] I suppose that if our opinions are made up, we must have the liberty of making speeches. Debate is free, and in this Hall certainly as our long sessions fully attest. I voted against the adjournment from Harrisburg. That was the beginning of the error. I voted against the publication of these Debates. I desired that the people should be informed. But it has been truly said that it is impossible for us to submit these amendments before or at the time of the October election. And inasmuch as we cannot, let us publish what has occurred, what has been proposed, and what has been accomplished, and give it to the people to digest. Let the public journals discuss it. Let members learn from their constituents at home what their will is. We shall come back here refreshed, prepared by contact with the minds and judgment of the people, and better in all respects for the fulfillment of the remainder of the work which the people of Pennsylvania have assigned to us.

I am, therefore, in favor of taking this recess. I find personally that the heat is rather much for me, however it may be with other members, but I have worried it out until this time. I am painfully anxious that this Convention shall propose judicious reforms to the paramount laws of the Commonwealth, and I do not believe that this Convention is in a temper now to propose such reforms. I am equally sure that, whether we continue in session now or adjourn, no matter which, the question of comfort or privilege will not be considered by the people of Pennsylvania. When we submit our amendments, our adjournments, our protracted sessions, our debates will be forgotten, and the people of this State will sit down to a deliberate consideration of what we have done, and if our duty is well done and our work commends itself to them they will adopt it, and if not they will reject it, and the people of Pennsylvania do not care whether you sit on in this heated room or whether you adjourn and give your proceedings due consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment of the delegate from Allegheny (Mr. S. A. Purviance) to add the words "and Legislature" after the word "railroads."

Mr. D. N. WHITE and Mr. TEMPLE called for the yeas and nays, and they were taken with the following result:

Y E A S.

Messrs. Alricks, Baily, (Perry,) Biddle, Black, Chas. A., Carey, Carter, Clark, Cochran, Cronmiller, De France, Edwards, Fulton, Funck, Gilpin, Guthrie, Hall, Hay, Howard, Landis, Lawrence, Lilly, MacConnell, M'Clellan, Mann, Patterson, D. W., Patterson, T. H. B., Porter, Purman, Purviance, Samuel A., Rooke, Simpson, Smith, Wm. H., Temple, Wetherill, John Price, White, David N. and White, Harry—36.

N A Y S.

Messrs. Addicks, Ainey, Baer, Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Bannan, Bigler, Black, J. S., Boyd, Brodhead, Broomall, Brown, Buckalew, Bullitt, Calvin, Campbell, Cassidy, Corbett, Corson, Curry, Curtin, Elliott, Ewing, Fell, Finney, Gibson, Green, Harvey, Hemphill, Heverin, Hunsicker, Kaine, Knight, Lamberton, Littleton, Long, M'Culloch, Mantor, Newlin, Niles, Palmer, G. W., Patton, Pughe, Reed, Andrew, Reynolds, Ross, Russell, Smith, H. G., Smith, Henry W., Struthers, Turrell, Van Reed, Walker, Wetherill, J. M., White, J. W. F. and Worrell—55.

So the amendment was rejected.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Achenbach, Andrews, Armstrong, Baker, Barclay, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Beebe, Bowman, Church, Collins, Craig, Cuyler, Dallas, Darlington, Davis, Dodd, Dunning, Ellis, Hanna, Hazzard, Horton, Lear, MacVeagh, M'Camant, M'Murray, Metzger, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Palmer, H. W., Parsons, Purviance, Jno. N., Read, John R., Runk, Sharpe, Stanton, Stewart, Wherry, Woodward, Wright and Meredith, President—42.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the resolution.

Mr. MACCONNELL. I move to amend by striking out "fifteenth" and inserting "sixteenth" before "September." The fifteenth comes on Monday, and some of us can hardly get here on that day.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I accept the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question recurs on the resolution as amended.

Mr. CAMPBELL and Mr. Worrell called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. HAY. I ask for a division of the question, so that a separate vote shall be taken on each proposition.

Mr. D. W. PATTERSON. I was just going to call for that division of the question; but before the question is taken, I desire to say that I am opposed to adjourning over until September.

SEVERAL DELEGATES. Let us vote.

Mr. D. W. PATTERSON. You have the majority manifestly now, and I trust I shall be allowed to make a remark. I have not said a word on these resolutions heretofore. If gentlemen who are so anxious to adjourn would only go through the remaining four sections of this railroad article and then take up the article on the Legislature, it could be disposed of in two days, and they could then adjourn for about two weeks, at the end of which time the Committee on Revision and Adjustment and Committee on Schedule would be ready to report, and the delegates would then come back here recruited and could finish this whole thing in ten days, yea in five days we could go through the third reading.

Now, this resolution contemplates a separate and distinct election for the ratification of the Constitution. Not only does the resolution so indicate, but the mover of it says so. In my opinion, that is a great mistake. If we expect any part of this Constitution to be ratified, we must expect it to be done by the voters of the rural districts; that is manifest. My experience is, and I submitted the proposition to a number of gentlemen in this Convention and they say it is their experience, that at a separate and distinct election on this Constitution you cannot get the rural voters out. You cannot, in many of the counties, get the half of the voters out unless they have some neighbor to vote for some office or other in the county. Therefore, while the gentlemen who thus contemplate submitting the Constitution at a separate election may be sincere, I tell you it will be fatal to the adoption of any article of this Constitution. Although the people are much interested in the articles which we have adopted in regard to preventing special legislation, throwing restraints about the pardoning power, and with regard to the article on corporations—the only three articles in which they do feel a deep interest—yet depend upon it, if the Constitution is submitted at a separate election, you cannot get the people of the rural districts out, and they are the element that will adopt and ratify this Constitution, if it is ratified at all. It is manifest that many gentlemen of both parties in the cities are averse to reform in any particular, are averse to the restraints we have put on legislation, &c., and they will most likely carry the cities against any part of this Constitution. As for myself, there is much of the Constitution which we have formed that I should like to see ratified by the people. I can't say my judgment approves of all we have done, but much of it I think would prove greatly advantageous to the body politic.

I hope for that reason that this resolution will not pass, because if we adjourn over to September it is virtually saying that we cannot submit our amendments at the regular October election, and depend upon it, it is a great mistake. Gentlemen here living in the rural districts know how hard it is to get the voters out. If they come out, they will vote for reform; but you cannot get them out at a special election, whereas in the cities the leaders of both parties will bring out their voters, and their votes will be adverse to almost every article in this Constitution. For this reason I trust the resolution will be voted down, especially as we are so near the end of our work that three days more will put us through the second reading of all the articles, and then the great mass of the Convention could adjourn for two weeks and the Committee on Schedule and the Committee on Revision and Adjustment can go to any cool place and perform their duty in the meanwhile—in two weeks could be ready to make their report to this Convention. The Convention can then meet and finish this Constitution and submit it to the people in October. I repeat that in two weeks the Committees on Schedule and on Revision and Adjustment can be ready to report. I am a member of both those committees, and we have advanced considerably already and will be ready to report back to this Convention by that time. Then the great mass of the members here would be recreated. They could go to the seaside or the mountains and get back, and have good tempers and sufficient physical constitution to do all the duty that would be required on third reading, which in my opinion could be done in ten days or two weeks at the furthest. Now, I protest against this long adjournment. I hope this resolution will not pass, but let us go on this week with our work and complete the second reading of all the articles, and then let the Committees on Schedule and on Revision and Adjustment go to work and make back their report for final action as I have stated. The people expect to vote on the Constitution in October, and it seems to me, sir, that every friend of reform should be willing to sacrifice their personal convenience in order to meet the public expectation. We can and should submit the new Constitution at the regular October election.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the first division of the resolution, which will be read.

The CLERK read as follows:

"That when the article on railroads shall have passed second reading, the Convention will adjourn to meet again on the sixteenth day of September next, at ten o'clock A. M.

Mr. ACHENBACH. I desire to state that I am paired off on this question with the gentleman from Philadelphia (Mr. J. R. Read.)

The question being taken by yeas and nays resulted as follows:

Y E A S .

Messrs. Addicks, Ainey, Armstrong, Baer, Bannan, Bigler, Black, J. S., Boyd, Brodhead, Broomall, Brown, Buckalew, Bullitt, Calvin, Cassidy, Corson, Curry, Curtin, Cuyler, Elliott, Ewing, Fell, Green, Hall, Harvey, Hemphill, Heverin, Hunsicker, Kaine, Knight, Lamberton, Lear, Littleton, Long, MacConnell, Mantor, Newlin, Palmer, G. W., Patton, Pughe, Reynolds, Ross, Smith, H. G., Smith, Henry W., Struthers, Turrell, Van Reed, Walker, Wetherill, J. M., White, J. W. F. and Worrell—51.

N A Y S .

Messrs. Alricks, Baily, (Perry,) Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Biddle, Black, Charles A., Campbell, Carey, Carter, Clark, Cochran, Corbett, Cronmiller, De France, Edwards, Finney, Fulton, Funck, Gibson, Gilpin, Guthrie, Hay, Howard, Landis, Lawrence, Lilly, M'Clellan, M'Culloch, Mann, Niles, Patterson, D. W., Patterson, T. H. B., Porter, Purman, Purviance, Samuel A., Reed, Andrew, Rooke, Russell, Simpson, Smith, Wm. H., Temple, Wetherill, Jno. Price, White, David N. and White, Harry—43.

So the first division of the resolution was agreed to.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Achenbach, Andrews, Baker, Barclay, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Beebe, Bowman, Church, Collins, Craig, Dallas, Darlington, Davis, Dodd, Dunning, Ellis, Hanna, Hazzard, Horton, MacVeagh, M'Camant, M'Murray, Metzger, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Palmer, H. W., Parsons, Purviance, John N., Read, John R., Runk, Sharpe, Stanton, Stewart, Wherry, Woodward, Wright and Meredith, President—39.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The second division will be read.

Mr. TURRELL. I move to reconsider the vote just taken, and to lay that motion on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. It is moved to reconsider the vote just taken.

Mr. HOWARD and Mr. DEFRANCE called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. TURRELL. My motion was to reconsider and to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. LITTLETON. Was the motion seconded?

Mr. ADDICKS. I second it.

Mr. TURRELL. To save time I withdraw the motion.

The second division of the resolution was read as follows:

"That articles passed on second reading, including the legislative article, be reprinted as amended and that three thousand copies thereof in pamphlet form be printed for general distribution."

Mr. EDWARDS. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. D. W. PATTERSON. I second the call.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President: I rise to ask a question of the Chair. By this resolution is it proposed that the articles as they now are or as they are to come from the hands of the revising committee, when they pass that committee, are to be printed?

Mr. BUCKALEW. As they are now.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. As they are at the time we adjourn, the Chair supposes. The Clerk will call the names of delegates on the second division of the resolution.

The CLERK proceeded to read the roll.

Mr. LILLY [when his name was called.] If this printing is to be of the Constitution without revision or adjustment, I am opposed to it, but as I am assured by the gentleman from Columbia (Mr. Buckalew) that it will be revised, I vote yea.

The result was announced as follows:

Y E A S .

Messrs. Addicks, Ainey, Alricks, Armstrong, Baer, Baily, (Perry,) Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Bannan, Bigler, Black, Charles A., Black, J. S., Boyd, Brodhead, Broomall, Brown, Buckalew, Bullitt, Calvin, Carey, Cassidy, Clark, Corson, Cronmiller, Curry, Curtin, Cuyler, Dallas, Edwards, Elliott, Ewing, Fell, Finney, Funck, Gibson, Green, Hall, Harvey, Hemphill, Heverin, Horton, Howard, Hunsicker, Kaine, Knight, Lamberton, Lilly, Littleton, Long, MacConnell, M'Clean, Mantor, Niles, Palmer, G. W., Patton, Pughe, Purman, Reed, Andrew, Reynolds, Ross, Smith, H. G., Smith, Henry W., Turrell, Van Reed, Walker, Wetherill, J. M., Wetherill, Jno. Price, White, J. W. F. and Worrell—68.

N A Y S .

Messrs. Biddle, Cochran, Corbett, De France, Fulton, Gilpin, Guthrie, Hay, Landis, Lawrence, Lear, M'Culloch, Mann, Newlin, Patterson, D. W. Patterson, T. H. B., Porter, Purviance, Samuel A., Rooke, Russell, Simpson, Smith, Wm. H., Struthers, White, David N. and White, Harry—25.

So the second division was agreed to.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Achenbach, Andrews, Baker, Barclay, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Beebe, Bowman, Campbell, Carter, Church, Collins, Craig, Darlington, Davis, Dodd, Dunning, Ellis, Hanna, Hazzard, MacVeagh, M'Camant, M'Murray, Metzger, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Palmer, H. W., Parsons, Purviance, John N., Read, John R., Runk, Sharpe, Stanton, Stewart, Temple, Wherry, Woodward, Wright and Meredith, President—40.

The third division of the resolution was read as follows:

"That this Convention will submit the revised Constitution proposed by it to a popular vote at such convenient time as will secure its taking effect, in case of adoption by the people, on or before the first day of January next."

Mr. T. H. B. PATTERSON. I call for for the yeas and nays on that.

Mr. D. W. PATTERSON. I second the call.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Clerk will call the names of delegates.

Mr. CUYLER. I do not know whether debate is in order, but I hope that resolution may not pass.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. Debate is not in order. The Clerk will proceed with the call.

Mr. ADDICKS answered to his name.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. Before the yeas and nays are called—

The PRESIDENT pro tem. They are called.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. I simply wish to call attention to—. ["Order." "Order.""]

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Clerk will proceed with the call.

The yeas and nays were taken with the following result:

Y E A S .

Messrs. Addicks, Ainey, Alricks, Baer, Bally, (Perry,) Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Bannan, Biddle, Bigler, Black, Charles A., Boyd, Brodhead, Broomall, Brown, Buckalew, Bullitt, Calvin, Campbell, Carey, Carter, Cassidy, Clark, Corson, Cronmiller, Curry, Curtin, Dallas, De France, Elliott, Fell, Gibson, Green, Guthrie, Hall, Harvey, Hay, Hemphill, Heverin, Horton, Howard, Hunsicker, Kaine, Lamberton, Landis, Lawrence, Lear, Lilly, Littleton, Long, MacConnell, M'Clean, Mann, Mantor, Niles, Palmer G. W., Patterson, T. H. B., Patton, Pughe, Purman, Reed, Andrew, Reynolds, Rooke, Ross, Russell, Smith, H. G., Smith, Henry W., Smith, Wm. H., Turrell, Van Reed, Walker, Wetherill, J. M., Wetherill, Jno. Price, White, J. W. F., and Worrell—74.

N A Y S .

Messrs. Black, J. S., Corbett, Cuyler, Edwards, Ewing, Finney, Fulton, Gilpin, Knight, M'Culloch, Newlin, Patterson, D. W., Porter, Simpson, Struthers and White, Harry—16.

So the third division was agreed to.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Achenbach, Andrews, Armstrong, Baker, Barclay, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Beebe, Bowman, Church, Cochran, Collins, Craig, Darlington, Davis, Dodd, Dunning, Ellis, Funck, Hanna, Hazzard, MacVeagh, M'Camant, M'Murray, Metzger, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Palmer, H. W., Parsons, Purviance, John N., Purviance, Samuel A., Read, John R., Runk, Sharpe, Stanton, Stewart, Temple, Wherry, White, David N., Woodward, Wright and Meredith, President—43.

PUBLICATION OF ARTICLES.

Mr. BROOMALL. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Revision and Adjustment are directed to prepare the articles for publication, making such verbal changes as shall be necessary, and designating the modifications they propose to make in italics.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on proceeding to the second reading and consideration of the resolution.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. T. H. B. PATTERSON. I second the call.

Mr. COCHRAN. I hope that the resolution will not be adopted and that whatever is to be published will be published in the form in which it passes the Convention. I have no idea of putting into the hands of the Committee on Revision or any other committee the power to publish what this Convention has not acted upon, which may lead to confusion in the public mind. A verbal change may be a very significant change.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is upon proceeding to the second reading and consideration of the resolution. Upon that question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Clerk will proceed with the call.

The yeas and nays were taken and were as follow, viz:

Y E A S .

Messrs. Ainey, Armstrong, Baer, Ban-nan, Boyd, Brodhead, Broomall, Brown, Buckalew, Corbett, Corson, Curry, Curtin, Cuyler, Elliott, Green, Hunsicker, Lear,
Lilly, Littleton, M'CLean, M'Culloch,
Patton, Pughe, Purman and Walker—26.

N A Y S .

Messrs. Achenbach, Addicks, Alricks, Baily, (Perry,) Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Biddle, Bigler, Black, Charles A., Black, J. S., Calvin, Campbell, Carter, Cassidy, Cochran, Cronmiller, Dallas, De France, Edwards, Ewing, Fell, Finney, Fulton, Funck, Gibson, Gilpin, Guthrie, Hay, Horton, Howard, Kaine, Lamberton, Landis, Lawrence, Long, MacConnell, Mann, Mantor, Newlin,
Palmer, G. W., Patterson, D. W., Patterson, T. H. B., Porter, Purviance, Samuel A., Reed, Andrew, Reynolds,
Rooke, Ross, Russell, Simpson, Smith, Henry W., Smith, Wm. H., Struthers, Turrell, Van Reed, Wetherill, J. M., Wetherill, Jno. Price, White,
David N., White, Harry and White, J. W. F.—60.

So the Convention refused to read the resolution a second time.

ABSENT. — Messrs. Andrews, Baker, Barclay, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Beebe, Bowman, Bullitt, Carey, Church, Clark, Collins, Craig, Darlington, Davis, Dodd, Dunning, Ellis, Hall, Hanna, Harvey, Hazzard, Hemphill, Heverin, Knight, MacVeagh, M'Camant, M'Murray, Metzger, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Niles, Palmer, H. W., Parsons, Purviance, John N., Read, John R., Runk, Sharpe, Smith, H. G., Stanton, Stewart, Temple, Wherry, Woodward, Worrell, Wright and Meredith, President.—47.

TO-DAY'S SESSION.

Mr. BROOMALL. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That this morning's session be prolonged without recess until the article now pending shall have passed second reading.

On the question of proceeding to the second reading and consideration of the resolution, a division was called for and the ayes were thirty-seven.

Mr. HARY WHITE and Mr. DE FRANCE called for the yeas and nays, and they were taken with the following result:

Y E A S .

Messrs. Addicks, Ainey, Alricks, Armstrong, Baer, Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Bannan, Barclay, Bigler, Black, Charles A., Black, J. S., Boyd, Brodhead, Broomall, Buckalew, Calvin, Cochran, Corbett, Corson, Curry, Curtin, Cuyler, Elliott, Finney, Funck, Hall, Harvey, Hemphill, Horton, Howard, Hunsicker, Knight, Lamberton, Littleton, Long, M'Culloch, M'Murray, Mantor, Newlin, Patton, Pughe, Purviance, Sam'l A., Reed, Andrew, Reynolds, Ross, Struthers, Turrell, Van Reed and Wetherill, J. M.—49.

N A Y S .

Messrs. Achenbach, Baily, (Perry,) Biddle, Bullitt, Campbell, Carey, Carter, Cassidy, Clark, Cronmiller, Dallas, De France, Edwards, Ewing, Fell, Fulton, Gibson, Gilpin, Green, Kaine, Landis, Lawrence, Lilly, MacConnell, M'CLean, Mann, Niles, Palmer, G. W., Patterson, D. W., Patterson, T. H. B., Rooke, Simpson, Smith, H. G., Smith, Henry W., Smith, Wm. H., Walker, Wetherill, Jno. Price, White, David N., White, Harry and White, J. W. F.—40.

So the resolution was ordered to a second reading, and it was read the second time and considered.

ABSENT. — Messrs. Andrews, Baker, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Beebe, Bowman, Brown, Church, Collins, Craig, Darlington, Davis, Dodd, Dunning, Ellis, Guthrie, Hanna, Hay, Hazzard, Heverin, Lear, MacVeagh, M'Camant, Metzger, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Palmer, H. W., Parsons, Porter, Purman, Purviance, John N., Read, John R., Runk, Russell, Sharpe, Stanton, Stewart, Temple, Wherry, Woodward, Worrell, Wright and Meredith, President.—41.

Mr. BROOMALL. It is suggested that inasmuch as we are close to the hour of recess the resolution had better read "this afternoon's session." ["No." "No."] I do not propose to amend it; I only make that suggestion.

The resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON REVISION.

Mr. CALVIN submitted the following resolution, which was ordered to lie on the table:

Resolved, That the chairmen of each of the committees be added to the Committee on Revision and Adjustment.

PRINTING ACCOUNTS.

Mr. HAY. I desire at this time to ask that the resolution attached to the report of the Committee on Accounts and Expenditures, submitted yesterday, be taken up.

Mr. ADDICKS. I trust the gentleman will not press his motion now.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Allegheny (Mr. Hay.)

The motion was not agreed to, the ayes being twenty-four, less than a majority of a quorum.

SALE OF DRAPING.

Mr. ADDICKS. The Committee on House have a small sum of money in their possession. They desire to make report upon it. There is a resolution annexed, and I trust they will be allowed to take up the resolution. It will not take any time.

Leave was granted, and the report was received and read as follows:

The Committee on House submit the following report:

That inasmuch as the material used for draping the Hall was not further required the committee ordered it to be disposed of, and now present to the Convention a check for the proceeds, seventy-five dollars, and suggest that the annexed resolution be adopted:

Resolved, That the Chief Clerk be directed to remit to the State Treasurer the annexed check for seventy-five dollars, to be placed in the Treasury of the State as received from this Convention.

The resolution was read twice and agreed

CARE OF HALL.

Mr. ADDICKS. I hold in my hand a resolution which it is necessary at this time should be adopted (because we may adjourn almost at any moment) so that somebody may have authority to take charge of this House during the recess of the Convention. I may say that it is an identical copy of the resolution passed on the twenty-eighth day of March last. It is as follows:

Resolved, That during the recess of the Convention the Committee on House shall take entire charge of the Hall and the property therein, and they are hereby authorized at their discretion to engage such employees as may be required for such duty.

The resolution was read twice and agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON ACCOUNTS.

Mr. HAY submitted the following resolution, which was read twice and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Accounts and Expenditures of the Convention have leave to sit during its recess; and that all persons having claims against the Convention be required to promptly furnish to said committee their accounts up to the time of the adjournment, in order that the same may be audited.

PRINTING ACCOUNTS.

Mr. H. G. SMITH. I apprehend that the Convention voted inadvertently a moment ago in reference to the report of the chairman of the Committee on Accounts. He has rendered a carefully prepared statement of the accounts between this Convention and the State Printer, which ought certainly to be taken up and acted upon; and inasmuch as some business has intervened between the vote taken a little while ago and the present moment, I move that we now proceed to the second reading and consideration of the account as stated. This question ought certainly to be settled before we adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and the following resolution reported by the Committee on Accounts and Expenditures was read the second time and considered:

Resolved, That there is due to Benjamin Singerly, Printer for the Convention, in full of all claims to the fifteenth day of May, 1873—excepting items in the account above mentioned yet to be fully audited, together amounting to the sum of $2,060 45—the sum of $9,333 27, on account of which has been heretofore paid the sum of $5,000 00; and that a copy of this report and of the action of the Convention thereon, be forthwith transmitted by the Chief Clerk to the Auditor General of the Commonwealth.

Mr. HAY. I desire now simply to state that the accounts of the State Printer up to the fifteenth of May, mentioned in this report, have been very carefully and thoroughly investigated by the Committee on Accounts, and they have reported this resolution believing that their action in the matter has been entirely correct, and in accordance with the requirements of the law. While I have no desire at this time to go into any explanation of the matter further than may be necessary, being reluctant to occupy the valuable time of this Convention, I am very anxious to give the members of the Convention any information they may desire on this subject, and will be very happy to answer any interrogatories that may be addressed to me upon it. There is a further unsettled account up to the first day of July yet in the hands of the committee.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. I have just one question to ask. I see an item here for Small's Hand-Book at $1 25. I remember making a statement at the time that it would cost the Convention ninety cents. May I inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Accounts at what price they settled for that?

Mr. HAY. In reply to the interrogatory of the gentleman from Indiana, I desire to state that it was the understanding of the committee that these books were to be furnished to the Convention at the same price at which they were furnished to the Legislature—ninety cents, and that is the price accordingly allowed the State Printer for them.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was adopted.

RAILROADS AND CANALS.

Mr. HALL. I move that the House proceed to the further consideration of the article on railroads and canals.

The motion was agreed to, and the Convention resumed on second reading the consideration of the article on railroads and canals.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. When the Convention adjourned last evening the pending question was on the amendment of the delegate from Lebanon (Mr. Funk) to the tenth section. The section and amendment will be read.

The CLERK. The tenth section as printed reads as follows:

SECTION 10. All municipal, railroad, canal and other corporations and individuals shall be liable for the payment of damages to property resulting from the construction and enlargement of their works, as well as to owners of property not actually occupied as to those whose property is taken, and said damages shall be paid or secured to be paid before the injury is done.

The amendment is to strike out all after the word "section" and insert:

"No corporate or municipal body or individual shall take private property for public use, or injuriously affect it by change of character of highway or otherwise, without being required to make compensation to the owner thereof for all damages, direct or consequential, resulting from such taking or injury. And such compensation shall be paid or secured before such property shall be taken or injured."

Mr. BIGLER. I desire the attention of the Convention for a very few minutes on this subject. It is one of very grave importance, and it ought to command the attention of the legal minds of this body.

Now, sir, neither the text of the section nor the amendment will answer the purpose, and it seems to me it would be quite out of the question to make the regulations proper for ordinary corporations in connection with those for railroad corporations. The damages are entirely different. Take, for instance, a corporation for mere manufacturing purposes. It may impose damages upon property in the neighborhood and it confers no incidental benefits or advantages. So it may be with regard to the works of municipal corporations. But a railroad corporation anywhere in the country, in any agricultural district, bestows great indirect benefits which are fairly matters of consideration when you come to inquire into the amount of damages inflicted.

There may be, I suppose there are, and yet I do not know that I could name a single instance in which property has been damaged by the construction of a railroad where the indirect benefits have not quite outweighed the damages. There may be cases where a very small property is injured and there is but little in a beneficial way to act upon. But, sir, go into a new country, and the indirect benefits of a railroad are wide-spread and general, far beyond all the indirect or consequential damages to which both these propositions refer.

I maintain that they should be separated, that the provisions which are proper for a railroad corporation would not meet the case of a local or private corporation intended for purposes of individual gain and profit. The railroad is a great public institution, and it comes with its blessings especially in an agricultural community. The usual effect is that land worth, before the railroad was constructed, five or six dollars an acre, commands immediately ten, fifteen or twenty dollars. You may take a small amount of land for the road-bed, and yet leave the owner of that property worth double or treble the money he was before the railroad was constructed. That is almost a universal rule in all new countries; and yet under this section there would be claims set up for incidental or consequential damages. I have no hesitation in saying that the use of the term "consequential damages" in regard to the construction of railroads would have a directly damaging influence upon enterprises of that character. There are timid capitalists who would not hazard their money in an enterprise because they could not see what this term "consequential damages" might fully signify.

Then there is another consideration. Up to this time railroads have been constructed simply upon the principle that the citizen shall be paid for his property or security given for the payment before it is taken. Consequential damages have not been imposed. Are we, at this day, to confess to all the world that, so far, our policy has been an unjust one? Are we to awaken expectation in the minds of thousands and thousands of men that they have suffered consequential damages at the hands of the State by her laws and policy, and that now they ought to have justice? Are we to get up a great contest of this character? We ought not to do so—not that I do not agree that any just claim of a citizen ought to be met by the government, but the wide-spread blessings of the government and the wide-spread blessings incident to these improvements have, I think, protected all our people. It is the rarest case; I do not know of a single one, but I can imagine a case of a town lot so seriously damaged, particularly in a region where railroads are plenty, that there would be a fair claim for damages that would be called incidental or consequential.

Now, sir, I offer, if I have a right to do it, and I believe I have, as an amendment to the amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause of the pending amendment and insert the following:

"Railroad corporations shall not take or appropriate or damage private property without first making compensation or giving ample security for the same; but in ascertaining the value of the property and the amount of damages by a jury or any court, the direct and indirect benefits of the railroad to the owner or owners of the property taken or damaged shall be considered in mitigation of the amount to be paid."

Mr. BUCKALEW. I inquire if that is a substitute for the other proposition?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. It is.

Mr. BUCKALEW. The material difference, I observe, is that this amendment is confined to the mere taking of property. It does not cover at all the question of injury to property without taking it. Now, a canal might be made along the line of real estate, and by its construction land not actually taken by the canal company, but flooded and thereby ruined by it, would not be covered by the amendment. It would not be within the ordinary principle of appropriation of land, at least. Perhaps the word "taking" might receive such a liberal construction as would cover it.

Mr. BIGLER. The use of the word "construction" might meet the views of the delegate.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I think if we adopt a section on this subject at all, it ought to cover both the question of the taking of property and the damage to property without taking it.

Mr. ALRICKS. The amendment of the gentleman from Clearfield does not touch the question involved in this case. He has followed the provisions of an act of Assembly in relation to the assessment of damages done by the construction of railroads. Now, sir, the right of eminent domain is in the Commonwealth, and when the Commonwealth grants to a corporation the right to take the property of an individual, unless she especially provides for the payment of damages, the party can recover no damages unless his property is taken. If I understand the section as offered by my colleague, the gentleman from Lebanon, (Mr. Funck.) it provides that there shall be a provision for the payment of damages, notwithstanding the right of eminent domain is in the Commonwealth, and no property is taken, but property is injured or destroyed.

Now, Mr. President, you cannot have a better case by way of illustration than that of Shrunk vs. The Navigation Company, to be found in 17 Sergeant and Rawle. There the Schuylkill navigation company were authorized to build certain dams in the Schuylkill. Shrunk, the person who was injured, owned a valuable fishery. I do not know whether it yielded him $10,000 a year, or how much, but it yielded a large sum of money annually. They destroyed his fishery, and he wished to recover damages, and he would have been entitled to damages if the act of Assembly had said that the owner of all property injured by that company could recover damages; but it did not say so. It said that wherever property was taken, the party could recover damages. Here the property was not touched at all and the party could not recover a dollar's damages, because, as the Supreme Court said, it was damnum absque injuria;—the doctrine ought never to prevail in Pennsylvania, it should never be allowed in any free country, that there was such a thing as damnum absque injuria; it should be repudiated; but the right of eminent domain was in the Commonwealth, and the Commonwealth allowed the Schuylkill navigation company to make the improvement, and the Commonwealth said, "if you take any land, the owner of the land can recover damages;" but they took no land, they took no property, they only injured property consequentially or incidentally, and the party lost his damages. Since that time I suppose there have been a hundred like cases in Pennsylvania. There was one in Pittsburgh; one occurred in my own county; and they are occurring every day, where property is injured by a corporation in the exercise of a corporate right which they receive from the sovereign, and the sovereign having the right of eminent domain, what he does not say they shall be paid for, they lose.

Now, Mr. President, I greatly prefer the amendment which is offered to the section by my colleague from Lebanon, because it appears to me that it meets the precise wants of the case, and a party could recover damages even if his property was not taken. This question was very fully discussed before, and the able and the venerable President of this Convention gave us his opinion at large on the subject, and then it was very fully understood. The gentleman from Allegheny (Mr. Purviance) presented it to this Convention in a very clear point of view, and the Convention, acting on those suggestions, adopted the section that we have before us. But the section we have before us is a little obscure in using the word "occupied." You do not know how to apply that word, whether it means occupied by the owner of the soil or occupied by the corporation; but the amendment offered by my colleague from Lebanon is entirely clear; there is no difficulty about it.

Mr. President, all that we ask in this case is that an artificial person shall be responsible for damages the same as a natural person. That is perfectly right, and that is all that ought to be done. The artificial person now is not responsible for damages the same as a natural person, simply because the law says that if the property is taken the corporation shall pay for it; but it does not say that if incidental damages are done to a property you can recover anything, and therefore you cannot recover. Now, if two persons be the owners of adjoining properties, and one of them chooses to run his wall down so deep so as to throw the wall of the adjoining property down, he is responsible for damages if he is guilty of any negligence in doing so; but if corporations do that, they cannot be held responsible simply because the law is not broad enough to cover the case.

I trust that this amendment which has been offered by my colleague, the gentleman from Lebanon, will prevail, or else the section as it passed the House before will be adopted. I trust the amendment of my friend from Clearfield will not be considered, as it does not cover the whole case.

Mr. BIDDLE. Mr. President: The printed section ten, as reported in this article, is designed to cover all bodies, municipal as well as private corporations and individuals, who may take property for public purposes, and is also intended to cover that injury which, technically, is called "consequential," resulting not from the taking of property but from its being injuriously affected by a proposed public improvement. Now, so far as my recollection goes, at the time the language of this tenth printed section was introduced, we were all of us of opinion that both of these views were proper views to express in adequate language in the Constitution; that is to say, we all thought an indirect, substantial injury should be covered as well as the mere taking of property, the one injury being represented to the mind of a lawyer by an action on the case, and the other by an action of trespass.

The distinguished President of the Convention took exception to the use of the term "consequential damages" or "consequential injuries," but in my humble opinion without that reflection which he almost always brings to the subject before him, because the language used—"consequential"—is the language of the law, and every legal mind sees at once the distinction between a direct and consequential injury, from the form of action. He is reported to have said—and I believe did say—that the present section gave us in better language the thought desired to be reached by the Convention than the language formerly used. I respectfully differ from that proposition. I think a very slight examination of this section will show that it is defective, and I have been told—I do not say this on any authority, if other gentlemen who can speak choose to speak, they will speak; what I am about to say; I do not say upon any authority of my own, for I never heard him speak afterwards on the subject, but I am told that he has said that he was not satisfied with the present section. I say that from what has been told me, but not authoritatively at all.

On the second line we find "shall be liable for the payment of damages to the property." There are two thoughts involved there, but the phrase is inaccurate. The word "damages" there means the sum of money that is to be paid for injuries. It reads "for the payment of damages to the property." If the thought was written out properly it would be "for the payment of money for damage caused to property," or "for the payment of damages for injury to property." The very slightest examination will show that that is the fact. Therefore the amendment offered by the gentleman from Lebanon has the advantage of precision.

I am not certain that there is not an awkward assertion in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Lebanon, and I say it the more readily because I had something to do with it myself; but I am not certain that it is not a little awkward to talk of property being "injuriously affected by change of character of the highway or otherwise." The thought is a good one, but the expression is a little rough.

I hold in my hand what has been written and I hope will be offered by the gentleman from Dauphin, (Mr. Lambertson,) which I think is very precise and accurate and covers all the views, and it has the very great merit of being taken almost literally from the language of the judge who pronounced the decision in the case of O'Connor vs. Pittsburg, which the Convention will recollect was the case of the church left upon a bluff by a change of the grade of a highway, where an ineffectual attempt was made to obtain redress for that injury and where the court said they had held the case under advisement for some time to see if they could not redress this grievous injury. The language written by the gentleman from Dauphin is this—it is very compact, and I think covers all the cases:

"Municipal and other corporations and individuals vested with the privilege of taking private property for public use, shall make just compensation for property taken, injured or destroyed by the construction or enlargement of their works, highways or improvements, which compensation shall be paid or secured before such taking, injury or destruction."

MR. BIGLER. I am willing to withdraw my amendment in order that that may be offered.

THE PRESIDENT pro tem. The amendment to the amendment is withdrawn.

MR. LAMBERTSON. Then I offer this amendment to the amendment:

"Municipal and other corporations and individuals vested with the privilege of taking private property for public use, shall make just compensation for property taken, injured or destroyed by the construction or enlargement of their works, highways or improvements, which compensation shall be paid or secured before such taking, injury or destruction."

MR. BIDDLE. That, Mr. President, covers the case, in my judgment, very admirably. I prefer it very much to that which I had something to do with. It covers both thoughts; it reaches all corporate bodies, municipal and otherwise, as well as individuals, who take private property for public use, and it meets both classes of injury.

Now, I wish to say a word or two, within the limits of my time, as to this latter point, and that is, why should not such injury be paid for? An indirect injury, or, as it has been called, a consequential injury, may be a great deal more fatal to property than the taking of a very small portion of it. For instance, it will occur to almost everybody that the casting of filth or of water upon the whole body of a man's land injures it, or may injure it, a great deal more than the actual deprivation of a small corner of it. The one may be a standing continual nuisance; the other is measured by the actual dollars which the piece of property taken cost or is worth.

So, again, it must occur to everybody that having a highway to which one has had access heretofore, suddenly closed or diverted, or so impeded as not to be rendered as valuable as it theretofore was, is a much greater injury than to take a little of the property.

Now, I want to put before the Convention a very flagrant case that is occurring in our midst in this community. The Union Passenger railway company obtained the right to lay down additional tracks in Market street, and after some contestation in court it prevailed in a certain way and it has actually laid them down, and it has laid one of its tracks so close to the curb-stone that the merchants and store-keepers using that street to bring to and send from their warehouses goods and merchandise are actually prevented having drays and carts and furniture-wagons stopping the proper time before their places of business, and it has gone so far as to reach this point, that a drayman in the fair exercise of his employment in either taking goods to a warehouse or receiving them from it—and it is not important which—has been fined four dollars by an alderman of this city for obstructing the highway, when the real obstruction has been caused by the laying down of this rigid iron track by the Union Passenger railway company, and a prosecution instituted by them has so resulted; and unless the court will review the merits on certiorari, (which perhaps they can do and perhaps they cannot, the sum being under five dollars and thirty-three cents,) the Union passenger railway company is master of the situation, and it actually will continue running its cars up and down this rigid track and to a great extent destroy the value of that most valuable property, put there at enormous expense, between Seventh and Ninth streets and Front street, on Market street. That property will be measurably injured to a very large extent.

It is to meet cases like that that the language introduced by the gentleman from Dauphin (Mr. Lamberton) is used, and it ought to be introduced to meet such cases. You may say that section eleven of this printed article provides for that case, because it prevents in the future the laying down of passenger railway companies' tracks in municipalities without the consent of the councils. To a certain extent, that does; but we want by this section to meet an actual case and to prevent a grant like this whereby a man shall be indirectly almost injured out of the value of his property. I can see no objection in the way of the argument that has been urged, and to some extent may be urged again, against the passage of this section, on the supposition that if it be adopted improvements will be checked. I do not believe that. The damages will not be indefinite; they are under the control of a court and jury just as much as all damages. In an action upon such a case it will be first for the jury and then for the court, reviewing the action of the jury, to say whether the damages are excessive or not, and necessarily they will do what the language of the amendment of the gentleman from Clearfield (Mr. Bigler) had in view, taking into consideration the supposed advantage, because the last rule laid down on the subject in one of the recently decided cases, in P. F. Smith's reports, is that the damage is the difference between what the property was worth just before the improvement was made and what it is worth afterward. Therefore necessarily the supposed benefit will enter into mitigation of the supposed damage.

Hence I trust that the section will be amended according to the language of the substitute which is now the only amendment before the House, offered by the gentleman from Dauphin, because, to sum up, it covers the case of all corporate bodies, municipal and private; it covers individuals; it covers all injury, as well the injury resulting from the direct taking as that resulting from injuriously affecting the property in the different ways which I have endeavored to point out.

Mr. MACCONNELL. I merely want to refer the delegates to one case that I think will show very clearly the necessity of having a change in the present law on this subject. I refer to the case of O'Connor against the city of Pittsburg. A congregation had built and extended a church according to the grade of the street as it had then been established. Afterward the city altered the grade and cut it down some twelve feet, I think, and the result was that it involved the destruction of the church. For that injury Bishop O'Connor brought a suit against the city of Pittsburg. It was tried and there was no difficulty in proving that the injury had been done, and the only defence set up was that it was consequential damages, and that therefore there was no remedy. The court so held the law to be. The congregation lost its church, and afterward it built a new church, an immensely large structure, one of the finest in the State, according to the changed grade. Now I see by the newspapers (and I often heard of it when I was home last) that a project is agitating and likely to be carried into effect to lower the grade of that same street some seventeen feet, right by that church. I see by the papers that that congregation has held a congregational meeting on the subject, and on the report of experts came to the conclusion that the reduction of the street grade would involve the destruction of their church. Yet it is being insisted upon, and it is not very unlikely that it will be carried out, and if it is carried out under the law as established by the courts in the first case, the church congregation will not be able to get one dollar of compensation unless you put such a provision in the Constitution as this amendment contemplates. The court declared that it was a most monstrous hardship that the church could not be made whole for the injury it sustained in the first place. Now, will it not be a more monstrous hardship if their magnificent building is to be destroyed the second time and the law afford them no remedy?

Mr. J. W. F. WHITE. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MACCONNELL. Well, sir?

Mr. J. W. F. WHITE. In the act of 1863 with reference to the grading and re-grading of the streets of the city of Pittsburg, is there not a section providing that any person injured by the re-grading of the streets can apply for damages?

Mr. MACCONNELL. I do not know whether there is or not.

Mr. J. W. F. WHITE. I will say that there is.

Mr. MACCONNELL. I will not trust the Legislature to retain that act if there be such a law.

Mr. BIDDLE. That is a good point.

Mr. MACCONNELL. Besides that, that is a special act in relation to Pittsburg. It is not a general law, and the rule ought to be general.

Mr. BIDDLE. That is the point.

Mr. MACCONNELL. I could refer to a great number of cases if I so desired, all bearing upon this point; but I think that this is the most striking and ought to be convincing to every member of the Convention, and I do not believe it necessary for me to occupy time by referring to them. I hope the amendment will prevail.

Mr. J. W. F. WHITE. I only desire to say that what I have indicated as an act of Assembly for the city of Pittsburg has been the law since 1863. In fact it was the law before that, because the circumstance alluded to by my colleague (Mr. MacConnell) originated the act of Assembly providing a mode for ascertaining damages for an injury done to property by the grading or re-grading of streets in the city of Pittsburg, and that has been the law for fifteen or twenty years.

I merely refer to this because this clause is a proper subject for legislation. I was myself in favor of modifying one of the sections of the Bill of Rights, and I think that would have been the right place for this amendment. One word added there would have covered all proper cases, that is: "That no person's property shall be taken, appropriated or damaged for public purposes without just compensation." If the word "damaged" had been added to the Bill of Rights, I believe it would have covered the whole subject, leaving it for the Legislature to carry it out, or if they failed to pass the law, for the courts to enforce it.

Mr. COCHRAN. I merely wish to say that in my judgment, the amendment to the amendment is the best proposition on the subject, and I think it ought to be adopted. I will not enter into any discussion of the question, because it has been already discussed.

Mr. CORBETT. I will vote against this amendment and also against this section. You will perceive that we are doing the same thing that we have done heretofore in adopting other amendments and other sections. We are descending into details, into matters of legislation, and taking from the hands of the Legislature that which ought to be left there. We leave all our other rights to the Legislature. Why not leave this question of consequential damages? When we undertake to control this question of eminent domain, we go far enough. When we provide that property taken shall be paid for or secured before it is taken, we have, I apprehend, gone as far as we ought to go. With reference to the question of consequential damages, we ought to leave it in the hands of the Legislature, and they ought to control it as they do all other questions of damages. You seek to provide by the amendment that these consequential damages must be secured before the road can do the injury. Suppose the road contends that there is no injury, and the other parties say that there is an injury, what is the result? The only way to test it would be on a bill for an injunction to stop the prosecution of the work. It may be proper that in certain cases there ought to be a remedy for consequential damages. I am not denying that, but the Legislature ought to make provision for instances of that kind, and I apprehend that no such amendment as this ought to be put in the organic law. There is no property taken. The person is divested of no right, more than any other person is injured by a nuisance committed by an individual or by a corporation; why should you descend to these details in this Constitution?

Why should you regulate this subject of damages? You are aware, Mr. President, that cases with reference to damages have occupied the judicial mind for the last century, and in some respects the judicial mind has been unsettled by them. The decisions have been varied, and why not leave the subject to the law-making power. The result of the adoption of this section of the amendment must be to discourage all new enterprises. It is not a stroke at any road now in existence, because I apprehend all these matters are settled as far as the old roads are concerned, unless it may possibly affect some new enterprises which have been lately undertaken; but these are few, if any, and the amendment is really a direct stroke at all new enterprises, and you are only enlarging this matter with reference to consequential damages when it ought to be left to the Legislature.

Gentlemen say that they cannot trust the Legislature. To that I only wish to say, that if you cannot trust them in such matters as this you had better abolish them altogether. The truth is simply that we are descending to details in this matter by undertaking to regulate this matter of consequential damages. If we make a mistake, there is no remedy. We cannot undo that which we now do. More than that, after you have adopted the section, it is a matter of consideration for the courts, and any rule they adopt will be unbending. They might make some decision entirely different from what we want; and then what is the result?

There is no remedy, and it will remain the law of the land, engrafted in the law by the organic act. There is no change; it is like the laws of the Medes and Persians.

Mr. President, I shall vote against the amendment, and I shall vote against the section in the shape it is.

MR. ANDREW REED. Mr. President: I am opposed to this amendment, but I shall consume very little time upon it, as I expressed my views somewhat when this article was before the committee of the whole. There certainly are cases where consequential damages should be paid. The case referred to, of the church in Pittsburg, and various others, are cases in which any person would at first blush say that certainly damages should be paid; but when we come to provide for them, as in the case of a great many other provisions that we have been providing for, we may do more damage in another direction than the good we shall accomplish in that. For that reason I am opposed to putting this clause in the Constitution, but I am in favor of leaving it to the Legislature, in order that they may from time to time adopt such remedies as experience may prove to be proper.

Now, just see what may be the probable practical result of this section. I here take occasion to say that I have voted for several provisions of this article against my judgment; but among all the sections I think the first one, which gives perfect liberty to all men to build a road where and when they please, is the best one in the whole article. It will prove the best, because where any railroad company does not conduct itself properly or to the interests of the community, others can build another road, and if we perfect that section and make it as free as possible, we can get capital to build roads.

But now suppose after we adopt this section a certain railroad in existence raises its rates and we think them oppressive, and the people desire to build a new road and they start out and survey their road, look at the obstructions that may be placed in their way. Here will be a man some five or six miles off who will come in and want damages, and although you may say that you owe naught, you must give him security before you can go on; and what under this section will prohibit even the other and existing railroad company from claiming damages? You endeavor to compensate for all damages. Why may not the railroad heretofore chartered say, "We are damaged and we want to be indemnified." I am told that in that case the road is not taken. That is true, but we put in this section that consequential damages must be paid; and are they not subject to damage in consequence of the building of a new railroad?

Mr. J. S. BLACK. It says "private property."

Mr. ANDREW REED. No, not "private," but "all damages." But you decide that there are a great many other cases, and I do think it will prohibit that which I believe to be the best thing in the article, the free exercise of building new railroads. The less obstructions we can put in the way of that, I believe the better. I believe that is better than all the other sections of this article put together, a good free railroad law; and, as I said before, there are cases which ought to be remedied; but if we put in an unbending rule here that they shall be remedied, I am afraid we shall go further than we intend to do.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment of the delegate from Dauphin (Mr. Lamberton) to the amendment of the delegate from Lebanon (Mr. Funck.)

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question now recurs on the amendment as amended, which will be read.

The amendment as amended was read as follows:

"Municipal and other corporations and individuals invested with the privilege of taking private property for public use, shall make just compensation for property taken, injured, or destroyed by the construction or enlargement of their works, highways, or improvements, which compensation shall be paid or secured before such taking, injury or destruction."

Mr. LEAR. Is this amendment now amendable? There is a word which I would suggest is not quite the word, and that is the word "individuals." We have "individuals" in the first section and "individual" runs through this article in a way that I do not want to go into a section which is a sort of legal section; and I think instead of the word "individuals" we ought to say "natural persons," because "individual" may mean a house, tree, county or city; anything is an individual which is a single object, whether a man, or horse, or a county; and I think the words "natural persons" would be better there, and I make the suggestion.

Mr. LAMBERTON. Mr. President: The language of the substitute which I have offered was thoughtfully considered. The term "individuals" was used designedly. By reference to the first section of this article it will be seen that to "any individual" is granted the right to construct a railroad or a canal. In our present Constitution the word "individual" is used in the same manner as it appears in this amendment. Permit me to call the attention of the Convention to section four of article seven: "The Legislature shall not invest any corporate body or individual with the privilege of taking private property for public use," &c. It is a term ordinarily used and well understood as designating natural persons. Its use in the Constitution was proper, I respectfully submit, and was required for cases where, by legislative grants, authority was given to individuals, in the construction of railways or making their improvements, to appropriate the private property of others.

My amendment embodies the principle recognized by a majority of the Convention as proper to form a part of the fundamental law. I think, upon examination, the phraseology will be found fully to cover the cases of peculiar hardship appearing in our books and instanced in the discussion upon this question, in which there was no remedy, because of the duty of the courts to construe, as they have done, the word "taken" in the Constitution. Add to this word "injured," "destroyed," the others which appear in the substitute, and the door will be thrown open for the redress of grievances which heretofore have been remediless. These two words I have taken from the opinion of the Supreme Court in the case of O'Connor vs. Pittsburg, referred to by the delegate from Philadelphia (Mr. Biddle.) By a change in the grade of a street, a heavy loss was entailed upon St. Paul's church in that city, without taking any of its property. The judgment of the court below was in favor of the defendant. It was argued twice in the Supreme Court—the re-argument having been ordered, as stated by Chief Justice Gibson, to discover some way of relief for the plaintiff consistently with law. But none was found, because “the constitutional provision for the case of private property taken for public use, extends not to the case of property injured or destroyed.”

Make these words a part of our law, and compensation will be provided for a class of injuries to private property for which it is clear there is needed a remedy.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question now is on the section as amended.

The section as amended was agreed to.

The CLERK read the next section of the article as follows:

SECTION 11. No street passenger railway shall be constructed within the limits of any city, borough or township without the consent of its local authorities.

The section was agreed to.

The CLERK read the next section as follows:

SECTION 12. No railroad, canal or other transportation company in existence at the time of the adoption of this article shall have any beneficial legislation by general or special laws, except on condition of complete acceptance of all the provisions of this article.

The section was agreed to.

The CLERK read the next section as follows:

SECTION 13. The existing powers and duties of the Auditor General in regard to railroads, canals and other transportation companies are hereby transferred to the Secretary of Internal Affairs, subject to such regulations and alterations as shall be provided by law; and in addition to the annual reports now required to be made, said secretary may require special reports at any time upon any subject relating to the business of said companies from any officer or officers thereof; and it shall be his duty, on complaint made against said corporations by any citizen, person or company interested of a violation of law, or any infraction of the rules of said corporation injurious to the rights or interests of such complainant, to investigate said complaint, and if it shall appear that any violation has taken place he shall proceed either against said corporations or the officers thereof, or both, and if on complaint made, or of his own knowledge, it shall appear that any railroad or part thereof is so insufficiently or carelessly constructed, supported, guarded, protected, or so out of repair, as to imperil life or property, he shall at once notify such delinquent corporation of the same, and specify and direct the remedy to be applied: and it shall be the duty of such corporation to repair, support, make safe from, or remove said cause of peril under such regulation not inconsistent herewith as shall be prescribed by the Legislature to carry this section into full effect.

Mr. J. PRICE WETHERILL. I move to amend by striking out all after the word “law,” on the fourth line. I think it must be apparent to every member of the Convention that the residue of the section is purely pertaining to legislation, and should be left to the Legislature. It seems to me a very strange thing that the Secretary of Internal Affairs shall, on a complaint “made against said corporation by any citizen, person or company, for any infraction of the rules of the company,” proceed “either against the said corporation or the officers thereof.” If the rules, which are purely matters to regulate the affairs of the company themselves, are not violations of law, then I should like to ask what right have we or the Legislature to interfere; and if they are violations of law, then why should this sentence be introduced, “or any infraction of the rules of said corporation.”

Then I think it very hard that in case any employees of a railroad company should break one of the rules, instead of going to the president or officers of the company and informing them and getting the remedy there, men should go to Harrisburg, to one of the State cabinet, and make complaint to him, and, on the making of that complaint, he should be directed to proceed, not against the company itself, but against the company or the officers, as he may see fit! The whole thing seems to be very crude, seems to be prepared without that good care which an article of this sort should receive; and I do hope that the amendment which I have offered will prevail, and that we shall vote down the rest of the section as extremely crude in itself, and, independent of that, pertaining purely to matters of legislation, and belonging to the Legislature.

Mr. COCHRAN. I hope this amendment will not prevail, and that the section, notwithstanding the criticisms of the gentleman from Philadelphia, will be adopted. The section is not crude and was not introduced here without consideration. It is intended to provide a guard and protection to the public against not only violations of law, but also infractions of the rules of the companies themselves, upon which so often the rights of persons to transport over or have any connection with those roads depend. You can do as much injury to a party very often by infracting the rules of a railroad company as you can by violating any public law.

This section further provides for a public guardianship over and inspections of the condition of these public works, with a view of protecting the persons who travel or transport freight upon them, to see that these roads, upon which so much of life and property is dependent, are kept in a safe condition for the business for which they were intended, that they shall not be allowed to fall into dilapidation, that they shall not be allowed to go into such a condition that they shall be no longer safe for persons to use them in the transaction of their business or in traveling from one point to another.

Sir, this is a public interest; the public welfare is closely identified with it; and there ought to be some guard and protection provided by which the traveling and transporting public shall be as safe and secure as under all the circumstances of the case it is possible to make them; and this is a matter to be provided for by the State in behalf of the community. These institutions are public institutions. They are created for the purpose of providing for the convenience and accommodation of the public, and the government should see to it that they are kept in a condition of safety. That is all that this section provides for, that the rules of the companies and the laws of the Commonwealth and the condition of the railroads shall be so observed and made so secure that there shall be as little danger as in the nature of the case must be encountered in the employment and use of these railroads.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President: So far in this article on railroads we have been providing general rules and regulations, and this section is intended to provide some means by which those rules and regulations may be enforced. The amendment, I understand, is to strike out all after the word "law," in the fourth line. That will strike out the power of the Secretary of Internal Affairs to require special reports on any subject relating to the business of the companies, &c., and also to investigate complaints made by citizens against corporations for a violation of the law or an infraction of the rules of the corporation.

Sir, some such provision as this is absolutely necessary, and why? Because shippers, persons having business with the roads, will submit to wrongs before they will venture the experiment of going into a court of justice and attempting to assert their rights. They submit to them because they are afraid of these companies; and it is absolutely necessary that there should be some State officer who should have authority, representing the people of the Commonwealth, to see to it when complaint is made that the Constitution and the rules of law are observed. That is the reason why this provision was inserted in the Constitution. The lawyers on this floor time and again have known that a sheriff or a prothonotary or some officer of the court was taking illegal fees and violating the law, and yet they could not afford to quarrel with an officer they were having communication with every day; and we understand perfectly well that a shipper, a person having business with railroads, might feel that his rights were violated, and yet he would know that if he went into a law suit with them, they could embarrass him in his business far more than he could recover by any personal controversy.

Then the amendment proposes to strike out the latter part of the section giving this officer some supervision over these railroads so far as concerns the life and safety of the public in their travel. It seems to me that the Commonwealth should have some officer of this description who should have the right, when complaint was made that certain portions of a railway over which thousands of people are being carried perhaps every day or every week were dangerous to life or property, to require that it should be put in a condition of safety.

Now, sir, what is this portion of the section that is proposed to be stricken out? It provides, first, that on the complaint of any citizen that the rules and regulations have been violated, the Secretary of Internal Affairs shall investigate it. If the information is not sufficient, he may require a special report from the company. That power he ought to have. In many instances you cannot get at the facts in any other way than by requiring the special information desired from the company itself. Then the next provision is a provision for the safety of the lives of the traveling community, and it seems to me that that should be provided for as it is in this section, and we ought to adopt it, not simply down to the word "law," because that confers no more authority than is now conferred upon the Auditor General by act of Assembly. We ought to give this officer a greater authority. He should have the power to see to it that the rules we lay down in the Constitution are observed, and if a complaint is made by a citizen, it should be his duty to go into a court of justice and investigate it and see that the Constitution is carried out. Why make a Constitution, why prescribe rules, unless we create an authority to see that they are executed? As I said before, the citizen whose rights are trampled upon is afraid to do it, and I know it. I have had large shippers in my own city tell me so. I have said to them: "Gentlemen, why do you not go into court with these men; you can assert your rights by resorting to the law." Their reply was, "Oh, yes, perhaps $500 or $1,000 might be determined in that legal controversy, but we are shipping to the amount of hundreds of thousands of dollars, and they could embarrass us in a hundred ways that would injure us much more, and we are afraid to do it." Now, let us make the great Commonwealth of Pennsylvania stand up and protect her citizens and see that this Constitution is enforced.

MR. S. A. PURVIANCE. If it were possible to have the attention of the Convention for five minutes, I should be very thankful.

Mr. President, we have passed a railroad article thus far embracing eighteen sections, and those sections are all regulating the almighty dollar. This is the only section of the railroad article that relates to the preservation of life, and certainly it ought to claim the attention of this Convention for a few moments. What is it to which objection is now made? It is that the railroads of the State of Pennsylvania shall come under what is termed, properly speaking, a police regulation, such as exists in other States of this Union. It is but recently since in New Hampshire they elected a board of railroad inspectors, charged with the duty of seeing that railroads were not neglected by the companies having their control. I submit to the Convention whether that is not an important consideration. You find that most of the accidents which occur on your railroads occur on defective bridges where the logs interlap a little over, but have become rotten, and thus life is sacrificed for the want of proper attention. When a railroad receives a charter from the State it is under an implied obligation that the company shall build their road not inartificially, not unsafely, but in such a way as not to imperil the lives of those who are to pass over it. Look at some of your railroads—built upon stilts high up in the air, some of them one hundred feet high, on trestle works. I undertake to say that that is not such a building of the road as comes within the obligation which a railroad company enters into when they receive their charter.

Allow me to say to the members of this Convention that on the great Pennsylvania road every man who travels over it is in danger of his life in passing along what is called the Pack-saddle. Why, sir, the track is laid there within a foot or a foot and a half of the verge of a precipice two hundred feet high, down into the Conemaugh river, and if at any time, and that time will not be far distant, a catastrophe should happen there, it will be one such as has never been heard of before. If a rail should break or a wheel should break and a car go over there, there would not be a single vestige of life left. Now, sir, what is this Pennsylvania road doing? Buying roads out in the far Pacific, forming connections thousands of miles distant, and why should they not be compelled to build an inside track at this dangerous point to which I have referred for the purpose of carrying passengers safely over their road? What is this section but putting a police power, the regulation of these roads, in the hands of competent authority for the purpose of making these proper regulations?

Sir, (and this is all I shall say,) after we have devoted weeks and months to the investigation of railroads and made regulations in eighteen sections about the dollar, for the preservation of stocks and dividends, &c., let it be said at least that this Convention has devoted one single hour to a section which relates to the preservation of human life. I therefore sincerely hope that this section will be carried as it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment of the delegate from Philadelphia (Mr. J. Price Wetherill.)

The amendment was rejected, there being on a division fifteen ayes—less than a majority of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question recurs on the section.

Mr. BIDDLE. Mr. President: I like the principle of this section, but I do not like the shape in which it stands. I think it is too long and goes too much into detail. I am quite willing to vote that these companies shall be placed under the supervision of the Secretary of Internal Affairs, who now takes the place of the Auditor General in this respect; but I do not like to vote for all that part of the section after the seventh line. I have no doubt of the entire accuracy of the statement made by the gentleman from Allegheny with regard to that dangerous part of the road of the Pennsylvania company near the Conemaugh river, and I have no doubt that wherever there is a high bridge there may be a good deal of danger; but I do not like putting those things in the Constitution. I think if we could so modify the section as to place these companies under the general supervision of the Secretary of Internal Affairs we should do all we are called upon to do by giving to a highly respectable officer who is to be elected by the votes of the people at large the control of this subject, and I would prefer leaving it to him entirely to say when and how and where he should move. By placing these companies under that supervision, we place them in effect under the supervision of the law authorities of the Commonwealth, because the moment the Secretary of Internal Affairs has reason to believe that a violation of the law in any particular has taken place or is about taking place he can bring it to the notice of the Attorney General and proceed in the proper way. I prefer leaving the details to the Legislature. I would therefore move to amend the section by inserting after the word "affairs," in the third line, the words "who shall have a general supervision over them," and striking out everything after the word "thereof" in the seventh line. I will read the section as it will stand if thus amended:

"The existing powers and duties of the Auditor General in regard to railroads, canals, and other transportation companies, are hereby transferred to the Secretary of Internal Affairs, who shall have a general supervision over them, subject to such regulations and alterations as shall be provided by law; and in addition to the annual reports now required to be made, said Secretary may require special reports at any time upon any subject relating to the business of said companies from any officer or officers thereof."

I propose to leave out the remainder of the section, because if you give this officer this supervision he has it in his power to apply the remedy wherever he thinks it fit to be applied.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment proposed by the delegate from the city (Mr. Biddle.)

Mr. HOWARD. I ask for a division of the question, so that the vote may first be taken on the insertion of the words, "who shall have a general supervision over them," and then the question be taken on striking out the residue of the section afterwards. It will be perfectly sensible to insert those words, and then we can decide the other question of striking out on a separate vote.

Mr. HOWARD. Do I understand the motion to be to strike out and insert?

The PRESIDENT pro tem. No, sir; the motion is to amend in the first place by the insertion after the word "affairs," in the third line, of the words "who shall have a general supervision over them." Then the motion further proposes to strike out all after the word "thereof" in the seventh line. Now the delegate from Allegheny (Mr. Howard) asks for a division of the question.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. A motion to strike out and insert is divisible.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. It is not a motion to strike out and insert. The motion to insert is a distinct amendment of itself.

Mr. HOWARD. And then the motion to strike out is another distinct amendment.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. By parliamentary law, which is universally recognized, a motion to strike out and insert is divisible; but the Legislature has a special rule on the subject, which limits the parliamentary rule in that regard.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Chair decides that the amendment is susceptible of the division asked for. The first question is on inserting the words "who shall have a general supervision over them," after the word "affairs," in the third line.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The next division is to strike out all after the word "thereof," in the seventh line, to the end of the section.

Mr. HOWARD and Mr. D. W. PATTERSON called for the yeas and nays, and they were taken with the following result:

Y E A S .

Messrs. Armstrong, Baer, Bannan, Barclay, Biddle, Bigler, Black, Charles A., Black, J. S., Boyd, Brodhead, Broomall, Buckalew, Bullitt, Calvin, Carter, Corson, Cronmiller, Curry, Curtin, Edwards, Fell, Fulton, Gibson, Hall, Hay, Horton, Hunsicker, Lamberton, Lawrence, Lear, Lilly, Mann, Mantor, Niles, Patton, Porter, Pugbe, Purman, Simpson, Smith, Wm. H., Turrell, Walker, Wetherill, J. M., Wetherill, Jno. Price, White, Harry and Worrell—46.

N A Y S .

Messrs. Alricks, Bailly, (Perry,) Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Brown, Campbell, Clark, Cochran, Dallas, De France, Funck, Gilpin, Guthrie, Howard, Landis, MacConnell, McClean, McCulloch, Palmer, G. W., Patterson, T. H. B., Purviance, Samuel A., Reed, Andrew, Reynolds, Rooke, Russell, Smith, Henry W., Struthers and Van Reed—27.

So the amendment was agreed to.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Achenbach, Addicks, Ainey, Andrews, Baker, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Beebe, Bowman, Carey, Cassidy, Church, Collins, Corbett, Craig, Cuyler, Darlington, Davis, Dodd, Dunning, Elliott, Ellis, Ewing, Finney Green, Hanna, Harvey, Hazzard, Hemphill, Heverin, Kaïne, Knight, Littleton, Long, MacVeagh, McCamant, McMurray, Metzger, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Newlin, Palmer, H. W., Parsons, Patterson, D. W., Purviance, Jno. N., Read, John R., Ross, Runk, Sharpe, Smith, H. G., Stanton, Stewart, Temple, Wherry, White, David N., White, J. W. F., Woodward, Wright and Meredith, President—60.

The section as amended was agreed to.

The next section was read as follows:

SECTION 14. Railroad companies shall have the right to connect their railroads by proper connections with the railroads of each other and shall have the right to pass their cars, either empty or loaded, over each other's railroads free from discrimination in rates or charges, and without delay or hindrance in their movements.

Mr. HOWARD. The substance of section fourteen was incorporated in section one by an amendment.

Mr. COCHRAN. This section, as stated, has been already supplied by an amendment introduced in the first section. I move to amend it by striking out all after the word "section" and inserting the following:

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would suggest to the gentleman that the whole section be voted down, and that then he offer his amendment as a new section.

Mr. COCHRAN. It is immaterial. I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the fourteenth section.

The section was rejected.

Mr. COCHRAN. Now I offer the following as a new section:

"Every borough or city shall have power to regulate the grade of railroads and the rate of speed of railroad trains within its limits."

I wish to say, in regard to the section, that it was one which was reported by the Committee on Railroads, and met their unanimous approbation. It was voted down in committee of the whole in a flurry, in pretty much the same sort of a flurry that the Convention seems to be in just now.

It is simply a provision in favor of human life and human safety in the passing of railroad trains through thickly populated districts, boroughs and cities; and I hope that the Convention will go so far, at least, as to provide that municipal corporations shall have the right to prevent railroad trains passing through their limits at lightning speed, so the danger of human life and the destruction of property.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I hope that this section will prevail. It affects large cities like Philadelphia. As the chairman of the committee has said, the section met the unanimous approval of the Railroad Committee, and was reported here; but one afternoon, when the Convention was in a hurry to adjourn, they voted down several sections, hardly considering them, and this happened to be one of them. The people of Philadelphia especially want some provision of this kind in order to put a stop to the innumerable railroad accidents that we read of in the papers. Every day we have an account of some child or man or woman run over by some railroad train passing through the settled portions of the city at a tremendous rate of speed. Now, by placing it within the power of the city authorities to regulate the matter, we shall prevent those accidents that are continually occurring. It will be no injustice to the railroad companies, because the city authorities will not change the grade of a railroad unless it be absolutely necessary for the protection of the people of the vicinity. Whenever the complaints of the people are so great that the city authorities will be compelled to change it, then we shall have the grade changed, and not before, so that the matter will, to a certain extent, regulate itself.

Now, as the gentleman from Pittsburg remarked on the last section, we have been putting in sections in reference to the rights of stockholders on many matters, and we have passed hardly any section in reference to the right of individuals to have their lives protected. This will provide that the lives of citizens in populous districts shall be to a certain extent protected, and therefore as representing in part the city of Philadelphia I hope this section will pass.

Mr. NILES. I have no doubt that the Convention see at a glance that the adoption of the proposed section would put every railroad in the State at the complete mercy of every town-council, and I undertake to say that there could be no greater source of corruption imagined than that every railroad in the State should have to make its peace with the borough authorities. Now, sir, in the little town in which I live, (and railroads are popular there to-day,) a railroad passes at a grade of about sixty feet to the mile. Suppose at some time in the future the council should become opposed to the railroad and they should prescribe by a borough ordinance that the road should pass through the entire corporation limits upon a dead level. It would be an entire impossibility; it never could be done; and I undertake to say that there are not three boroughs or cities in the State to-day where it would be practicable to build a road upon an entire level; and yet if this section is adopted as now before the Convention, this would have to be done. They may not only regulate the speed, but the grade of every railroad in the State. The proposition was voted down almost unanimously before, and I hope it will be now.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move an amendment striking out the word "borough" to accommodate some gentlemen.

Mr. HARRY WHITE. I hope this section will prevail. If there is any one thing we have been fighting for it is the right of local self-government, and I trust we shall adhere to it and never surrender it. By virtue of statutory provisions now, this power, so far as regulating the speed of trains and the regulation of the grades of railroads, is referred to the municipal authorities. Those statutes may be repealed, and I for one am in favor of placing the principle in the organic law.

Mr. NILES. I desire to amend the section by striking out the clause about "grade." I do not care anything about the speed. I move to strike out the words "the grade of railroads and."

Mr. CAMPBELL. I rise to a point of order, that this is not an amendment to the amendment. My amendment I offered at the suggestion of some gentleman back of me to strike out the word "borough," so as to make it apply to cities only. The amendment of the gentleman from Tioga is not an amendment to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment of the delegate from Philadelphia, (Mr. Campbell,) and the other proposition is out of order at this time. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Philadelphia to the amendment of the gentleman from York.

Mr. HOWARD. I hope the delegate from Philadelphia will withdraw that amendment, or the delegates from boroughs will vote against the section.

Mr. COKSON. No, the delegates from boroughs will vote for that amendment and then against the whole section.

Mr. TURRELL. If this section is passed at all, it should be passed just as it is presented. Every municipality ought to have the control of this matter within its limits, and this is in furtherance of protection to human life. It has come to that pass at this day that a few moments or seconds of time in speed to a railroad are considered of more consequence than any man's life. I say if we are to pass this at all, let us have it entire and have the benefit of it. Gentlemen here have said within the last three minutes that they have had their lives jeopardized within the limits of this city, and so it is all over; and if it is worth anything and is good for one municipality, let us have it for all. I will not multiply words at this late hour.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I am in favor of this amendment striking out "boroughs." I have no objection to the councils and mayors of cities fixing the rate of speed, because they have a thoroughly organized local government that can attend to this subject. It is not so in all the little towns of the interior.

Now, with regard to the speed by which railroads can run in our interior towns, it ought to be regulated by a general law. I would not allow one town-council to fix the rate of one mile, and another the rate of ten. There would be no equality; the thing would fall into utter confusion, and I take it if we put this into the Constitution you cannot pass a general law regulating the speed of railroads in interior towns of the State. Therefore, if the amendment of the gentleman from Philadelphia is agreed to, confining it simply to a few large cities where they have local authorities that can control this subject, I will vote for it; if his amendment is rejected, I shall necessarily vote against the proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment of the delegate from Philadelphia (Mr. Campbell) to the amendment of the delegate from York (Mr. Cochran.)

The amendment to the amendment was rejected, the ayes being twenty-four, less than a majority of a quorum.

Mr. NILES. Now I renew my amendment. I have no objection to letting the rate of speed be regulated; but I move to strike out the words "grade of railroads and."

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is one of the most valuable parts of this section. If you strike out that clause it will prevent the city authorities, say of Philadelphia, from declaring to a railroad company, "You shall change the grade of your track to suit the public convenience of the citizens in certain localities." The amendment would also have another bad effect. We have, for instance, in the city of Philadelphia, a magnificent street, like Broad street. We want to preserve that street forever free from having any railroad upon it—and this is the almost unanimous wish of the people of Philadelphia. There have been attempts made in the Legislature, and one attempt succeeded, to have a railroad track authorized to be placed upon that street; but the wishes of the people were so decided that the parties who got the bill through actually became frightened, and they did not put the track down. Now, we want to have some provision of this kind, so that the city authorities can regulate the grade of railroads, and can have it within their power to say to all railroad companies: "You shall not run upon Broad street; and if you want to cross Broad street you shall either tunnel under the street or build a bridge over the street," so that we can keep that magnificent thoroughfare forever free from railroads. If this amendment prevails, it will prevent that; it will subject Broad street, and every other street in the city of Philadelphia, to the whims and caprices of the Legislature. I hope the amendment will not prevail, and that we shall adopt the section as it stands.

I only offered the amendment that I did a moment ago, because some gentlemen from the boroughs suggested that they did not wish to have the section applied to boroughs. I myself should like to see it applied all over the State; but now that that has been voted down, I appeal to the gentleman from the boroughs to vote in the section so as to give some protection to the people of the Commonwealth for their lives in passing these railroads in crowded localities.

Mr. LILLY. Mr. President: I hope these words will not be stricken out. If you give authority to municipalities to fix what grade they please, they will make you go down three or four feet below where you ought to go. I am opposed to the whole section. I think this matter ought to be left in the hands of the Legislature to be acted upon by a general railroad law. These details, as I remarked yesterday, we are getting down to too small a place in, and the next thing we shall want to put in will be a time-table to govern the running of the roads. I am opposed to the whole thing because I think it can be better taken care of by general law than by being in this way put into the Constitution. I hope the whole section will be voted down.

Mr. MANN. Mr. President: It does seem to me that this is the wildest proposition which has been submitted. The adoption of this section will convert every train into an accommodation train, and I suppose that is the purpose of it, because if it is adopted it will give the authorities of every village in the State the compulsory power over the railroads to run at not more than the rate of half a mile an hour through their village. Of course, they will want every train to stop, and we shall have nothing but accommodation trains instead of express trains if this section prevails, for every village will want every train that runs through it to stop. Clearly it will give them the entire control over it, and there will be not only the objection of the gentleman from Columbia, but every conductor will have to have a schedule showing at what rate of speed he may run through every separate village. It will be utterly impossible to run trains under such a section as this except accommodation trains, requiring them to stop at every village through which a train runs.

The point of speed is as objectionable as that of grade, and it will be entirely ruinous to passenger travel in Pennsylvania to adopt such a section as this.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Tioga (Mr. Niles) to the amendment of the gentleman from York (Mr. Cochran.)

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from York (Mr. Cochran.)

Mr. CAMPBELL. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. COCHRAN. I second the call.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Clerk will call the yeas and nays on the amendment of the gentleman from York.

The yeas and nays were taken with the following result:

YEAS.

Messrs. Alricks, Baer, Baily, (Perry,) Campbell, Cochran, Curtin, Finney, Funk, Gibson, Gilpin, Guthrie, Howard, M'Clellan, M'Culloch, Palmer, G. W., Patterson, T. H. B., Reynolds, Ross, Russell, Smith, Henry W., Smith, Wm. H., Turrell and White, Harry—23.

NAYS.

Messrs. Armstrong, Bailey, (Huntingdon,) Bannan, Barclay, Biddle, Bigler, Black, Chas. A., Boyd, Brodhead, Broomall, Brown, Buckalew, Bullitt, Calvin, Clark, Corson, Cronmiller, Cuyler, Dallas, Edwards, Fell, Fulton, Hall, Horton, Hunsicker, Lamberton, Landis, Lawrence, Lear, Lilly, MacConnell, Mann, Mantor, Newlin, Niles, Patton, Porter, Pughe, Purman, Purviance, Samuel A., Reed, Andrew, Rooke, Simpson, Struthers, Van Reed, Walker, Wetherill, J. Price and Worrell—48.

So the amendment was rejected.

ABSENT—Messrs. Achenbach, Addicks, Ainey, Andrews, Baker, Bardsley, Bartholomew, Beebe, Black, J. S., Bowman, Carey, Carter, Cassidy, Church, Collins, Corbett, Craig, Curry, Darlington, Davis, DeFrance, Dodd, Dunning, Elliott, Ellis, Ewing, Green, Hanna, Harvey, Hay, Hazzard, Hemphill, Heverin, Kaine, Knight, Littleton, Long, MacVeagh, M'Camant, M'Murray, Metzger, Minor, Mitchell, Mott, Palmer, H. W., Parsons, Patterson, D. W., Purviance, John N., Read, John R., Runk, Sharpe, Smith, H. G., Stanton, Stewart, Temple, Wetherill, J. M., Wherry, White, David N., White, J. W. F., Woodward, Wright and Meredith, President—62.

Mr. NEWLIN. I offer the following amendment as a new section:

SECTION.—No transportation company nor any officer or employee thereof shall prohibit the sale or carriage of any news, paper or other publication upon the line of said company, unless the same shall be contrary to public morals.

Mr. President, I suppose the objection will be made to this proposed section that it is legislative. I suppose that that objection will be urged to this section.

Mr. LILLY. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. NEWLIN. I am always very happy to answer the gentleman from Carbon; he very seldom speaks. [Laughter.]

Mr. LILLY. I want to know if he is interested in the Inquirer.

Mr. NEWLIN. No, sir, I believe I am not interested. I do not even subscribe to the paper and very seldom read it. I hope the gentleman is satisfied.

This proposition, I suppose, will be opposed on the ground that it is legislative. In answer to that, I have two things to say. In the first place, this proposition has been before the Legislature and has been defeated for reasons that will be obvious to every member. Again, various other propositions in this article are quite as liable to this objection as the one now pending. There are a number of instances where railroad companies have not simply prohibited the sale of particular newspapers along their line, but have failed to allow facilities for transporting the papers to the different towns, boroughs and cities along the line, by reason of opposition on the part of those newspapers to the action of the corporation. Why, sir, only recently in the State of New York, Harper's Weekly was in this manner driven off a principal road, and on another road the New York Times was prohibited being either sold or transported.

I think for these reasons that the section I have proposed ought to be adopted.

Mr. DALLAS. I offer an amendment to the amendment, to come in at the end of it. The section provides for a meritorious class, our newsboys, and I propose to add:

"And that all bootblacks shall be admitted to the depots without distinction of race or color." [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tem. I suppose that is hardly offered seriously.

Mr. DALLAS. I withdraw it.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Philadelphia (Mr. Newlin.)

The amendment was rejected.

REPORTERS' ACCOUNTS.

Mr. HAY. I desire to make a report which I request leave to present at this time. The Convention will probably soon adjourn; as this is a matter which should be attended to before we adjourn, I ask leave to present a report from the Committee on Accounts and Expenditures.

Leave was granted and the report submitted, as follows:

The Committee on Accounts and Expenditures respectfully report the following resolution:

Resolved, That a warrant be drawn in favor of D. F. Murphy, Official Reporter of the Convention, on account of his services as such Reporter, for the sum of $3,000, to be accounted for by him in the settlement of his accounts.

The resolution was read twice and agreed to.

RAILROADS AND CANALS.

Mr. COCHRAN. I now move that the article on railroads and canals be referred to the Committee on Revision and Adjustment.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Convention having completed the second reading and consideration of the article on railroads and canals, the Convention stands adjourned until the sixteenth day of September, at ten o'clock A. M.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-SECOND DAY.

TUESDAY, September 16, 1873.

The Convention met at ten o'clock A.M., pursuant to adjournment, Hon. John H. Walker, President pro tempore, in the chair.

PRAYER.

The following prayer was offered by Rev. J. W. Curry:

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, we desire to come before Thee this morning with reverence and humility. We thank Thee for Thy mercies and protecting care over us during our brief vacation. We rejoice that through Thy goodness our health and lives have been preserved. Truly we can say, "goodness and mercy have followed us all the days of our lives." O, Lord, on our re-assembling in this Hall this morning, one of our number is missing. He who presided over the deliberations of this Convention with so much dignity and marked ability; he who was recognized among his fellow citizens as a faithful defender of truth and justice, and the acknowledged leader of the legal profession in this city; he whose voice was heard during the morning prayers in this Hall, to say "Amen, amen," has passed away, ripe in years. Truly a great man has died; his place among us is vacant. We shall never hear his voice in words of wisdom again. His eyes are closed in death. We followed his remains in sorrow to the grave. Yet, Lord, we rejoice, because Jesus was laid in the grave, and by the power of His divinity, rose again, and robbed death of its sting, and the grave of its victory. We praise Thee, O Father, for the precious and comforting words of Thine only Son, Jesus Christ, who said, "let not your hearts be troubled; ye believe in God; believe also in me, for in my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you, that where I am there ye may be also." We ask Thy blessing, O God, upon the children of our departed brother. Help them to have living faith in Christ the Redeemer of the world. We invoke Thy blessing upon the members of this Convention, its clerks, officers, reporters and attachees. O God, for the sake of Thy Son, who suffered, the just for the unjust, save us from sin in this world and from eternal death in the world to come, and we will praise Thee for ever and ever, world without end, amen.

WITHDRAWAL OF JUDGE WOODWARD'S RESIGNATION.

Mr. KAINE. I move that the roll be called.

Mr. WOODWARD. I rise to a personal explanation, which I think should precede the motion of the gentleman from Fayette. On the second of July I tendered my resignation as a member of this body, in perfect good faith and with great respect for the body, and in pursuance of notice previously given. I understand that the body, in the same spirit, declined to accept my resignation, and laid it on the table. I am now returned to Philadelphia, which I left immediately after resigning, willing, but not anxious, to resume my seat and duties in this body if it is the pleasure of this body that I should perform those duties. Therefore I say if it be the pleasure of the body that I should withdraw my resignation, it may be considered as withdrawn. ["Yes!" "Yes!"]

The PRESIDENT pro tem. put the question, and leave was unanimously given to withdraw the resignation.

MEMBERS PRESENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The delegate from Fayette (Mr. Kaine) now moves that the roll be called.

The motion was agreed to, and the roll being called by the Clerk, ninety-two delegates answered to their names.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT.

Mr. WOODWARD. Mr. President: At the instance of several gentlemen around me, I rise to move that the Convention proceed to the election of a permanent President.

Mr. DARLINGTON and OTHERS seconded the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. It is moved and seconded that the Convention now proceed to the election of a permanent President. That motion is before the Convention.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Chair, inasmuch as his name has been associated with the permanent Presidency, deems it his duty, in delicacy at all events, to retire and let the Clerk preside during the election. If that course is not considered improper it will be pursued. ["Yes." "Yes."]

Mr. STANTON. Mr. President: Would it not be better to have the death of our President officially announced before doing that?

Mr. BROOMALL and OTHERS. Not until afterwards.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. The Convention is organized. The fact of the death of our late President is well known, and the Convention is now, on motion made and agreed to, about to proceed to the election of a permanent President.

Mr. HAZZARD. I suggest, Mr. President, that some member be called to the chair temporarily.

The President pro tem. vacated the chair.

Mr. WOODWARD. I will move, (and ask that the Secretary put the motion,) if gentlemen consider it a proper motion, that the Hon. John H. Walker be elected by acclamation President of the Convention.

SEVERAL DELEGATES seconded the motion.

The CHIEF CLERK, (D. L. Imbrie, Esq.) It is moved and seconded that the Hon. John H. Walker be elected President of this Convention. [Putting the question.] The motion is unanimously agreed to, and Mr. Walker will take the chair as permanent President of the Convention.

Mr. WALKER, on taking the chair as President, said:

Fellow delegates: I tender you my sincere thanks for the honor you have conferred on me in placing me in the position occupied by our deceased friend, the Hon. Wm. M. Meredith. I do not expect to be able to discharge the duties of the Chair as satisfactorily as he did, but I will endeavor to the best of my ability to do it with impartiality and with all the intelligence I am possessed of.

DEATH OF MR. MEREDITH.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President: As senior member of the Philadelphia delegation, as well as of the Convention itself, it has become, Mr. President, my duty to ask my fellow members to suspend for a few minutes procedure with the work committed to their care, and to direct it to a solemn event which an act of divine Providence has commended to our consideration.

Since last we parted, but few weeks since, the painful anticipations of members have been realized in the death of our distinguished President, the Hon. William M. Meredith, who expired at his residence in this city, on the 17th day of August, in the seventy-fourth year of his age.

Mr. Meredith was a native of this city, and throughout his long life a resident therein, except when absent in the discharge of public duties. His father was a highly accomplished gentleman of great purity of character, occupying a distinguished place at the Philadelphia bar. His childhood was blest by the genial influences of association with a mother eminent for her mental, moral and social qualities, and his instruction, begun and long continued at home, was subsequently enlarged by collegiate education, to be perfected finally, as it was, by special studies and professional and official occupation. His attainments, though large, were less conspicuous than those of others not his equals, simply for the reason that as a consequence of early home discipline they had been thoroughly digested, and had become indivisible and inseparable portions of his mental character. His thoughts and their expression were tinged with the best sentiments of ancient and modern authors, yet were these latter never ostentatiously displayed.

Mr. Meredith's success in the profession of the law, and especially as a barrister, early attracted the attention of those whose party relations and party influence led them to select such as seemed likely to become candidates for the popular suffrage, and he soon therefore entered the Legislature of the State, almost at once achieving there a distinction closely correspondent with his rising influence at the bar. For many years he was a member of our city legislature and president of the select council. His parliamentary knowledge, and his civic devotion, there gave dignity to the place he occupied, and secured an amount of respect which, as there is too good reason for regretting, such positions do not everywhere command.

Mr. Meredith was elected a member of the Convention to which, in 1838, was referred for amendment the Constitution of the State. The records of the proceedings of that body, and the reminiscences of his few remaining colleagues, prove him to have been an active and influential member. Throughout its sittings he distinguished himself generally by an earnest advocacy of propositions tending, as he thought, to promotion of the public welfare, but most especially by his logical discussion of questions concerning that judiciary with whose interests his professional education and pursuits so closely identified him; and for the maintenance of whose permanent dignity he was always a zealous and able advocate.

In that Convention, as in the Legislature of the State, Mr. Meredith's eloquence was marked by a directness which left on the minds of his hearers no doubt of either his inclination or his object. He was grave, argumentative and convincing in the larger questions under discussion; interesting and pleasing in debates of lesser moment; and, though avoiding all aggression, was, when provoked, pungent in his satire and cutting in his rebuke. Few men in that body were so remarkable for their readiness as debaters, or their promptitude in repartee.

Mr. Meredith was called to the national councils, and, as Secretary of the Treasury in the short administration of President Taylor, there distinguished himself by his comprehensive views of the duties of his place and of the great interests of the people he represented.

It was at a trying moment in the experience of this Commonwealth that he subsequently accepted the office of Attorney General of the State, doing this at a personal and professional inconvenience which gave to his labors the merit of sound patriotism and great self-sacrifice. How serious was that sacrifice can scarcely be appreciated by any but those close friends with whom he consulted at the moment when acceptance was urged upon him by my friend and colleague, Governor Curtin, then Chief of the State. Most reluctantly was it accorded, the impression being full upon his mind that in his then physical condition compliance with the Governor's demand, for demand it really was, must be followed by speedy death. How important it had been that he should comply, was proved by the fact that from the hour of its becoming known that he had assumed the legal advisership of the Executive, the storm of vilification ceased. All knew that if there had been any truth in the charges which before had been daily made, the Governor would not have dared to offer him the place. All felt that with our departed friend in office, they had a guarantee not only that there had been honesty in the past, but that there was to be honesty in the future. It is rare to find an individual exercising over the public mind so large an amount of influence as was then exhibited; rare to find a man in public life whose duties are so thoroughly performed, and with a success so perfect.

When the President was seeking for men of might, of personal, professional, and political distinction, to assist in the councils at Geneva touching questions then at issue between Great Britain and the United States, he almost necessarily selected Mr. Meredith. There were, however, reasons sufficient for warranting the recipient of the invitation in declining the proffered honor, and in thus avoiding the exposure and the labor which acceptance would necessarily have caused him.

These things had passed into history when the election of Mr. Meredith as President of this body, by an unanimous vote, gave expression to the perfect confidence had in his parliamentary skill and in his entire mastery of almost all subjects likely to be discussed, as well as in the soundness of his patriotism and the purity of his life; a confidence shared by all who knew him. It was a choice sanctioned and applauded by the whole people of our Commonwealth.

How fully our late President comprehended the duties of his place, and how ably they were discharged, it is not necessary for me to state. I stand in the presence of those who witnessed, and will testify to, the promptness and impartiality of his judgment; and who, if hesitating fully to assent to his decisions, never for a moment doubted his sincerity nor long withheld concurrence in his views.

The members of this Convention, when its labors shall have closed, will take to their homes a grateful recollection of their deceased President, and will do justice to the wisdom, integrity, and impartiality of his administration. They will have a melancholy gratification in associating his memory with the recollection of the dignity and usefulness of the body of which they had been members, and of William M. Meredith, its head.

The resolutions which I am about to offer, though partaking of the formalities of such an occasion, are intended as an expression of the profound respect with which this body recognizes the sterling worth of Mr. Meredith as a man, a citizen, and a statesman; and especially are they to serve as testimony of a full appreciation of his great services as President of this Convention, and of the sympathy of its members with the bereaved family, and with a community which loses so much in the death of so eminent and so excellent a man.

I offer, Mr. President, the following resolutions:

Resolved, That this Convention has heard with profound regret the formal annunciation of the death of its President, the Hon. William M. Meredith, to whose eminent abilities and hearty devotion to the discharge of the duties of his office testimony is hereby borne.

Resolved, That this Convention, while expressing regret at the loss which it has itself incurred, feels it due to itself and to others to offer the expression of its deep sympathy to the bereaved family of Mr. Meredith, and to the community of which he had so long been a valued and honored member.

Resolved, That the President be and he hereby is requested to communicate these resolutions, properly attested by the officers of the Convention, to the family of our deceased President.

Resolved, That a committee of — be appointed to take order for the preparation of a memorial of the deceased.

Resolved, That this Convention, as a further token of respect for its late President, will refrain this day from any further labor, and will adjourn till to-morrow at — o'clock.

Mr. DARLINGTON. Mr. President: I cannot permit this occasion to pass without adding a few words to what has been already so appropriately said. Although I knew Mr. Meredith for some years previously, yet my acquaintance with him did not commence until we met at Harrisburg as members of the Constitutional Convention of 1837. That body contained many of the most distinguished men of the Commonwealth, some of whom were advanced in life, and had served many years as representatives in Congress, in the Legislature, and in other places of public trust. He was then in the full vigor of manhood, possessing a mind naturally strong, highly cultivated and stored with varied learning, and was gifted with powers of oratory of no common order. He at once took rank as one of the ablest debaters of that Convention, and when he addressed the body he commanded its earnest and undivided attention. During the whole period of its sessions—which extended over many months—he was constant in his attendance and earnest in the discharge of his duties. His views were well known to be highly conservative. Strongly attached to the Constitution of 1789, and believing it, as we have heard him express in this Convention, to be the best frame of government possessed by any of the States—we were not surprised to learn that he doubted the wisdom of the proposed changes and innovations. When called, as he sometimes was, in the temporary absence of the President, to the chair, he displayed the same aptitude and readiness in the discharge of its duties as we have all seen him exhibit while presiding over this body.

My intercourse with him ever since our acquaintance began has been of the most agreeable character. We have been frequently brought together professionally, sometimes as antagonists, oftener as allies; and I am yet to hear the first intimation of word or deed on his part inconsistent with the highest standard of professional and personal honor.

He was one of the most genial companions I ever knew. His conversation, full of instruction, was at the same time free and easy, and interspersed with anecdote and pleasant remark which delighted all his listeners.

I make no reference to his public services in the Legislature, as Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, or as Attorney General of this Commonwealth. His memorial will doubtless be written, and will be the proper repository of the principal events of his public life.

Upon his election as a delegate to this Convention, almost every one instinctively looked to him as the proper person to preside over its deliberations. His unanimous choice was a deserved compliment to his high character and distinguished ability, and the manner in which he discharged his duty is alike honorable to him and satisfactory to us all.

During his illness, which was somewhat protracted, I frequently called to see him, and generally found him cheerful, and hopeful of recovery. He attributed his ill-health to over-work in this body, and naturally supposed that rest would restore him. On my last visit, two days after our adjournment in July, it was impossible not to see that his strength was failing, and I had the greatest apprehension that we should never see him here again.

We are now assembled to mourn his loss, and pay appropriate tribute to his memory. His death is an admonition to us all that the sands of life are fast running out. He was less than six years my senior, and there are some older, and many younger here than I; yet by the wise provision of Providence we know not who next shall follow. Our duty is so to live as to be always ready.

Mr. BIDDLE. Mr. President: It is not because I expect to add anything to the comprehensive and eloquent eulogy that has been pronounced by the mover of the resolutions upon our deceased friend that I rise to speak; it is because I feel it a necessity to say something on this occasion of one whom I have known, whom I have honored, whom I have revered from early boyhood.

I may be permitted to say in the outset of these remarks, that I was allowed the great privilege of close personal intercourse with the distinguished deceased, that free interchange of mind with mind which enables us truly to form a just estimate of the character of a friend.

In a body like this, composed so largely of members of the same profession, it is not perhaps inappropriate to refer to the professional life of the distinguished dead. Indeed, so much of that professional life was, as it were, a public life, because in no question of great public interest was Mr. Meredith, for many, very many years of his active life at the bar absent from one side or the other, that in speaking of his professional life, we, in a measure, touch upon that other life which has been so well referred to in the resolutions and in the speech introductory of them.

Mr. Meredith, born the son of an eminent practitioner of the law, was so well educated in and imbued with the principles of jurisprudence, that at an early age he stepped forth as the thoroughly trained lawyer, the ready advocate, equal to any forensic encounter; yet his advance was a slow one, and his success but tardy, for he neither had, nor affected, the popular arts by which practice at the bar is early secured. He could not solicit business, business must solicit him; not because he thought it wrong to solicit business, but because he disdained it. Success did ultimately come, as we all well know, and first in a cause which involved not only the interests of his native city, but, as it were, the interests of every citizen in this Commonwealth. The exhibition in this case of his great legal acumen, his profound knowledge of the early history of the Commonwealth, his wonderful mastery of all the weapons of advocacy, placed him at once in the front ranks of a profession then led by a Binney, a Sergeant, and a Chauncey. After the decision of the case I refer to, which occurred in the year 1837, a case involving the right of the people of this Commonwealth to the full enjoyment of one of the public squares of this city, his success was assured and his advance rapid; for I feel entirely safe in saying that until his call by President Taylor to the Secretaryship of the Treasury, no important cause was argued in the State in which he was not retained on one side or on the other.

How he conducted the business entrusted to his hands very many gentlemen on the floor of this House well know, and it requires no statement from me to call to recollection the brilliant and successful manner in which his abilities were displayed in the service of every client by whom he was employed.

In the office of Attorney General, which he filled at a comparatively recent date, his term of six years was marked by a singular devotion to the interests of the Commonwealth. It would be rendering but poor justice to his character to say that no temptation could ever for a moment induce him to swerve from the strict line of duty. It is not in that way that I wish to speak of him; but I desire to refer to his zeal, his devotion to the cause of the Commonwealth, his thorough personal identification with the interests of the State; all of which qualities were so eminently conspicuous as to impress, in a very marked manner, those who were brought into necessary opposition with him by the nature of their business. He retired from that office leaving upon it, in a striking degree, the impress of his great abilities and his high character.

In concluding this very slight sketch of his professional career, I feel that I am not overstepping the bounds of just eulogium if I apply to him what the master of Roman oratory said of a great contemporary when he characterized him as the most eloquent of the lawyers, the most lawyer-like in his eloquence, eloquentissimus jurisperitorum, jurisperitissimus eloquentium.

But here, in this Convention so lately presided over by him, it seems more appropriate to touch upon his public life, upon that side of his life which was dedicated to the public service, to public affairs. I wish to say a few words in regard to his political character.

Mr. Meredith was born a Federalist. He came into the world in perhaps the most exciting period of the politics of this country, certainly in as exciting a period as ever existed. He was born in the year 1799, in the presidency of the elder Adams; and intellectually precocious, he entered as a mere boy warmly and sympathetically into the political feelings and the political excitements of that day. His attachment to his own party leaders, or rather to the leaders of the party in which he was born and to which he adhered so long as it was a party, partook of the ardor of his temperament; yet it was not to the principles of the party as such, so much as to the men who led it, that he gave his thorough adhesion. He was a Federalist, without being strongly attached to any of the peculiar tenets of that most respectable party. He certainly was not what might be called a concentrationalist, a consolidationist. He was rather the reverse, rather a States-rights man. He was not a liberal constructionist; he was rigid in his views of the explication of the great charter which lies at the foundation of our government. It was to the Federal party as he conceived it ought to be, rather than to the principles which the existing Federal party enunciated, that he gave his full concurrence. While he worshipped the great men of the party, he never could have gone along thoroughly with all their political peculiarities. When he reached manhood he was undoubtedly strongly imbued with many of their views; but with his advent into active life that party had practically ceased to exist, for Mr. Meredith attained his majority just about the time of the second presidency of Mr. Monroe, when, as we all know, party opposition lay for the moment dormant, if not dead.

Mr. Meredith was formed to be a debater, and as has been very justly said by my distinguished colleague from Philadelphia, (Mr. Carey,) his fellow-citizens were not slow in discovering his great powers in that direction, and at least a decade of years before he had become distinguished at the bar, by the unsolicited suffrages of the voters of his native city he was elected to the Legislature of the Commonwealth, where he soon became eminent.

Let me say a few words here about what I believe to have been some of his characteristics as a debater. He certainly was in the very foremost ranks in this respect, if not the very first. I disparage no man when I say this. Strong, vigorous good sense, clothed in nervous language, rising as the subject rose to fervor, and often to passion; directness of purpose, singling out the strong points of attack and throwing overboard the little ones; wonderful power of repartee, biting sarcasm where he chose to resort to it, were only some of the parliamentary weapons which he had at ready command. His masterly treatment of any great political question has again and again impressed the listeners with admiration. How he seized, with instinctive rapidity, the weak points of his adversary; how cogently he drove home his own strong blows with sledge-hammer force, many gentlemen here have again and again witnessed with delight, and almost with approval even when they differed from the views of the speaker.

It has been said here, and truly said, there was nothing aggressive in his nature; but while he was not aggressive he held his honor in a wary distance, which made it dangerous to offer the slightest offence to it, and woe betide the man who incautiously or presumingly thought that in the way of attack he might safely measure his sword with Mr. Meredith's; his defeat was a foregone conclusion.

Mr. Meredith, without the most indirect solicitation on his part or even on the part of his friends, after presiding long and well over the local legislature of this city, and after conducting for a quarter of a century or so the leading business at the bar here, was called by President Taylor to one of the most important positions in his gift. That President did not live long enough (I think but little over a year) to enable him to develop anything like a fixed or settled policy, and therefore Mr. Meredith's great abilities were scarcely tested in the Treasury Department; but his truthness, his integrity of purpose, were shown there as everywhere else. His disdain of mere party intrigues, of mere partisanship, were conspicuous here, as they always had been throughout his whole life. He was too little, probably, of a politician to be very successful in public life. He dwelt too little upon that which is usually uppermost in the thoughts and calculations of the mere politician, to cope very successfully with those who walked nearer the earth; but had he been permitted to hold the position to which he was called for its ordinary period, undoubtedly he would have greatly distinguished himself.

How he conducted himself as Attorney General of this great Commonwealth, to which post he was invited by our friend and colleague, Governor Curtin, has been so well spoken of by my colleague from Philadelphia that I am indisposed to add a single word upon that portion of his public life.

Every man in Pennsylvania, every man in the country, felt a sincere pleasure when it was announced that he was to represent the United States as one of its counsel before the tribunal at Geneva. While the fact that he did not finally accept this position was not unfortunate for himself, it was certainly so, in my estimation, for his country. Had he been present as one of its leading counsel, I believe, from my estimate of his character, that this country would have been spared the humiliation of advancing pretensions not only destitute of justice but even of the cover of plausibility, and which the good sense of the whole people, the moment they were announced, unhesitatingly rejected. Nor would our government have been placed in the dilemma from which it was, in part, curiously enough extricated by the pronouncement in advance, by the tribunal which might have been ultimately called upon to adjudicate them, of an adverse opinion as to claims which were withdrawn from its consideration without formal presentation and argument. Mr. Meredith would have been a party to no such procedure.

But the crowning event of his life, in my opinion, was the position to which he was called in this Convention, not only by its unanimous suffrage, but by the unanimous heartfelt selection of every man here. No mere party man, no man who had erected as the standard by which he was to govern his political life mere adherence to party, could have received this choice in such a way. It was because every one felt and knew that he never could and never did "give up to party what was meant for mankind," that Mr. Meredith stood in the estimation of this body not only as its foremost man, but as the man who was entitled to receive the unsolicited vote of every delegate present. No doubt, in the ordinary acceptation of the term, he was a party man so far as to adhere to the general policy marked out by his party, subordinating to the success of this policy any petty or private differences of opinion on minor points; no doubt he was a party man to the extent of sinking unselfishly his real or supposed claims when the interests of his party seemed to demand it. But he never pre-pledged himself to follow the dictates of party or party leaders, without regard to whether in his judgment they were right or wrong. Much less would he have ever bound himself in advance, under the specious plea of adherence to party, to accept unhesitatingly mere party nominations for all offices, judicial and others, as they were cast before him by party dictators. Mr. Meredith was not that man; and the best authority entitles me to say that more than once he overlooked in this regard party considerations as altogether inferior to what he conceived to be his duty to himself and to his country.

Mr. Meredith's character was such, his public and his private character was so simple, so direct, so free from all affectation, he was so accessible in intercourse, that we scarcely knew how great a man he was until we found ourselves deprived of him. And this community in which he lived, perhaps a little cold in its external manifestations, a little too much averse to anything like demonstrativeness, only felt silently the worth and the value of the man who was dwelling in its midst. But when Philadelphia, with the whole country, was aroused by the intelligence of his decease to a full sense of her loss, she then keenly perceived and warmly and strongly expressed her sense of the bereavement. She has felt and she will long continue to feel, in the death of this distinguished man, her very great loss; and she will long continue to search for, without finding, another fit to replace him.

Mr. DALLAS. Mr. President: Mr. Meredith's brilliant intellect and extensive attainments were never employed ungenerously in his association with those less gifted, and to the close of his life he was always kindly considerate of younger men, and to the end retained, in his intercourse with them, an engaging, cheerful courtesy. This thought—impressed upon my heart by grateful remembrance of kindness to myself—prompts and emboldens me now to offer an humble tribute to his memory. Not that I can add anything to that which has already been so well said of him, nor that anything which can be said could adequately depict the loss occasioned by his death, and our deep appreciation of the extent of that loss to us. But, sir, it is not fitting that this hour should be allowed to pass without special though brief mention of the warm affection with which Mr. Meredith was regarded by his junior associates, here and elsewhere, nor without at least a hurried recognition of that which I conceive to be the great lesson of his life for them.

It is, Mr. President, a melancholy truth and a sad misfortune to the State, that her young men seldom interest themselves in public affairs unless directly induced to do so by desire for public office, and hence mere seekers of place have, in great measure, become our substitutes for statesmen in the counsels of the Commonwealth, and venal demagogues usurp the honors due to patriots. Mr. Meredith was a statesman and a patriot in the highest sense, but he never sought for office. His time, from his youth upward, was better spent in the faithful prosecution of those studies which made him the foremost lawyer of his time, and so thoroughly fitted him for the performance of public labor that it became necessary, upon more than one occasion, to call upon him to serve the people in positions which, though beneath his deserts, he accepted in obedience to his duty to his native State. But, sir,

"Whom can honors, repute or trust, Content or pleasure, but the good and just."

Mr. Meredith was, indeed, a thorough lawyer, an eloquent advocate, an accomplished scholar and a profound statesman, but a sense of honor the most keen, and a purity of purpose which rendered all other considerations subservient to his own conception of right, made him even more than all of these—a noble man. "Take him for all in all, we shall not look upon his like again!" And the teaching of his life, to which I have referred, is this: That better in the end than power or place, and all that power or place e'er gave, is the abiding glory of a life well spent.

Mr. President, men will always differ in opinion upon public questions, and many of us have not concurred in those views which constituted Mr. Meredith's political faith; but it has come to be of paramount importance that public men—be their opinions what they may—should be pure beyond suspicion of ill doing, and hereafter that man's memory will be dearest to the State who, like Mr. Meredith, shall leave upon the pages of its history the inspiring record of an unblemished character and a spotless life. Let those of us who are beginning in this Convention as he commenced in that of nearly forty years ago, take this lesson to our hearts, and "Let us then be up and doing,

With a heart for any fate,
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor and to wait."

Mr. LANDIS. It must ever be a source of regret that the name of William M. Meredith cannot be appended to the instrument which this Convention is about to lay before a great Commonwealth for its approval. His name was subscribed to the Constitution of 1838, and as under that fundamental enactment the people have advanced to a degree of civilization and prosperity commensurate with the greatness of a nationality or an empire, it would have been well if the State could have had the stamp of his personal approval upon the paper which reforms the successful labor of 1838, in which he was so illustrious a workman. But whilst we have had the benefit of his counsel and presidency for more than half the session, it has pleased God, who gave him his great mind, to call him from his labors. And as we approach the conclusion of our deliberations, we can but pause in our task to deplore the loss which both we and the people have sustained, and complete, unaided by his great wisdom and experience, the high duties imposed upon us.

I never knew Mr. Meredith till I came into this Convention, and, though familiar with his fame, I met him when far on the downward walk in life—when his name was rich with his life's experience—when replete with the honor given him by the admiration of his fellow-citizens—when, as linking the present with the earlier days of the Commonwealth and its distinguished sons, he was about to leave the theatre of action—and when, in the fulness of years, life and usefulness were about to depart together; for soon

"The hand of the reaper Took the ears that were hoary."

I shall not attempt to delineate the character of Mr. Meredith. Others have to-day more appropriately and fitly done so, and posterity will vindicate the justice of their eulogium. Indeed he needs no monument from us, his own deeds and his own qualities are the stones in the shaft which will perpetuate his name. No man can, as he, appear among his fellow-men and labor with the fervor of his mind and the affluence of his intellectual resources, guided by his zeal, his probity of purpose and high and noble aim through all the years of his private and public activity, without stamping the good impress of his gifts and his qualities upon his race and generation—an impress that must outlive the day that witnessed the giving back the inanimate clay to the maternal earth from which it sprang.

It was pleasant in meeting Mr. Meredith to recall the triumphs of his earlier years; that he was the cotemporary of Sergeant, Hopkinson, Ingersoll and other luminaries of the past; his encounters with the rare intellects of his time; his reputation as among the first of American lawyers; and when in the vigor of his manhood, what must have been his tall and manly person—or is it too much to say—his majestic presence! But it was sad to see only too plainly in the attenuated form and tottering step, as he came daily to the discharge of his last duties, that life was ebbing, and the frail hulk must soon be stranded.

The life of Mr. Meredith we are told was a busy one. He possessed a vast store of learning, upon which his great mind made ample demands, and utilized for every purpose to which his attention and his energies were directed. This body has often witnessed the flashes of his wit, and in social intercourse his trenchant repartee and apposite allusion gave evidence to his brethren of later day acquaintance of what must have been in earlier years the attractive power of his companionship, or the quiver of his lighter weapons for his adversaries. With these and the many other recollections that cluster around the name of Mr. Meredith, I shall claim for myself one of the pleasantest of my memories, my meeting and acquaintance with the man whose death we here to-day lament. And whilst I here utter this brief and feeble tribute to his memory, I know I can add nothing to his fame. I cannot hope by any word of mine to exalt the high attributes of his character, but as one of the latest of his acquaintances and fellow-laborers, I may unobtrusively approach and lay a simple garland upon his grave.

Mr. Meredith is dead. But hope we are told perished not with the body. He found in the gospel of the Nazarene a faith which bore his hope, and that faith and that hope outlast the fleeting breath. As we gather good from his life, so let us gather counsel from his dying. Thrice have we here mourned a dead brother; thrice let us be warned of our own responsibilities, and of that allegiance which we owe to Him who came into our midst, and took from the field of their latest usefulness Hopkins, M'Allister and Meredith; and in the ecstatic joy of a perfect hope, let us remember those "brighter worlds" to which they "led the way."

MR. STANTON. Mr. President: The 17th of August, 1873, will long be remembered by the citizens of Philadelphia as the dark day on which passed from their midst that most eminent scholar, jurist and statesman, William Morris Meredith.

When a great man dies a nation mourns, and the history of our country supplies numerous instances where the halls of legislation, national and State, have been draped in mourning for those who were honored and beloved by the people. They died and were buried with their fathers, but their names are engraved in our hearts, and their illustrious deeds and exalted virtues can never be lost so long as intelligence, patriotism and liberty shall have an existence.

To-day we mourn one with whom we were but recently associated; one who presided over our deliberations with rare ability and dignity. During our recess he passed away no more to meet with us in this Hall where often we have listened with such intense interest to his manly utterances and wise counsels. The gloom which Mr. Meredith's death cast over this city is not dispelled, but hangs about it still like a funeral pall. Philadelphia acknowledged him as one of her most eminent sons; eminent alike as a lawyer, a statesman, a citizen and a proper peer of her Sergeants, her Ingersolls, her Whartons, her Binneys and a long line of men who have made illustrious and famous her bench and bar.

Standing here this morning, we are especially reminded of our departed brother, and realize that each word "Which he hath uttered; every varying tone, And even each change of feature, are consigned As gems to memory's casket."

In his death the bar has lost a luminary of the first magnitude; society an amiable gentleman; the church a shining light; literature and art a devotee; the State a pillar of strength, and the republic one of its most faithful and heroic champions. Few men combined a greater amount of talent in the respective fields of law, art or science than did Mr. Meredith. In politics he was firm and consistent, upholding all the fundamental principles of our government and constantly keeping in view the great truth that religion and virtue are necessary to the success and perpetuity of our free institutions. Mr. Meredith was not ambitious for popular honors, in the sense of the term obtaining in these times. He was not a man to bend to the dictation of corrupt political factions. Independent in spirit, he spurned the chicanery of men who sought to entrap him for the sake of using his name and influence in furthering their own nefarious schemes. He was emphatically an honest man. In his own heart there was no corruption, and he could not tolerate it in others, and this fact, known to the community, gave him its confidence without any reservation.

Singularly quiet and unobtrusive, he had struggled for years at the bar before his great abilities were fully recognized, but during that period his mind was stored with the wealth which, later, was developed in such plenitude and power. In 1824 he entered the arena of politics, and represented this city in the lower branch of the Legislature, where he distinguished himself in debate, and secured the esteem and confidence of his constituents by his unremitting attention to their interests. As a member of city councils, and of the Constitutional Convention of 1837-8, Mr. Meredith became more widely known, and his abilities were appreciated not alone within our local boundaries, but throughout the Commonwealth.

President Taylor, recognizing his great ability and sterling integrity, called him into his cabinet as Secretary of the Treasury, a post which he filled until the accession of Mr. Fillmore to the presidency. In 1861 Governor Curtin appointed him Attorney General of Pennsylvania at an hour in our country's history when an incorruptible patriot, with a cool head and a brave heart, was required to discharge the high duties of the office. President Grant, not unmindful of his talents and profound legal acquirements, tendered Mr. Meredith the position of senior counsel for the United States government before the Geneva Tribunal of Arbitration, but his advanced years and waning health caused him to decline the imposing honor.

Last fall the people of Pennsylvania elected him a member to the Convention sitting in this Hall to revise their Constitution. They remembered his valuable services in the Convention of 1837-8, and were anxious again to invoke his counsel and secure the benefits of his ripe experience and practical wisdom. On the assembling of this body Mr. Meredith was elected its President, and how well he discharged the functions of that honorable, but onerous, office, you all know of your own observation.

I do not attempt to analyze the character and legal life of the deceased; others on this floor, who knew him better, through daily intercourse with him in the profession, can do him ampler justice. We knew him, however, as a man upon whose escutcheon there never fell a stain; a man whose virtues shone forth with resplendent glory; whose life was spotless and uncontaminated by contact with the corruptions of the times. He has passed from our midst; from the fields of his usefulness in this world, to that higher and more glorious realm, where the good shall live forever.

"Sure the last end
Of the good man is peace. How calm his exit!
Night dews fall not more gently to the ground,
Nor weary, worn-out minds expire so soft:
Behold him in the even tide of life!
A life well spent—whose early care it was
His ripper years should not upbraid his green;
By unperceived degrees he wears away,
Yet, like the sun, seems larger at his setting."

Mr. SHARPE. Mr. President: We are conscious once again of the presence of death in this chamber. Since we crossed its portals on the sixteenth of July last, his messenger has summoned hence the distinguished and venerable President of this Convention. A prince and a great man has fallen in our midst. It seems hard, indeed, to realize that William M. Meredith lives no longer upon earth; that he hath gone down to the grave and shall come up no more; that he shall return no more to his house, neither shall his place know him any more. But he hath gone to his rest, full of years and crowned with honor. After having scaled all the difficult ascents of professional success, after having attained the summit of professional distinction, after having shed the effulgence of his radiant intellect upon the jurisprudence of his country and his age, after having filled the ear of the nation with his great fame, he now sleeps well, where the weary be at rest.

I purpose not to enlarge upon the character, virtues, and career of this most remarkable man. Tongues far more eloquent than mine have done all this. Voices that have a much better right than mine to be heard on this melancholy occasion have spoken in fitting terms of the illustrious dead. Hearts that were knit to his by the closest ties of friendship, and cemented with his by a life-long intimacy and companionship, have come up into the mouth, and given utterance to their uncontrollable emotions. I have no ambition at all to thrust myself unduly upon the sacred solemnities of this sad hour. I only desire to add my humble tribute to the volume of eulogy that has gone forth from the hearts of this august body. I only wish to say that the chambers of my heart are also draped in mourning, and that in them dwells too the same consciousness that pervades this entire assembly, of the irreparable loss which we have sustained in the death of Mr. Meredith. The temptation to do so much was irresistible, for "I did love the man and do honor his memory, this side idolatry, as much as any." It is certainly safe to assert that there is not one of us whose heart-strings do not tone themselves in harmony with the voice of praise, and whose judgment does not commend the encomiums that have been heard here to-day on behalf of Mr. Meredith.

It matters not in what light we gaze at him, he dazzles us. It matters not in what pursuit we follow him, he was in all alike unapproachable. As a lawyer, learned, profound, unequalled. As an advocate, transcendently persuasive and eloquent. As a statesman, broad-minded, catholic and deeply versed in the science and true principles of government. As a patriot, imbued with a zeal and love of country far surpassing the passion of a devotee. As a citizen, progressive, enterprising, public spirited, and a lover of order. As a gentleman, without stain and without reproach. As a man, big hearted, benevolent, charitable, of unimpeachable integrity, and with the most exquisite sense of honor. As a pater familias, a model of all the domestic virtues. There was met in him, such a combination of rich qualities, great faculties and rare traits, as is seldom found in one man. But with all, he had an unassuming modesty and gentleness of deportment that added additional lustre to the glories that clustered about and adorned his character.

He possessed also in an eminent degree that crowning ornament of all mental stature, good common sense. Without this treasure, the most shining parts and most brilliant faculties can only achieve but temporary success. The meteor that flashes across the midnight firmament, and then goes out in darkness forever, is a fitting emblem of genius, without the ballast of a sound judgment. But the intellect of Mr. Meredith burst not in meteoric showers. It shone upon everything it touched, with the steadiness and fixedness of the rays that come down from the sun. For he was not simply brilliant; he was also cool-headed. He had not the flash of genius merely, but with it, the clear-sightedness, calm deliberation, and sound understanding of the philosopher.

Neither was he one "to split the ears of the groundlings." He had no ambition at all for this. He had a native dignity of character, and an intense self-respect which lifted him high above all the arts and tricks of the demagogue. He was a statesman, but not a politician, in the present popular and degraded sense of that term. He was a party man but not a partisan. He had faith in the utility of parties in a republic, and he believed his party was right. He rejoiced in its triumph—not for the sake of the spoils of victory—but for the sake of its principles. Loving his country as he did he could not help loving his party, for to him the welfare of the nation was bound up in the success of his party. He had no confidence, however, in the jesuitical dogma that the end justifies the means, and therefore he loathed with intense loathing the bribery, corruption and intimidation which are the crying evils and the burning shame of the politics of the present times. No earthly consideration could have induced him to countenance the employment of any sinister means or improper agencies, although they might have been demonstrated ever so clearly, to be absolutely necessary to party triumphs. He had an abiding confidence in the common sense and inborn integrity of the people, and he infinitely preferred honorable defeat to dishonorable victory. His whole aim was the happiness of his race and the prosperity of his country. His loyalty to his party was meant for this and this only. Who can help but admire him for it?

Mr. President, I feel that it would be presumptuous for me to undertake to weigh in my small balances the value of the life work of Mr. Meredith. I am wholly conscious that I have no capacity to take in the full measure of that great man. But I trust that indulgence will be granted to a brief allusion to one or two phases of his career that have enlisted my closest attention, and excited my highest admiration. Coming to the bar as I did at the immature age of twenty, I had of course no experience in the fierce conflicts of the forum, and no knowledge of the professional athletes that struggled for the prizes in that arena.

But he whose death we mourn to-day was then in the zenith of his great fame, and its effulgence reached even me in my quiet obscurity. The heart of the young professional aspirant must necessarily have some idol. Its altar must burn incense to some Deity. I could claim no exemption from this common frailty—if frailty it indeed be. Hence, Mr. Meredith became the object of my hero-worship, for he had won victories more highly to be prized than the conquest of kingdoms. His brows were wreathed with greener and more honorable laurels than those of the war-worn and blood-stained chieftain. It became my delight to glean from every source, and to garner up in the cells of memory every fact and circumstance that entered into his early professional life. With what interest I pondered and mused and wondered over the wild bursts of passion, that must have swept through the chambers of his heart, and the rough conflicts that must have torn the realms of his mind, while he patiently waited for public recognition and appreciation during his long novitiate.

Such a contemplation was consoling and somewhat flattering, for it proved that genius must sometimes at least temporarily wear the fetters of mediocrity.

But when my mental vision, passing beyond this contracted and unnatural orbit of such a brilliant luminary, followed his subsequent career, and grasped its magnitude and power; when I read and studied the great cases which his intellect had illumined; when I came to know and comprehend, imperfectly it is true, the mental sweep that could by a touch make the most abstruse principles luminous to the commonest understanding, when indeed I suffered the pangs of hopeless despair, for I realized that his goal was as far beyond my reach as the sun in the firmament. It was by such mental processes that I came to fix the professional standard of Mr. Meredith, for I had very few of the opportunities which some of the gentlemen of this Convention almost daily enjoyed of hearing and seeing him in this, to me, by far the most interesting walk of his life. To me he was the epitome of all that was admirable and great and worthy of imitation in a lawyer. He would as soon have thought of violating the decalogue as of violating his professional word. He was one of that old-fashioned type of lawyers that stoutly doubted the professional ethics that would teach that a client's cause is to be gained at all hazards, and by any means. Whilst he was loyal to his client, he was equally loyal to truth and justice. If he did not always gain his case, he always saved his self-respect and honor.

For the passion that weds me to my profession, I do therefore the more honor him, because he, most of all his contemporaries, did exemplify its dignity and pre-eminence above all other temporal pursuits. And I am glad to hear upon this floor that my appreciation of him as a lawyer has been fully sustained by those who are so much more able than myself to form a correct and discriminating estimate of him in this regard.

Time will permit but a passing allusion to his duties and position as the President of this Convention. His unanimous election to that dignified office was not only hailed with delight here, but also throughout the Commonwealth, as the harbinger of that reformation in political and governmental affairs which the people so devoutly longed for, yet scarcely dared to hope for. It was a fitting seal to that popular judgment which had long since singled him out and commended him as the first citizen and great glory of his native city and State. His government here was characterized by urbanity, impartiality, promptness and dignity. Such was the weight of his character, and the sense of his intense honesty of purpose with us, that his decisions became the unquestioned law of this body. His administration has left behind it no private grievance to canker in any bosom, and no feeling of intentional slight or personal injustice dwells in any heart in this assembly. It seems to me that it is the experience of every one of us, that he was one of the very few great men who grew greater the nearer you approached him.

It was, therefore, with melancholy forebodings and sad misgivings, that we observed day by day the clay tabernacle that anchored his great spirit to earth gradually yielding to the assaults of disease. But he refused to put off the harness of active life so long as his spent frame could endure its weight. But though dead he yet liveth, and will live whilst learning and virtue and genius and moral greatness shall command the homage and admiration of the sons of men.

Mr. CURTIN. Mr. President: I had an expectation that the formal ceremonies of this Convention would occur to-morrow, and I would thus have had an opportunity of putting in proper and formal language my reflections upon the occasion of the death of its President, fully aware that that would be more respectful to the body than to offer any remarks in the crude form in which I fear they will now be heard. However, I shall have accomplished all that seems to be necessary on my part as a member of this body and personal friend of our late President when the declaration is made that every word uttered by the venerable delegate who moved the resolutions in such fitting, eloquent and truthful words now before us meets my most sincere and hearty approbation, and Mr. Meredith's professional career has been so well portrayed and so forcibly and beautifully expressed by his other colleague from Philadelphia (Mr. Biddle) that further remarks on either phase of his life and character would seem to be scarcely necessary.

This is the third time since our sessions commenced that we have been summoned to mourn the death of a colleague. William Hopkins, a wise and useful man, was the first to fall, and then that earnest, sincere and eminently practical man, H. N. M'Allister, whose death left a void so painful in the community in which he lived that all feel it. And now we are called to pay a fitting tribute to the memory of our really eminent and distinguished President. Who knows how soon the portals of this Hall may open again and the grim monster enter for another victim? And we would not if we could know who of the living may be the next to fall. I do trust that the survivors may complete the great task committed to them by the people of the State and that we will not be again called to such a sorrow.

We bow before the wisdom of Providence in the death of our fellow-citizen and colleague, and there is no mark of official respect which this body can pay to the eminent ability, learning and virtue of Mr. Meredith that is not deserved. The tribute of admiration, of gratitude and love, which wells up warm from the human heart when a bereavement so heavy is suffered will follow him to his grave, and it may be truly said that if the blessings of the people of this State were flowers the grave of Mr. Meredith would be clothed in perpetual bloom.

The fame of a great lawyer dies with him, or at least dies with the generation that surrounds him. It is for those who enter the military service, or fill official place and distribute patronage, to live perpetually in history. The most fervid eloquence, the clearest logic, the deepest learning of the lawyer is only held in remembrance during the lives of those who encountered him in the legal forum or associated with him. In the judicial office, the most useful but the most unostentatious of all the departments of government, requiring the first minds, the deepest learning and the highest integrity, men are soon forgotten, and the fame of the judge, however eminent in his life and character, are only known and remembered by the lawyers who practiced before him or who read the books which contain the beauty of his language, his profound learning and illustrate his unsullied integrity. The lawyer or the judge has little more than this to expect, although his learning may be superlatively great and his life blameless. But it is equally true that while credulity and ignorance may be imposed upon in other professions, while the most learned physician may scarcely earn his bread and the empiric grow rich by imposition; while it may be said without irreverence or disrespect, that the superstitious and illiterate may accept teachings that are not founded upon the sacred and everliving truths of our religion and are not made pleasant and acceptable by the beauties of thorough literary training, no man can be eminent as a lawyer unless he has gifts and preparation that are apparent and real, for his duties are performed in the public gaze, in the presence of courts learned in the law; he deals with the interests, the passions and the sympathies of humanity, and he encounters in his professional life antagonists who draw from him all his learning and challenge to the front all his resources, and a pettifogger may have a measure of success in the devices which degrade the profession, but he never has, he never can, impose himself upon the confidence of the people.

Some men at the bar excel in keen, sharp wit; some by the graces of their eloquence and the magnetism of their personal presence; some have mastered our language, others are remarkable for deep, accurate learning; others have intense industry and ability for constant labor. Either one of these qualities may make the successful practitioner, but it takes them all to make the accomplished lawyer. Of all the men of this day, of the living and the eminent dead of the State, no man combined all these qualities in such perfect harmony as Mr. Meredith. And then with his great learning, his profound logic, his exalted qualities as a statesman, his keen wit, his force and brilliancy as an advocate and his appreciation of humor and a consciousness of power that could not be disturbed, and a memory which retained all that passed in it and waited like a generous hand-maid upon his great qualities, there was around and about him that glory of the human character—virtue and integrity. It takes them all to make an accomplished lawyer and a leader of the American bar, and our dead President possessed them all in a most eminent degree.

If Mr. Meredith had a fault it was that he was over-sensitive as to his own reputation and character. He could not bear to be suspected of doing wrong. The very soul of truth himself, he expected to be dealt with truthfully by all who surrounded him. Alive, constantly, tremblingly alive, to the sacredness of his own character and reputation, he gave his hours of leisure to the society of those in whom he recognized such qualities. It is anomalous and yet it is true that these qualities stood in the way of Mr. Meredith's occupying high official place. It is strange that a man thus gifted by nature, thus learned, with his known purity of character, should not have held the highest official positions in the nation. But there are arts and devices known in American politics to which Mr. Meredith could not from his nature and training descend, and he passed a long life of labor and professional success, admired and respected by his brethren at the bar and by the community in which he lived, rarely holding any official position worthy of his own merits.

It is true he for a time filled the office of Secretary of the Treasury; but, as has been well said, not long enough to develop there his great qualities as a statesman. It is true that he was called to preside over one branch of the government of this city for many years, and that he served as a member of the Legislature, and twice in conventions called to reform the Constitution. It is equally true that he held the office of Attorney General of Pennsylvania during six years, four of which were days and nights of anxiety, of labor, and surrounded by the convulsive throbs of the most wonderful war of modern times, when his great qualities were given to the service of the country, and only those who were near him measure justly the value of the service. The distinguished and venerable gentlemen from Philadelphia (Mr. Carey) has said that he accepted with reluctance the office of Attorney General. That is true, and the Executive from whom he received that office is not ashamed to say to-day in this distinguished presence, that he did earnestly solicit Mr. Meredith to take a place near him as his chief adviser, and that his acceptance of the office of Attorney General dissipated a cloud which hung over the administration and renewed confidence and gave new vigor to executive power. For his services there if for no other act of his life, the people of the State are under grateful obligations to him and the Executive he served under a lasting debt of gratitude, which he will ever feel and acknowledge.

I would not speak of Mr. Meredith in his family relations. Those who knew him best, in this city, know how dear he was to those around him. Those who knew him best know his affection, his indulgence, his kindness, and with what degree of love his family always surrounded him. There it is too sacred for us to intrude. God will apply balsam and balm to wounds he made. But I desire to say to you, gentlemen, delegates from this city of Philadelphia, that you do not know what pride our late President had in your city. If there ever was a man born in Pennsylvania who understood the true interests of the State, and fully appreciated the virtues and the good qualities of her loyal and true people, that man was William M. Meredith. If ever there was a man in Philadelphia, distinguished amongst the living or the dead, who had especial pride in your city, that man lies in his grave, and we are paying cold formal honors to his memory; for never, at any time, did he forget the city of his birth, the friends of his youth, or the pride he had in your prosperity and individual happiness. When away from the city its history and men, and its future, were amongst his favorite topics of conversation.

But, Mr. President, the great event has occurred, and for Mr. Meredith the end of earth! There is for us to venerate and remember the fame that he gathered in his great life, and learning and knowledge he garnered with so much care, and his racy, quick wit, and his fervid eloquence, and charming social qualities and wonderful powers of conversation, and to so live that when we are called from earth the living may think of us as in sincerity and sorrow we now speak of him. We will remember him, and all that is said of him, during our lives, and who will then remember the great and good man. Let us in this Convention do what we can by any ceremony, by speech or resolution, to perpetuate the memory of our most enlightened and distinguished colleague, who honored this city by his presence and dignified this Convention as its presiding officer.

MR. WRIGHT. Mr. President: It is proper that the district which I, in part, represent should have a voice in the pending proceedings. And I therefore claim the attention of the Convention a few moments, while I add the tribute of my commendation to the many excellencies of the distinguished man who lately occupied the chair you are now chosen to fill. It was not my privilege, sir, to be intimately acquainted with Mr. Meredith, as he and I resided in different parts of the State and practiced at different bars; still he was known to me for many years. Indeed, near thirty years ago, he paid me the honor, whilst I was a resident of Bucks, of being a guest at my board. It was the first time I had been introduced to him. He at then appeared at the bar of that county in the trial of a cause, and I call to mind at this hour the plain, courteous and dignified type of his demeanor at the bar. I remember the terse, pointed and earnest way in which he submitted his legal propositions to the court. But what an address was his to the jury! The state of facts in proof which other counsel had elaborated by the long hour, this man in the exercise of his astonishing power of condensation, cramped into the narrow space of a few minutes. But the brevity of the speech detracted nothing from its force. The whole ground was covered, and the jury took in the case at a glance—their minds were not overburthened by a mass of verbosity. He impressed me as the true model for imitation on the part of young beginners. I noticed, on this occasion that he took no notes of testimony, yet on the tablet of the great advocate's memory, every particle of the evidence, documentary and oral, was indelibly imprinted. He had no trouble in calling from this storehouse of the brain any portion of it needed.

Again I had the pleasure of seeing this renowned lawyer, a few years ago, at the Wilkesbarre bar, where my distinguished friend from the city, (Mr. Woodward,) as Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, was holding a special session. Those masterly traits, of which the delegate from Philadelphia (Mr. Biddle) has made such truthful mention, were at this time grandly displayed. And allow me, sir, a reference to an instance of his incomparable humor which convulsed both court and audience. A question arose as to what was, in law, the filing of a certain paper in the office of the Secretary of State. The opposing counsel contended that suspending it on a string, in the Secretary's room, was a legal filing. Mr. Meredith retorted by saying, "if that was so, the murderer, Brobst, (who had slaughtered a whole family just below the city,) had a few days past been most effectually filed, as he had been suspended on a very strong string, by the sheriff of Philadelphia."

But, sir, on this occasion, where many may desire to speak, it is commendable to be brief. I therefore close by adding the expression of my deep regrets, to those of my fellows, in a Providence we all have occasion to deplore. As a public body, we are deprived of his wise teachings, his extended learning, his great experience, and that nervous oratory that fixed attention and produced good results.

MR. J. N. PURVIANCE. Mr. President: I do not feel fit on this occasion to speak, yet I would not be doing justice to my own feelings—the present promptings of my heart—if I were to remain silent.

Few men have lived in Pennsylvania that filled a larger space for brilliancy of intellectual power than our deceased brother member, Mr. Meredith. We scarcely feel competent to speak properly of the great and good characteristics of the distinguished Meredith.

Eulogiums upon the life and character of the dead are often extravagant in expression, but it may be truthfully said that too much in honor of Wm. M. Meredith cannot be said, for he filled the full measure of greatness and goodness.

My first personal acquaintance with Mr. Meredith was when I met him some twenty-five years ago as a member of the convention of the Protestant Episcopal church of the diocese of this State. He was an active participant in the debates and one of its most honored and able members. No question seemed new to him, and in meeting in debate Binney and Sergeant and the late Chief Justice Lewis and other like distinguished laymen, Meredith on all occasions proved himself the equal, in clear and logical argument, of any of them. His greatness consisted not alone in his unsurpassed legal and literary attainments, his broad and comprehensive views as a statesman, his unselfish and devoted patriotism, but deeper and better than all, in his zeal, rational and pure, in the cause of the christian religion.

It is not my purpose to repeat the many marked and honorable events of his life. They have been well and ably referred to by the distinguished gentleman from Philadelphia (Mr. Carey) and others.

The most beautiful eulogium that we meet with anywhere is that pronounced by the Hon. Horace Binney on the life and character of Chief Justice Tilghman, and we have but to read it and see in it every grand sentiment therein uttered by Mr. Binney an appropriate application to our distinguished, honored and loved Meredith.

MR. CUYLER. Mr. President: Deeply as I feel the solemnity of this occasion, if I consulted my own feelings I should be silent, for I can add nothing to the admirable analysis of Mr. Meredith's character which has just been given by the gentleman from Franklin, (Mr. Sharpe), nor anything to the impressive beauty of the tribute which has been paid to his memory by the distinguished delegate from Centre, (Mr. Curtin,) whose long and close personal as well as official relations with him enable him to speak with so much of appreciative force and judgment of Mr. Meredith's character and of his eminent public services. But thirty years of professional life, which in its earlier struggles was cheered by the kind commendations of Mr. Meredith, and in which afterwards sometimes I felt his steel as an opponent and at others was grandly aided by his association as a colleague, forbid that I should be entirely silent on this occasion.

But sir, there are some events which are of their own nature so eloquent that no utterances of human lips can add to the impressive power with which they touch our hearts and move our sympathies; and death is one of these. Nothing can be more eloquent than that silence which the very presence of the King of Terrors himself inspires! Three times since this Convention first assembled has death entered through its open door into our very presence, and becoming to one of our number, has led him forth from our midst, never again to return to us from the silence and the solitude of the grave, whither he led him. We listen to the sound of their retreating steps till they fall no more upon our ear; we linger about the spot and long for their return and hope that they shall come again; but they return to us in this world no more forever! But, though they have gone from us, they do still abide with us; not indeed in the flesh. We miss the genial smile, the kindly pressure of the hand, the eye that sparkled at our approach, and the lip that bade us welcome. These are gone forever; but in a higher and a truer sense of the word, they do still live and abide with us always. They live with us in the pleasant memories of well spent lives. They live with us in the good they have achieved. They live with us in the impress they have left upon the world in which they lived and moved, and acted an important part. And now, sir, death has come again and has called from us the honored gentleman who graced the chair to which you have this morning been elected. He was full of years, and full of honors, although his unwearied shoulders still bore the harness of an active life. Such a death, though sad, is not melancholy, for Mr. Meredith had achieved all that life could give. Fame was his, and honor, and troops of friends, and crowned with the grand fruitage of a well spent life, he was gathered at last to his fathers, while the tears of a sorrowing Commonwealth bedewed his grave.

And now, sir, what can I say with regard to the character of this eminent and gifted man, after that which has been already so well said this morning? I need not speak of his public life. It has been so recent and is so fresh in all our memories that it needs not to be recounted in this presence, and yet we cannot think of it without the sad reflection that with all those grand capacities for usefulness in public station which adorned the character of Mr. Meredith, the period of his public service was comparatively so small. Is it, sir, a fault, is it a defect in our institutions, is it a lack of appreciation in the American people, is it from any cause a lack of power in the American people to do that which they should do, which has robbed this Commonwealth and this nation of the inestimable services which the noble capacities of this man would have rendered to this State and to the country at large? Is there not somewhere a defect that while all intelligent minds confess and did confess while he lived that rarer gifts for public service had never been before garnered up in any man than in him, still that man failed to attain the highest honors of public position? It was no loss to him; his character would have been no grander with that sort of appreciation, but it was a loss to the people; it was a loss to the Commonwealth; it was a loss to the nation at large, that this man of grand abilities, found under the operation of our institutions so little opportunity to apply those abilities through a long life in public station for the public welfare and the public benefit. The true arena for Mr. Meredith was the Senate of the United States, where he would have been the peer of any of those brilliant statesmen who have illustrated and adorned that body in its most palmy days, or the bench of the Supreme Court, where his name would have been illustrious, and his fame as a jurist made a permanent inheritance of our country.

Sitting here to-day in the discharge of a statesmanlike duty let us inquire and consider is there anything we can do that shall in the future, when God shall gift the world with men of rare intellect such as his and rare adaptations for public usefulness may secure them to the public service.

But, sir, the grandest achievements of Mr. Meredith's life were professional; and, as has been most truly and most sadly remarked this morning by the gentleman from Centre, (Mr. Curtin,) they pass away; for the fame of a great advocate, no matter how great his fame may be, is written in the water. All those glorious gifts of intellect, that power of repartee, that wonderful irony, that scathing use of sarcasm, that powerful heart that by its own emotions moved all other hearts with which it came in contact, these have left their impress, to be sure, in the results that have been achieved, but they have passed away and will soon be forgotten, for the material in which the advocate works is the air, and as one writes in vain upon the air so is it with the reputation of a great lawyer. It is a sad thought that it should be so, but it is a true thought, impressively true. His fame is as transient as the emotions which his eloquence inspired. Their memory extends not beyond the living generation, and with them it passes away and leaves no record to survive.

Mr. President, in this gentleman were garnered up the rarest and the most wonderful gifts of advocacy that I have ever known or probably any of us have known to be combined in any one individual, vast learning, wonderful logical power of mind, skillful analysis, powerful sarcasm, a fund of humor that moved your heart and your feelings so that you scarce knew whether to laugh or to cry; a power to mould other men's mind into sympathy with his own and to work out the persuasive results of the great advocate, surpassing those that I, at least, have ever known to exist in any one individual. But they are gone. When this generation shall have passed away, they will cease to be remembered. Even now their record abides chiefly in the homes that have been made happy, or with those whose rights have been vindicated, or whose interests have been protected; but beyond these scarce a memory abides. It was my fortune to be thrown into intercourse with Mr. Meredith, from the accident of professional relations, under circumstances that perhaps gave me peculiar opportunities of knowing how true it is that what I have said with regard to him this morning is a correct delineation of his character. I have seen Mr. Meredith in conflict with some of the most accomplished advocates in our profession, who, in my own time, have adorned the stage of action. All of us will recognize in Mr. Stanton a great, a learned, and an eminent lawyer, and yet I hesitate not to say that Mr. Meredith was immeasurably his superior in the accomplishments of a great advocate; for while Mr. Stanton had vast learning, powerful logic, and an earnest and forcible manner, he lacked the humor, the wit, the exquisitely fine power of analysis which so remarkably characterized Mr. Meredith in his great professional efforts. He could not appeal to the imagination as Mr. Meredith could. He could not take strong hold upon the hearts of those whom he addressed, and move them to action, as Mr. Meredith was so capable of doing. He had not that same magical skill which Mr. Meredith possessed, when he played upon the heart strings of a jury as some skilful player upon an instrument sweeps its chords and renders them vocal with the sympathies which for the time move his own heart.

It is perhaps out of taste to allude to a gentleman now living and a member of this body, and I should hesitate to do so, but the gentleman from Luzerne (Mr. Wright) has this morning alluded to it—I mean our friend and colleague, Judge Black. Perhaps the grandest professional struggle that it was ever my fortune to witness was the very one which was referred to by the gentleman from Luzerne, the contest between the Commonwealth and the Atlantic and Great Western railway, Mr. Meredith being the Attorney General of the State, with regard to the consolidation of the three divisions of that road in three different States into one road. None who were present on that occasion—and there are some here, beside myself, who were present—will ever forget the wonderful powers of logic, the marvellous sarcasm, the tremendous struggle of those two legal giants on that occasion.

I might go on and multiply illustrations, but there are others doubtless desirous of speaking. I did not desire to speak, and I have been betrayed into the remarks I have uttered, because I felt that coming from the same bar and representing the same profession, a duty rested upon me which forbade me to be entirely silent.

MR. WOODWARD. Mr. President: Just returned from a long journey, I had no intention whatever of occupying any time in the Convention to-day, but I am told by friends around me, for whose judgment I have great respect, that it is my duty to say something; and if it be, it is a duty which I can perform with a good conscience and with great respect to the memory of Mr. Meredith as much so as in respect to any man of my acquaintance who could have been snatched from us by death.

Mr. President, in the old time the friends of Job mourned with him in silence; but in our day we celebrate our grief with words. It is an American habit, and perhaps it is wise to express all we feel. The words that have been uttered this morning are things. They are "apples of gold set in pictures of silver." They have proved grateful to my feelings as the friend and admirer, life-long, of Mr. Meredith, and I trust they will prove a solace to his afflicted family.

Mr. Meredith's life and career have been so fully discussed by those who have preceded me, that it would ill become me to occupy the ground that has been so well cultivated. But having sustained two relations to Mr. Meredith in life of great importance, I may be pardoned for briefly alluding to them. The first was as a fellow-member of the Reform Convention of 1837, to which my friend from Chester (Mr. Darlington) has already alluded, and I entirely concur in the statement made by that gentleman as to the prominent, the commanding position of Mr. Meredith in that Convention as a public debater. Indeed, sir, in all the experience I have had in life, sometimes ambitious to listen to public orators, I have never witnessed a debate that could compare with that which occurred between Mr. Meredith and the late Mr. Stevens. I doubt if there be anything in the annals of our country which, if properly presented, would so impress the public mind as the scenes of that day. Why, sitting beside me was a coarse, uneducated, though honest and worthy man, who had been brought up to a business that was as well calculated to harden the human heart as any other, and as Mr. Meredith poured out the thunders of his sarcasm and invective upon the head of Mr. Stevens, that man was moved almost to tears. "My God," said he, "Mr. Woodward, this is too hard on him." And yet he was no admirer of Mr. Stevens. I cannot detain you by any further allusion to that scene. I cannot reproduce it. I wish I could. Mr. Stevens, as you know, was a man of great ability; he was a man of rare eloquence and a man of infinite sarcasm; but that day he found "a foeman worthy of his steel." That day his batteries were silenced utterly.

I want to allude to one other passage in Mr. Meredith's life, in which I bore relation to him. In 1852 the good people of this Commonwealth placed me upon the Supreme Bench. That brought me into direct and constant intercourse professionally with Mr. Meredith, for he was largely engaged in the business of that court. I had known him slightly before the Reform Convention; I had known his reputation in the Legislature well; I knew him very well in the Reform Convention; and now I was not only to hear him but to feel him as a lawyer at the bar.

Mr. President, let me tell you that courts of justice composed of mere men of like passions and sensibilities with ourselves, are impressed by those sterling qualities of character which some counsel bring to the advocacy of their client's cause, and it is no uncommon thing to hear lawyers complain of judges that they have favorites at the bar; and if you analyze this complaint you will find that the favorites are men of learning, men of honor, men whom the judge has learned from experience that he can trust, and therefore they are favorites. If I were speaking in the presence of men who had had experience on the bench, they would recognize the truth of this remark. Judges have no favorites in any bad sense of that word, but it is a delight to a judge or a bench of judges to see before them a man who they know would not mislead them for any fee that might be paid him; to see before them a man whose object is not so much victory as truth; a man who has informed himself before he attempts to teach others; a man of integrity. And if to these sterling qualities he adds what our deceased friend possessed in an eminent degree, wit and humor and address, such a man is most acceptable to the court, and he is in great danger of falling under the invidious remarks of others as being a favorite of the court. Professional ethics, sir, are not studied as much as they ought to be. If a lawyer has a case before a judge and knows that the authority upon which he is asking the judge to rule that cause has been itself over-ruled, I hold he is bound by the highest consideration of truth and of the oath he has sworn to present the law to the judge as he knows it exists. He has no right to impose upon the court with a case which he himself knows, though the judge may not know, has been over-ruled. This man, sir, of whom we are speaking would have suffered martyrdom before he would have imposed upon a judge a case as evidential of the law when it was within his knowledge that that case had been over-ruled. He would distinguish that which was distinguishable, but be the consequences to his argument what they might, he would exhibit the mind of the law to the judge just as he found it; and therefore the judge would trust the advocate. That is the way that Mr. Meredith grew in the confidence of the Supreme Court and of all the courts before which he practiced. That is the way that any lawyer may acquire the confidence of a court; it is the only way. Trick, falsehood, suppression of the truth belong to another class of practitioners. Mr. Meredith was incapable of either.

Mr. President, had Mr. Meredith's lot been cast in Rome in the best days of the republic or of the empire, amongst those orators who thundered in the Senate, he would have won the highest civic honors and been accounted "the noblest Roman of them all." Had Mr. Meredith's lot been cast in England, where from the lowest point in the profession to the wool-sack itself the profession has gradations, genius like his would have passed through all these stages to the highest with rapidity. I undertake to say that there has been no man in our day who has occupied the wool-sack or any other exalted position in the judiciary of Great Britain as worthy of the place, and who has illustrated it with so great a variety of elegant learning as Mr. Meredith would have done had he been bred at the English bar.

But, sir, he was born a Philadelphian. He lived here. He was an honor to this city and to this State. Some gentleman remarked this morning—I believe it was Mr. Biddle—that while Mr. Meredith belonged to the old Federal party he nevertheless was a sort of States' rights federalist. That is true. I do not believe that there ever lived in Pennsylvania a citizen who loved Pennsylvania better than he; who was truer to her true interests and her true honor. No politics; no inherited maxims, nothing that he had been taught in the old federal school would ever have induced Mr. Meredith to surrender one jot or tittle of the honor or the interests of his native State. Like other thoughtful men, he understood how the relations of the State to the federal government could be as harmonious as the planets of our solar system, how each could revolve around its own centre whilst it occupied its orbit. He would keep the State in its own orbit; he would keep the federal government in its centre. As to the modern idea that I have seen in print over the signatures of responsible public men, that the federal government made the States, that the States were indebted to the federal government for their existence, Mr. Meredith was incapable of being misled or imposed upon by such a solecism, such an absurd inversion of our political history. No, sir, he was a Pennsylvanian. His heart was too large for this city, great as this city is; it embraced the whole Commonwealth; and if you want to see how he vindicated his own relations to the internal improvement system of Pennsylvania, go to the volume of Debates which contains that controversy between him and Mr. Stevens. No man in the Legislature occupied a more prominent or influential position in behalf of the system of internal improvements of Pennsylvania that pervaded every part of the State than did Mr. Meredith, and the accusation which Mr. Stevens brought against him, that the city of Philadelphia was unfriendly to the interior portions of the State, was met and answered from the journals and from the current history of the country in the most triumphant manner, so much so that it has never made its appearance in public since.

Mr. President, allusion has been made to a scene which I remember with great interest. Gentlemen have alluded to a debate at Wilkesbarre before the Supreme Court in the year 1865 or 1866. It was summer. We were in the habit of meeting in July to finish up the work of the year. The other judges of the court insisted upon accepting an invitation to hold that term of the court at Wilkesbarre. I was opposed to it myself for reasons that were personal, but I was over-ruled. The court met at Wilkesbarre. A number of important cases, among which was the one alluded to by Mr. Cuyler, were to be argued there, and, sir, it was a rare collection of rare men. Mr. Meredith, Judge Black, Mr. Cuyler, Mr. Porter, Mr. Wharton, Judge Church, Mr. Biddle, Mr. Walker, and others like them were in attendance. The case was an important one. These counsel were divided upon the one side or the other. The Supreme Court had never sat in that interior town before and has not since. It excited great interest. Not only all the young lawyers went to the court house, but the ladies went, the people generally went; the court house was filled with beauty and intelligence that day.

Well now, sir, what impression was produced by the struggle between Mr. Meredith and Judge Black, over that case, you may infer, when a lawyer of great respectability told me afterwards that he was going to take down his sign and shut up his shop. Said he: "I find I am wrong; if this is the way to practice law, I am no lawyer." I said in reply: "that is nonsense, sir, you are a young man. Mr. Meredith told me that he waited twelve years for a case after he was admitted to the bar, and that he employed those twelve years in studying the old entries and pleadings, the State trials, which he read, not for the dramatic interest of the State trials, but for the pleadings." He studied law, in other words, and here were the fruits; and, I added, "this man has made himself what he is by labor; there is no royal road to success in our profession more than any other; it is labor. Improbis labor omnia vincit." Instead of tearing down your sign, go to work afresh, read the old entries, as Mr. Meredith did, read the State trials, read the history of the common law; get imbued with it, and by and by you will be able to wield such a lance as you witnessed in the hands of this giant." It was a grand spectacle, that! I would not have alluded to it if other gentlemen had not done so, but they have stirred up a memory which you will excuse me for enlarging upon in the way I have done. I would like to mention other instances of Mr. Meredith's professional relations. I cannot see that there would be impropriety in my alluding to one of them.

I think the first time I was called on to hold the court of nisi prius in this city after I came upon the bench, a case was on my list which was a replevin, but upon opening the record I found it to be a case in admiralty which involved the title to the ship "Royal Saxon," an Irish vessel lying at Walnut street wharf, which had been libelled in the federal courts for seamen's wages, had been attached by a foreign attachment by a creditor of the owner; and here was a conflict between the Federal and State jurisdiction as to the ship, involving as it necessarily did on one side much of the admiralty law. Well, sir, I was alarmed, for while I had read somewhat about admiralty law in my younger days, I never had tried a case in admiralty in my life, nor seen one tried. But there was no escape. The case must be tried. Mr. Meredith was counsel on one side and Judge Cadwalader and some other gentleman on the other. The cause was tried. Mr. Meredith came up to the bench after the jury retired, with the remark that he was not in the habit of complimenting judges, but said he, "you have got all the admiralty law into your charge." I said: "Mr. Meredith, we have no admiralty law up in Luzerne county. I never saw any before; and I was alarmed at the prospect of administering it in this case." He was kind enough to say that the case had been well tried. The jury rendered a verdict in his favor. It went to our Supreme Court, and they affirmed it. It went from there to the Supreme Court of the United States. It was argued before a bench lacking one judge. The eight judges differed equally, four and four. It was ordered to a reargument. It was argued again before a full bench, and was affirmed by a single casting vote. If gentlemen choose to read the case of the "Royal Saxon" in the reports, they will find that I state it correctly. Of course it was a close case.

Now, sir, what I want to say is this: That in the kindest way Mr. Meredith guided me in that first admiralty case that I ever tried, and he guided me right, as it turned out in the end, by a single casting vote of the Supreme Court of the United States. Chief Justice Taney dissented and delivered a dissenting opinion, but a majority affirmed our judgment.

Why, sir, a professional life is full of such reminiscences. Somebody has said that a great man has departed. A great man, indeed, sir! We did not appreciate him. It is the habit of the American mind not to appreciate their great men. The American people seem not to discover the good qualities of a man until he is dead. The old Romans treated their public men differently. If a general achieved a victory for the Roman arms, a triumphal arch was erected, he was welcomed home with wreaths and banners and music, and orations were pronounced upon him, and he was permitted to know what his fellow countrymen thought of him. And so were men of genius, whether orators or poets, honored with public ovals. But, in our day, the case is very different. The living man is continually belittled. He is regarded as in the way of somebody; he is slighted; he is neglected; and yet, when we look at his works, when we listen to his thoughts, after death has set its great seal upon him, we all discover that our fellow-citizen was indeed a great and good man. We withheld the meed of praise during his life, but we hasten to bestrew his grave with flowers, now that he is gone.

Mr. President, in that inimitable form of prayer that is used at the grave prescribed by the Church of England we are directed to "render hearty thanks for the good examples of all those who having finished their course in faith do now rest from their labors." Hearty thanks, sir! "Hearty thanks" are due only for great blessings; and is it not a great blessing that we have such an example, the example of such a life as Mr. Meredith's; his learning, his acquisitions of knowledge, his use of that knowledge in illustrating his profession, his high-toned honor that never knew a stain, though he would have felt a stain worse than a wound. Yes, sir, let us be thankful for the good example of this man, especially now that his work is finished. There is no more danger to him. There is no mis-step that he can take. His labor is done; his work is finished; his record is made up forever. And, sir, allow me to add in conclusion that he died as he had lived, in the faith of Christ, because without a touch of fanaticism about him, with no ostentation in his religion, Mr. Meredith was an humble and faithful believer in Christ and a member of Christ church in this city and for many years an honored representative in the Diocesan Conventions, as we all know.

Sir, I rejoice to honor such a man. I would our land were full of such men. I know he was a man of honor and integrity. I know he was a man of learning and ability. I rejoiced to see him occupy the chair which you, sir, so honor. I mourn his removal from us, but bow in humble submission to the Divine will.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President: Were I to follow the dictates of my mere inclination, I should be silent, and yet I have so profound a regard for the memory of that great man whose place death has made vacant in our midst, that I feel impelled to lay my tribute of respect upon this monument which we are rearing to his memory.

It often happens that on occasions like this eulogy runs riot and many things are said which calm reflection might not justify, but I believe it would be difficult to say anything of Mr. Meredith, either in eulogy of his personal character or of his high attainments which the facts would not amply justify.

My first acquaintance with Mr. Meredith was as junior counsel in an important cause some eighteen years ago. I am proud to believe that from that time till his death I enjoyed his personal friendship. Nothing in the intercourse which occasionally I was permitted to enjoy with him so impressed my mind as the genial kindness, the courtesy, the forbearance, and the consideration which he always manifested for the opinions of those who in his presence could not fail to be conscious of their great inferiority. He was doubtless fully aware of his own great powers, but they never led him to any vain display of learning or any offensive assertion of superiority.

I do not rise, sir, for the purpose of adding anything of fact to what has been already so well and so fully expressed, nor to attempt any analysis whatever of his character. All this has been far more aptly and ably done than I could do. I will only add there has been no commendation expressed in which I do not most heartily concur.

His great learning was manifest in a thousand ways. In a case only two years ago in which I had the satisfaction to be associated with him, involving the relations of the clergy to the church and involving also the correlative rights of the clergy as citizens, and requiring an exhaustive examination and consideration of the canon law of the church from its earliest date, Mr. Meredith not only brought to its consideration his accustomed discrimination and profound learning, but I know that he examined with untiring care the canons of the church in the original language, and verified every translation we had occasion to make by his own personal examination and reading in the original Latin.

It has impressed me strongly as conspicuously characteristic that he was always equal to the occasion. It is one of the clearest indications of men of great genius that placed in whatever situation they may be, they are always equal to the demands which are made upon their learning and their ability. This striking feature of Mr. Meredith's character was always apparent, whether as member of the Legislature, as member of both the Constitutional Conventions of the State, as Secretary of the Treasury, as Attorney General of the Commonwealth, or in the distinguished course which marked his professional career. He never was found wanting in any position he ever occupied, and I believe no higher indication of true genius can be found.

He was a man of rare observation of men, of manners and of things. He gathered information from all sources, and his judgment and reflection made them all his own.

He was one of those rare men who found

"Tongues in trees, books in the running brooks, Sermons in stones, and good in everything."

It was characteristic of his life. Nothing escaped his observation, and upon all occasions the information he possessed was ready to his hand.

Mr. President, I forbear to speak further. I have said this much simply because in my ardent admiration of the man, in my deep respect for his memory, and in the friendship which I am proud to feel that I enjoyed while he lived, I could not allow the occasion to pass without this brief tribute of respect to his memory.

THE PRESIDENT. There is a blank to be filled with a number before the vote is taken on the resolutions. Will some gentleman move to fill the blank?

MR. STANTON. I move to fill it with "nine" as the number of the committee.

The motion was agreed to.

THE PRESIDENT. There is another blank as to the hour of meeting to-morrow.

MR. LILLY. I move to fill that blank with ten o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

THE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the resolutions which have been read.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

MR. FELL. I move that the question of filling the vacancy be referred to the delegates at large elected on the same ticket with Mr. Meredith.

The motion was agreed to.

THE PRESIDENT. The Convention, under the resolutions adopted, stands adjourned until to-morrow morning at ten o'clock.

ERRATA.

On page 14, first column, twenty-ninth line from top, for "inconsiderable" read "unconscionable."

On page 198, second column, fourth line from bottom, for "officers" read "auditors."

On page 203, second column, second line from top, for "motion" read "section."

On page 247, second column, fourth line from bottom, for "engage" read "enlarge."

On page 250, first column, nineteenth line from bottom, for "rejected" read "agreed to."

On page 260, second column, twenty-first and twenty-second lines from top, for "regulating" read "relegating."

On page 382, first column, twenty-seventh line from top, for "of flat" read "flat of."

On same page and column, twenty-ninth line from top, for "expurged" read "expunged."

On same page, second column, third line from bottom, for "county" read "country."

On page 574, second column, eleventh line from top, for "vast" read "fast."

On page 602, second column, sixteenth line, the name of Mr. ARMSTRONG should precede the words, "I will not encroach," &c.

On page 606, first column, twenty-first line from bottom, for "question" read "custom," and the word "and" before the word "until" in the following line should be omitted.

On page 664, first column, twenty-eighth line from top, for "surmounting" read "surrounding."

On page 724, second column, eighth line from bottom, for "twenty-four" read "seventy-four."

INDEX.

A.

ABSENCE, leaves of, granted to—

Mr. Addicks.....	322
Mr. Andrews	290
Mr. Baer.....	238
Mr. Jos. Baily.....	429
Mr. Baker.....	166, 214
Mr. Bartholomew	408
Mr. Beebe.....	533
Mr. Bigler.....	166
Mr. Bowman.....	429
Mr. Boyd.....	408, 719
Mr. Brodhead.....	110, 719
Mr. Broomall.....	166, 214, 588
Mr. Brown	408
Mr. Buckalew.....	166
Mr. Campbell	429
Mr. Clark	214
Mr. Cochran	166
Mr. Corbett.....	166
Mr. Corson	212
Mr. Craig.....	3
Mr. Cuyler.....	214
Mr. Curry.....	408
Mr. Darlington.....	672
Mr. Davis.....	166, 588
Mr. Dodd.....	429
Mr. Dunning.....	212
Mr. Edwards.....	166
Mr. Ellis.....	214, 646
Mr. Ewing.....	408
Mr. Funck.....	110
Mr. Gilpin.....	214
Mr. Hall.....	290
Mr. Hanna.....	140, 719
Mr. Hazzard.....	429
Mr. Hemphill.....	561
Mr. Hunsicker.....	166
Mr. MacVeagh.....	408
Mr. McCulloch.....	166
Mr. McMurray.....	214
Mr. Mantor.....	166
Mr. Metzgar.....	110, 672
Mr. Minor.....	429
Mr. Mitchell	429
Mr. Mott	166
Mr. Parsons.....	166
Mr. T. H. B. Patterson	214
Mr. Porter	166
Mr. Pughe	166
Mr. J. N. Purviance	166, 646, 719
Mr. S. A. Purviance	355

Absence, leaves of—Continued.

Mr. Ross.....	588
Mr. H. G. Smith.....	322
Mr. H. W. Smith.....	110, 408
Mr. Wm. H. Smith	238
Mr. Stewart	166, 646
Mr. Turrell.....	238
Mr. J. M. Wetherill.....	212
Mr. Wherry.....	60, 322
Mr. D. N. White.....	60
Mr. Harry White	166
Mr. J. W. F. White.....	166
Mr. Wright.....	408, [588]
Accounts and Expenditures, reports of committee on.....	291, 533, 531, 645, 673, 756.
resolution directing committee on, to provide for payment of offi- cers	588
ACHENBACH, GEORGE A., delegate XVIIIth district:
incidental remarks by	734
ADDICKS, JOHN E., delegate IId dis- trict:
leave of absence granted to.....	290
report made by—
from committee on house, relative to money derived from sale of drapery	737
resolution submitted by—
that committee on house have en- tire charge of Hall during recess,	737
incidental remarks by.....	734, 747
Agriculture, the establishment of free schools for instruction in.....	87
AINEY, WILLIAM H., delegate at large:
resolution submitted by—
relative to summer recess of Con- vention.....	419
incidental remarks by, 13, 22, 127, 355, 417, 420, 723.
remarks by—
on banking rates of interest.....	12
on the taxation of manufacturing corporations.....	120
on the legislative power of ci- ties.....	220, 221
on the adjournment of Conven- tion.....	356, 357

AINEY, WILLIAM H.—Continued.

remarks by—

on discrimination in freight or passage by railroad companies, 620, 621.

on providing for a recess of the Convention..... 722

Aldermen and justices of the peace, election and qualifications of..... 314

remarks on, by—

Mr. Armstrong, 321, 328, 332, 333, 335
Mr. Beebe..... 316
Mr. Biddle..... 325
Mr. Bowman..... 315, 318
Mr. Broomall..... 317
Mr. Buckalew..... 330, 336
Mr. Corbett..... 315, 330
Mr. Cuyler..... 323, 325, 337
Mr. Dallas..... 319
Mr. De France..... 316
Mr. Evans..... 332, 334
Mr. Hanna..... 322, 325, 332
Mr. Hazzard..... 316
Mr. Knight..... 319, 328
Mr. Littleton..... 320, 330
Mr. MacVeagh..... 329, 330
Mr. Niles..... 317
Mr. D. W. Patterson..... 315
Mr. J. R. Read..... 320, 321, 335
Mr. Ross..... 316
Mr. Simpson..... 320
Mr. Temple..... 319, 320, 326, 327, 335
Mr. J. P. Wetherill..... 334
Mr. Worrell..... 334, 335

Allegheny county, courts of—See Philadelphia.

the election and jurisdiction of aldermen in..... 453

remarks on, by—

Mr. Armstrong..... 460
Mr. Cuyler..... 457
Mr. Ewing..... 459
Mr. Hay..... 453, 455, 460
Mr. MacConnell..... 457
Mr. S. A. Purviance..... 460
Mr. W. H. Smith..... 458
Mr. J. W. F. White..... 456

ALDRICKS, HAMILTON, delegate XIIth
district:

incidental remarks by, 39, 152, 154,
166, 212, 217, 238, 239, 243, 253, 307, 349, 404, 409, 549, 609, 718.

resolutions submitted by—

to provide for meeting of Convention in the Hall of the House of Representatives, Harrisburg..... 238 not to accept resignation of Mr.
Woodward..... 349

ALDRICKS, HAMILTON—Continued.

remarks by—

on the right of eminent domain.... 36

on keeping at interest the money
of the State 150

on the legislative power of cities, 219, 220, 222.

on special municipal laws..... 226

on accepting resignation of Mr.
Woodward..... 350

on acts of the Legislature passed
by bribery 399

on separate judicial districts for
each county 466

on establishing a Supreme Court,
nisi prius 519

on combination of railroad companies to unreasonably to increase their rates..... 608 on granting free passes by railroad companies..... 700

on damages to property by railroad companies..... 739

Altoona, invitation of city councils of,
to visit 672

thanks of the Convention extended, 673

Amendments to Constitution, future, 161

ANDREWS, GEORGE, W., delegate
XXVIIth district:

leave of absence granted to..... 322

Appeal to court of record, right of..... 338

ARMSTRONG, WILLIAM H., delegate at large:

incidental remarks by, 25, 26, 164,
172, 235, 238, 239, 240, 244, 245, 246,
250, 252, 253, 255, 278, 279, 280, 288,
289, 297, 307, 312, 314, 329, 331, 334,
336, 338, 339, 340, 343, 347, 348, 381,
389, 390, 391, 393, 404, 405, 406, 409,
410, 411, 438, 441, 442, 448, 452, 453,
455, 461, 462, 473, 477, 504, 511, 513,
515, 517, 522, 524, 527, 533, 534, 537,
540, 542, 543, 544, 545, 549, 669, 670,
685, 692, 709, 710.

remarks by—

on banking rates of interest..... 9

on the taxation of manufacturing corporations..... 113, 125

on the legislative power of cities, 217, 223.

on special municipal laws..... 223

on the term of Supreme Court judges..... 241, 242, 243

on the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court..... 248, 249

on the establishment of the Philadelphia courts..... 267, 269

on the removal of criminal cases to the Supreme Court..... 283, 303, 309

ARMSTRONG, WM. H.—Continued.

remarks by—
on the election and qualifications of aldermen.....	321, 328, 332, 333, 335
on acts of the Legislature passed by bribery.....	360, 376, 400
on abolishing the registers' court, 435, 436, 437, 440.
on style of process and form of prosecution.....	450
on the election of aldermen and justices of the peace.....	460
on separate judicial districts for each county.....	471, 494, 504 on the uniformity of the powers and process of the courts, 507, 508, 509, 510, 512.
on the Supreme Court providing rules for practice in all the courts.....	514
on vacancies to be filled for the unexpired term.....	541
on railroad and canal companies guaranteeing the stock of other corporations.....	565 on preventing corporations doing business of a common carrier from mining or manufacturing, 578, 600, 601.
on discrimination in freight or passage by railroad companies, 653, 655, 656, 664.
on declaring all railroads and canals public highways.....	691
on providing for a recess of the Convention.....	729
on the death of Mr. Meredith.....	775
Arts and sciences to be encouraged and promoted.....	41, 87
Assembly, oath prescribed members of.....	88, 171
remarks on, by—
Mr. Calvin.....	174
Mr. Cochran.....	173
Mr. Kaine.....	88, 89
Mr. T. H. B. Patterson.....	173
Mr. Harry White.....	173, 174
Assembly, oath prescribed members after sine die adjournment.....	176
remarks on, by—
Mr. Beebe.....	187
Mr. C. A. Black.....	188
Mr. J. S. Black.....	177, 180, 181
Mr. Cochran.....	179, 181
Mr. Corbett.....	183
Mr. Curry.....	185
Mr. Kaine.....	185
Mr. Knight.....	190
Mr. H. W. Palmer.....	184
Mr. D. W. Patterson.....	182

Assembly, &c.—Continued.

remarks on, by—
Mr. Purman.....	181
Mr. J. N. Purviance.....	191
Associate Judge, to abolish office of....	523
to provide for manner of filling office of.....	525
legislature to have power to abolish.....	527 Associations, individual liability of... 17
remarks on, by—
Mr. Biddle.....	20, 21
Mr. Bigler.....	18, 19
Mr. Carey.....	19
Mr. Dodd.....	22
Mr. Woodward.....	17, 22

B.

BAER, WILLIAM J., delegate at large :
leave of absence granted to	238
resolution submitted by—
relative to adjournment.....	237
incidental remarks by, 70, 74, 516, 527, 553, 562, 644, 650, 692.
remarks by—
on banking rates of interest.....	14
on the establishment of industrial schools.....	02
on the legal rate of interest.....	136
on newspaper publications of legal notices.....	447
on separate judicial districts for each county.....	474
on the establishment of separate orphans' courts.....	531
on preventing corporations doing the business of a common carrier from mining or manufacturing.....	599, 600
on discrimination in freight or passage by railroad companies, 621, 642, 649.

BAILEY, JOHN M., delegate XXIIId district :

incidental remarks by, 99, 161, 162, 176, 188, 209, 211, 405, 406, 423, 424, 429, 437, 442, 538.
--	--

remarks by—

on discrimination in freight or passage by railroad companies...	630
--	-----

BAILY, JOSEPH, delegate XVIIth district :

leave of absence granted to.....	429
incidental remarks by.....	172, 562

remarks by—

on railroad and canal companies guaranteeing the stock of other corporations.....	588
---	-----

- BAKER, WILLIAM D., delegate IVth district:
 leaves of absence granted to..... 166, 214
 remarks by—
 on the requirement of judges to be learned in the law..... 340
- Banking, privileges, six months advertising for application for..... 28
- Banks, Legislature to annul charter of non-issuing..... 27
- Banks not allowed greater interest than individuals..... 3
 remarks on by—
 Mr. Ainey..... 12
 Mr. Armstrong..... 9
 Mr. Baer..... 14
 Mr. Biddle..... 10
 Mr. Broomall..... 4, 11
 Mr. Curry..... 6
 Mr. Cochran..... 5, 10, 16
 Mr. Darlington..... 6
 Mr. Funck..... 3
 Mr. Lear..... 7
 Mr. MacVeagh..... 10, 14
 Mr. Niles..... 4
 Mr. Andrew Reed..... 13
- Banks, suspension of specie payment by, not to be permitted by law..... 28
- BANNAN, THOMAS R., delegate Xth district:
 incidental remarks by..... 405
- BARDSLEY, JOHN, delegate Ist district:
 incidental remarks by..... 235
 remarks by—
 on the taxation of manufacturing corporations..... 117
 on the legislative power of cities..... 222
 on special municipal laws..... 230
- BARTHOLOMEW, LIN, delegate at large:
 leave of absence granted to..... 408
 incidental remarks by, 393, 403, 412, 422
 remarks by—
 on the removal of criminal cases to the Supreme Court..... 302
- BEEBE, MANLY C., del. XXVIIIth district:
 leave of absence granted to..... 533
 incidental remarks by, 86, 196, 197, 240, 243, 276, 392, 403, 447, 448, 473, 502, 506, 530, 536.
 remarks by—
 on oath prescribed members of Assembly after sine die adjournment..... 187
 on the removal of criminal cases to the Supreme Court..... 300
 on the election and qualifications of aldermen..... 316
- BEEBE, MANLY C.—Continued.
 remarks by—
 on adjournment of the Convention..... 355
 on separate judicial districts for each county..... 491
- BIDDLE, GEORGE W., delegate Ist district:
 incidental remarks by, 27, 31, 61, 219, 224, 225, 227, 234, 235, 239, 241, 245, 265, 266, 285, 308, 329, 336, 353, 358, 391, 503, 562, 682, 697, 701, 715, 743.
 remarks by—
 on banking rates of interest..... 10
 on liability of individual associations..... 20, 21
 on the right of eminent domain... 34
 on the legal rate of interest..... 133
 on the legislative power of cities, 217
 on special municipal laws, 226, 231, 232
 on the establishment of the Philadelphia courts..... 260, 278
 on the removal of criminal cases to the Supreme Court..... 304
 on the election and qualifications of aldermen..... 325 on the requirements of judges to be learned in the law..... 342
 on acts of the Assembly passed by bribery..... 398
 on preventing corporations doing the business of a common carrier from mining or manufacturing, 592, 593.
 on providing for a recess of the Convention..... 724, 725 on damages to property by railroad and other corporations, 740, 741
 on creating the office of Secretary of Internal Affairs..... 749
 on the death of Mr. Meredith..... 759
- BIGLER, WILLIAM, delegate at large:
 leave of absence granted to..... 166
 personal explanation by..... 588
 incidental remarks by, 393, 417, 426, 606, 622, 623, 739, 741.
 remarks by—
 on liability of individual associations..... 18, 19
 on the taxation of manufacturing corporations..... 121
 on adjournment of the Convention..... 410
 on the right of corporations to construct a railroad or canal between any two points, 550, 552, 553
 on railroad and canal companies guaranteeing the stock of other corporations..... 556

BIGLER, WILLIAM—Continued.

- remarks by—
 - on preventing corporations doing the business of a common carrier from mining or manufacturing 591
 - on providing for a recess of the Convention..... 720
 - on damages to property by railroads and other corporations..... 738

BLACK, CHARLES A., del. XXVth district:

incidental remarks by, 59, 87, 154, 155, 193, 194, 216, 503.

remarks by—

- on oath prescribed members of Assembly after sine die adjournment..... 188

BLACK, JEREMIAH S., delegate at large:

incidental remarks by, 188, 192, 441, 593, 603, 604, 651, 745.

remarks by—

- on oath prescribed members of Assembly after sine die adjournment 177, 180, 181
- on the removal of criminal cases to the Supreme Court..... 294, 295
- on the style of process and form of prosecution..... 448
- on preventing corporations doing the business of a common carrier from mining or manufacturing..... 602

Bonds, the issue of, by school directors to be prohibited 41Books, no school officer or teacher to be interested in the sale of..... 87*Borough, not to loan its credit 140*BOWMAN, CHARLES O., del. XXXth district:

leave of absence granted to 429

incidental remarks by, 197, 204, 234, 429.

remarks by—

- on the taxation of manufacturing corporations..... 121
- on the legal rate of interest 134
- on the legislative power of cities, 219
- on the election and qualifications of aldermen 315, 318
- on acts of the Assembly passed by bribery 402

BOYD, JAMES, delegate Vth district:

leave of absence granted to..... 408, 719

appeals from decision of the Chair.. 712

incidental remarks by, 32, 33, 60, 79, 82, 94, 142, 326, 348, 350, 394, 419, 421, 429, 505, 523, 525, 548, 669, 672, 673, 697, 698, 708, 711, 712.

BOYD, JAMES—Continued.

remarks by—

- on the right of eminent domain... 33
- on the establishment of industrial schools 55
- on municipal indebtedness... 144, 145
- on the removal of criminal cases to the Supreme Court 293
- on acts of Assembly passed by bribery..... 394, 395
- on adjournment of Convention.... 414
- on separate judicial districts for each county..... 462, 488.

BRODHEAD, CHARLES, delegate VIIth district:

- leaves of absence granted to..... 110, 719
- appointed on committee on place of summer sitting of Convention, 85.
- communication presented by—
 - from trustees of Lehigh University, tendering use of hall during summer months..... 238.

report made by—

- from select committee on summer place of meeting..... 169.

resolutions submitted by—

- to appoint a committee to report a place of meeting for the Convention during summer..... 60.
- relative to suspending printing of Debates 423.
- relative to hour of sessions..... 647

incidental remarks by, 60, 238, 414, 416, 417, 418, 523, 524, 525, 531, 535, 553, 554, 555, 672, 685, 705, 707, 710, 716.

BROOMALL, JOHN M., delegate Vth district:

- leaves of absence granted to..... 166, 214
- resolution submitted by—
 - relative to debate on and publishing judiciary article 409.
 - directing Committee on Revision and Adjustment to prepare its articles for publication 735
 - to prolong the morning sessions without recess 736.

incidental remarks by, 78, 79, 80, 82, 92, 95, 98, 118, 141, 142, 144, 147, 148, 149, 151, 154, 160, 187, 244, 245, 246, 315, 318, 329, 338, 349, 410, 413, 417, 425, 426, 427, 452, 523, 525, 531, 609, 737.

remarks by—

- on banking rates of interest 411
- on the right of eminent domain... 35
- on appropriations to sectarian schools 83
- on exempting certain property from taxation 93

BROOMALL, JOHN M.—Continued.

remarks by—

- on the taxation of manufacturing corporations 104, 117
- on keeping at interest the moneys of the State 152, 153
- on the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. 250
- on the present established court of common pleas 253
- on the removal of criminal cases to the Supreme Court 297
- on the election and qualifications of aldermen 317
- on separate judicial districts for each county 465
- on dispensing with trial by jury in civil cases 526
- on vacancies to be filled for the unexpired term 451
- on railroads and canal companies guaranteeing the stock of other corporations 571
- on discrimination in freight or passage by railroad companies . . . 630
- on providing for a recess of the Convention 726, 727
- on the fictitious issue of stock by railroad, canal or transportation companies. 708

BROWN, RASSELAS, delegate XIIIth district:

- leave of absence granted to 408
- incidental remarks by 403

BUCKALEW, CHARLES R., del. XVth district:

- leave of absence granted to 166
- propositions offered by—
 - relative to recess of Convention and submission of Constitution.. 588
- incidental remarks by, 30, 32, 40, 78, 79, 80, 89, 101, 130, 142, 162, 164, 172, 175, 180, 192, 203, 204, 208, 210, 211, 333, 391, 392, 393, 394, 419, 425, 429, 509, 525, 544, 545, 548, 549, 600, 646, 669, 670, 673, 685, 694, 702, 719, 732, 739.

remarks by—

- on corporation elections 37
- on appropriations to sectarian schools 84
- on the assessment of special tax for local improvements, 98, 99, 100
- on the taxation of manufacturing corporations 106
- on municipal indebtedness, 143, 144
- on the removal of criminal cases to the Supreme Court 296, 308
- on the election and qualifications of aldermen 330, 336

BUCKALEW, CHAS. R.—Continued.

remarks by—

- on the residence and qualifications of judges of Supreme Court 347
- on separate judicial districts for each county 463, 505
- on the establishment of separate orphans' courts 529, 530
- on providing for dividing the State into judicial districts 545, 546, 547
- on preventing corporations doing the business of a common carrier from mining or manufacturing 522, 538, 597, 598
- on discrimination in freight or passage by railroad companies, 644, 686.
- on declaring all railroads and canals public highways 690, 691
- on the granting of free passes by railroads 703
- on providing for a recess of the Convention 723
- on borough or city regulating the grade and rate of speed of railroads within its limits 752

BULLITT, JOHN C., delegate at large: incidental remarks by, 215, 391, 597, 608, 708, 709.

remarks by—

- on the establishment of industrial schools 66
- on the establishment of the Philadelphia courts 264
- on acts of the Assembly passed by bribery 377
- on preventing corporations doing the business of a common carrier from mining or manufacturing, 594
- on officers or employees of railroad and canal companies engaging in the transportation of freight or passengers 606, 607

CALVIN, SAMUEL, delegate at large:

resolution submitted by—

- to add chairman of each committee to Committee on Revision and Adjustment 606, 607

incidental remarks by, 235, 378, 420, 705

remarks by—

- on oath of office 174
- on the taxation of manufacturing corporations 119
- on municipal indebtedness 233
- on acts of the Assembly, passed by bribery 336

CAMPBELL, JOHN H., del. at large:

- leave of absence granted to 429

CAMPBELL, JOHN H.—Continued.

resolution submitted by—
relative to adjournment.....	419
incidental remarks by, 37, 59, 82, 93,
142, 225, 256, 412, 424, 427, 542, 551,
552, 555, 570, 604, 608, 641, 642, 669,
685, 689, 704, 705, 751.
remarks by—
on the establishment of industrial
schools	57
on the establishment of the Philadelphia courts	258
on abolishing the register's court,
on discrimination in freight or
passage by railroad companies, on borough or city regulating the grade and rate of speed of railroads within its limits.....	750, 752
Canals— See Railroads.

CAREY, HENRY C., delegate at large,
Philadelphia:

resolution submitted by—relative to death of Mr. Meredith,
incidental remarks by.....	758
24, 449
remarks by—
on banking rates of interest.....	6
on liability of individual associations	19
on the taxation of manufacturing
corporations	112
on the legal rate of interest.....	135
on the death of Mr. Meredith	756

CARTER, HENRY, delegate IXth district:

incidental remarks by, 11, 74, 378,
410, 411, 415, 620, 722.
remarks by—
on the establishment of industrial
schools	47, 49
on accepting the resignation of
Mr. Woodward.....	350
on adjournment of the Convention	355, 409
on separate judicial districts for
each county	407
on preventing corporations doing
the business of a common carrier from mining or manufacturing	593, 596
on the granting of free passes by railroads	701
on providing for a recess of the
Convention	726, 727

CASSIDY, LEWIS C., delegate at large
from Philadelphia:

incidental remarks by, 235, 236, 273,
287, 308.
remarks by—
on the establishment of the Philadelphia courts	266

Certiorari, judges of Supreme Court and common pleas to have power to issue writs of.....	313

remarks on, by—
Mr. Kaine.....	318

Chancery, court of, common pleas to have power of.....	347

Charters of banks, not banks of issue
Legislature shall annul.....	27
of cities, article on.....	215 of incorporation, Legislature to have power to alter, revoke or annul...	28

Charters of railroads, by unreasonably increasing their rates, shall work a forfeiture of.....	608
remarks on, by—
Mr. Alricks	608

CHURCH, PHARSON, delegate XXIXth
district:

incidental remarks by.....	37, 187
----------------------------	---------

Cities and city charters, article on second reading, considered.....	215

section 1. The Legislature to pass general laws for the incorporation of cities, considered.....	215 amendment of Mr. S. A. Purviance, 216; adopted 216.

remarks on, by—
Mr. Darlington.....	216
Mr. Dodd.....	215
the section as amended was agreed
to.....	216

section 2. The vesting of legislative power of cities, considered.....	216 amendment of Mr. Biddle, 217;
withdrawn, 219.
amendment of Mr. Alricks, 219;
adopted, 223.

amendment of Mr. Ainey to amendment, 220; rejected, 222.

remarks on, by—
Mr. Ainey.....	220, 221
Mr. Alricks	219, 220, 222
Mr. Armstrong	217, 223
Mr. Bardsley.....	222
Mr. Biddle.....	217
Mr. Bowman.....	219
Mr. Dallas.....	218
Mr. Hanna.....	220, 221
Mr. Landis.....	221
Mr. Littleton.....	222
Mr. McClean.....	221
Mr. H. W. Palmer.....	216
Mr. J. R. Read.....	222

the section as amended was not
agreed to	223

section 3. The duties of mayor, considered	223
the section was not agreed to.....	224

Cities and city charters—Continued.

- section 4. The Legislature to pass no special law creating any municipality, considered 224 amendment of Mr. Newlin, 224; withdrawn, 224.
 amendment of Mr. Dallas, 225; rejected, 232. amendment of Mr. Littleton to amendment, 225; rejected, 227.
 remarks on, by—
 Mr. Alricks 226
 Mr. Armstrong 228
 Mr. Bardsley 230
 Mr. Biddle 226, 231, 232
 Mr. Dallas 225, 227, 228
 Mr. DeFrance 232
 Mr. Ewing 228, 229, 130
 Mr. Littleton 225, 226, 227, 228
 Mr. Minor 230
 Mr. Newlin 224, 229
 Mr. Simpson 226
 Mr. Temple 227
 Mr. Turrell 227
 the section was not agreed to 232 section 5. No city shall have the power to create a debt exceeding two and one-half per cent. on the assessed valuation of property, considered 232
 the section was not agreed to 232
 new section proposed by Mr. Newlin, to prohibit the incurring of any municipal debt, except provided for by appropriations of council, considered 232
 remarks on, by—
 Mr. Calvin 233
 Mr. Newlin 232, 233
 Mr. Temple 233
 the section was agreed to nem. con., 234 section 6. Every city to create a sinking fund, considered 234 amendment of Mr. Struthers, 234; adopted, 234.
 the section as amended was agreed to 234 section 7. No city shall become a stockholder in any corporation, considered 234
 the section was not agreed to 234
 new section proposed by Mr. Guthrie, that no territory shall be annexed to any city or borough without the consent of the electors, considered 234
 the section was not agreed to 234

Cities and city charters—Continued.

- section 8. Municipal officers who have not accounted and paid over all moneys shall be ineligible to office thereafter, considered 234 amendment of Mr. Bardsley, 235; adopted, 235.
 amendment of Mr. Heverin, 235; rejected, 235.
 the section was not agreed to 235 section 9. The Legislature shall not exempt any property from municipal taxation, considered 235
 the section was not agreed to 235 section 10. The power of councils to investigate official misconduct, considered 235 amendment of Mr. Temple, 236; rejected, 236.
 the section was not agreed to 236
 article referred to Committee on Revision and Adjustment 237 Cities, boroughs and townships, to have power to assess tax for local improvements 98
 remarks on, by—
 Mr. Buckalew 98, 99, 100
 Mr. Cuyler 99, 101
 Mr. Ewing 98, 102, 103
 Mr. Hanna 100
 Mr. Wherry 100
 Mr. Worrell 101
 Cities, in corporation of 215 legislative power of 216
 City, not to loan its credit 140
 CLARK, GILES M., delegate XXIVth district:
 leave of absence granted to 214
 incidental remarks by 162, 503, 734
 remarks by—
 on fixed salaries for county officers, 208
 on separate judicial districts for each county 478
 on discrimination in freight or passage by railroad companies.. 664 COCHRAN, THOMAS E., delegate XXth district:
 leave of absence granted to 166
 incidental remarks by 31, 38, 40, 82, 86, 87, 95, 115, 331, 332, 349, 352, 405, 418, 499, 506, 523, 527, 533, 536, 544, 549, 552, 553, 555, 557, 562, 572, 585, 592, 599, 605, 606, 620, 669, 670, 671, 684, 689, 697, 704, 705, 706, 710, 715, 716, 736, 750.
 remarks by—
 on banking rates of interest, &c., 5, 10, 16.
 on the distinction of sex in the compensation of teachers 85

COCHRAN, THOMAS E.—Continued.
remarks by—

on the taxation of manufacturing corporations.....	106
on the oath of office.....	173
on oath prescribed members of Assembly after sine die adjournment [179, 181.]
on the removal of criminal cases to the Supreme Court.....	311
on accepting the resignation of Mr. Woodward.....	353
on acts of the Assembly passed by bribery.....	396
on abolishing the register's court,	442
on separate judicial districts for each county.....	496
on the establishment of separate orphans' courts.....	523, 535, 537
on railroad and canal companies guaranteeing the stock of other corporations.....	562
on preventing corporations doing the business of a common carrier from mining or manufacturing.....	575, 585, 603
on discrimination in freight or passage by railroad companies	634, 650, 651, 664.
on declaring all railroads and canals public highways.....	688, 691
on the granting of free passes by railroads.....	696, 700
on the fictitious issue of stock by railroad, canal or transportation companies.....	707
on creating the office of Secretary of Internal Affairs.....	747 COLLINS, JOHN, delegate XXVth district, tenders his resignation on account of ill health.....
	646
Commissioners and auditors of the county, election of.....	209
Commission, priority of to be determined by lot on election of two or more judges.....	339
Common carrier, corporations doing the business of, not to engage in mining or manufacturing.....	573
remarks on, by—
Mr. Armstrong.....	578, 600, 601
Mr. Baer.....	599, 600
Mr. Biddle.....	592, 593
Mr. Bigler.....	591
Mr. J. S. Black.....	602
Mr. Buckalew.....	582, 583, 597, 598
Mr. Bullitt.....	594
Mr. Curtin.....	595, 596
Mr. Cochran.....	575, 585, 603
Mr. Cuyler.....	577

Common carrier, &c—Continued.
remarks on by—

Mr. Darlington.....	474
Mr. Fulton.....	572
Mr. Howard.....	580, 598
Mr. Lilly.....	580
Mr. H. W. Palmer.....	574
Mr. T. H. B. Patterson....	583, 584, 597
Mr. Andrew Reed.....	573
Mr. Sharpe.....	589
Mr. J. P. Wetherill.....	581
Mr. Harry White.....	576
Mr. J. W. F. White.....	591, 592
Common pleas courts, to remain as at present established.....	250
remarks on, by—
Mr. Broomall.....	253
Mr. Fulton.....	254
Mr. Kaine.....	251, 253
Mr. Mitchell.....	255
Mr. Woodward.....	252
the election and term of.....	338
to have the powers of a court of chancery.....	347
Commonwealth not to assume indebtedness of any city or county.....	160
Compensation of teachers, no distinction of sex in the.....	85
remarks on, by
Mr. Cochran.....	85
Compulsory education, to provide for	82
remarks on, by—
Mr. Darlington.....	82
Connections of railroads, right to connect.....	750
Constitution, submission of, propositions of Mr. Buckalew, and providing for a recess of the Convention, considered.....	719 amendment of Mr. S. A. Purviance, 720; rejected, 732.
amendment of Mr. MacConnell, 732; adopted, 732.
remarks on, by—
Mr. Aimey.....	722
Mr. Armstrong.....	729
Mr. Biddle.....	724, 725
Mr. Bigler.....	720
Mr. Broomall.....	726, 727
Mr. Buckalew.....	723
Mr. Carter.....	726, 727
Mr. Curtin.....	731
Mr. Ewing.....	723
Mr. Kaine.....	728
Mr. Lilly.....	722, 723
Mr. Mann.....	720
Mr. Mantor.....	728, 729
Mr. D. W. Patterson.....	733
Mr. S. A. Purviance.....	725

Constitution, &c.—Continued.

remarks on, by—
Mr. Simpson	721
Mr. W. H. Smith.	721
first resolution to adjourn until the sixteenth of September, adopted by yeas and nays	734
second resolution to print all articles passed second reading, adopted by yeas and nays	735
third resolution to submit the revised Constitution to a vote of the people on or before January 1, 1874, adopted	735
Convention, sittings of during the summer, resolution to appoint a committee to report a place for	60 invitation of citizens of Wilkesbarre to hold sessions of, in	61
committee appointed on place of summer sitting of	85 invitation of citizens of Gettysburg to hold sessions of, in	140 report of select committee on place of meeting of	169
report not adopted	170
resolution of Mr. Lamberton to adjourn to meet at Harrisburg	171 communication from trustees of Lehigh University, tendering use of Hall to	238 resolution of Mr. Alricks providing for meeting of, in Hall of House of Representatives at Harrisburg,	238 resolution fixing hours of daily sessions of, adopted	290 invitation of citizens of Williamsport to hold summer sessions in	354
invitation of city councils of Altoona to visit	672
Convention to amend the Constitution, to provide for call of, every twenty years	164
CORBETT, WILLIAM L., delegate at large:
leave of absence granted to	166
incidental remarks by, 79, 90, 168, 239, 312, 331, 338, 349, 353, 354, 399, 400, 412, 417, 419, 428, 436, 437, 494, 515, 521, 527, 528, 529, 601, 689, 690, 714, 715.
remarks by—
on the establishment of industrial schools	76
on oath prescribed members of Assembly after sine die adjournment	188
on the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court	312

CORBETT, WM. L.—Continued.

remarks by—
on the election and qualifications of aldermen	315, 330
on acts of Assembly passed by bribery	376
on separate judicial districts for each county	498
on the uniformity of the powers and the process of the courts	513
on establishing a Supreme Court, nisi prius	521
on damages to property by railroad and other corporations	743
Corporations, article on second reading	3
section 8. No banking or other corporation to receive or pay a greater interest than is allowed individuals; consideration, continued	3 amendment of Mr. Funck, 3; rejected, 7. amendment of Mr. Ainey, 12; modified, 13, 14; rejected by yeas and nays, 15.
amendment of Mr. Dallas to amendment, 13; rejected, 14.
remarks on, by—
Mr. Ainey	12
Mr. Armstrong	9
Mr. Baer	14
Mr. Biddle	10
Mr. Broomall	4, 11
Mr. Curry	6
Mr. Cochran	5, 10, 16
Mr. Darlington	6
Mr. Funck	3
Mr. Lear	7
Mr. MacVeagh	10, 14
Mr. Niles	4
Mr. Andrew Reed	13
the section was not agreed to, by yeas and nays	16
section 16. Foreign insurance companies to be subject to same taxation as companies incorporated by this State; considered	16
remarks on, by—
Mr. Ewing	17
the section was not agreed to	17
new section proposed by Mr. Woodward, Legislature to provide for incorporated companies of individual association, with or without limited liability; considered,	17 amendment of Mr. Bigler, 18; withdrawn, 22. amendment of Mr. Ainey, 22; rejected, 23.

Corporations, article on—Continued.

amendment of Mr. Stewart, 23;
adopted, 24.
amendment of Mr. Dallas, 24;
rejected, 24.
amendment of Mr. Cuyler, 24;
rejected, 25.
amendment of Mr. Armstrong, 25;
rejected, 26.
remarks on, by—
Mr. Biddle.....	20, 21
Mr. Bigler.....	18, 19
Mr. Carey.....	19
Mr. Dodd.....	22
Mr. Woodward.....	17, 22
the section as amended was agreed
to by yeas and nays.....	27
new section proposed by Mr. Funck, that the Legislature shall annul all charters of banks not banks of issue; considered.....	27
the section was not agreed to.....	27
new section proposed by Mr. Harry White, that the Legislature shall have power to alter, revoke or annul any charter of incorporation now existing; considered,	28
the section was agreed to.....	28
new section, proposed by Mr. Woodward, that no suspension of specie payments shall be permitted or sanctioned by law; considered.....	28
the section was rejected by yeas
and nays.....	28
new section proposed Mr. by T. H.
B. Patterson, to provide for six months advertising for application for banking privileges; considered.....	28
amendment of Mr. Harry White,
29; adopted, 29.
amendment of Mr. Buckalew, 30;
adopted, 30.
the section as amended was agreed
to.....	30
new section proposed by Mr. Woodward, construing the term "corporations;" considered.....	30
the section was agreed to.....	30
new section proposed by Mr. Mott, no mining company shall own, hold or possess more than one thousand acres of land; considered.....	30
the section was not agreed to.....	31 section 6. Relating to business of corporations and assessment of damages by; reconsidered, 31.

Corporations, article on—Continued.

amendment of Mr. Hall, that the amount of damages shall be determined by a jury, 32; adopted, 32. amendment of Mr. Buckalew, 32;
adopted, 32.
amendment of Mr. Darlington, 32;
adopted, 32.
the section as amended was agreed
to.....	32
section 3. Relative to the exercise of the power and the right of eminent domain; reconsidered, amendment of Mr. Boyd, 33; rejected, 36.
amendment of Mr. Darlington, 36;
adopted, 37.
remarks on, by—
Mr. Alricks.....	36
Mr. Biddle.....	34
Mr. Boyd.....	33
Mr. Broomall.....	35
Mr. Corson.....	34
Mr. Cuyler.....	34
Mr. Dallas.....	34
Mr. Howard.....	36
Mr. Hunsicker.....	35
the section as amended was agreed
to.....	37
section 4. Relative to corporation elections; motion to reconsider,
rejected.....	38
remarks on, by—
Mr. Buckalew.....	37
Mr. Cuyler.....	37
article referred to Committee on
Revision and Adjustment.....	38
Corporations, cities not to become stockholders in.....	234
Corporation, construing term of.....	30
damages by.....	31
right of, to construct a railroad or canal between any two points...	549
remarks on, by—
Mr. Bigler.....	550, 552, 553
Mr. Kane.....	554
CORSON, GEORGE L., delegate Vith
district:
leave of absence granted to.....	212
incidental remarks, 32, 40, 90, 92, 168,
174, 187, 197, 198, 208, 212, 243, 245,
278, 346, 424, 499, 537, 539, 545, 555, 613, 644.
remarks by—
on the right of eminent domain...	34
on the jurisdiction of the Supreme
Court.....	249
on the removal of criminal cases
to the Supreme Court.....

CORSON, GEORGE L.—Continued.

remarks by—
on acts of Assembly passed by
bribery.....	382
on the granting of free passes by
railroads.....	700
County, not to loan its credit	140
officers, oath prescribed to.....	88, 171
County, township and borough officers, article on second reading...	195 section 1. What county officers shall consist of; considered.....	195 amendment of Mr. Darlington, 195; adopted, 195.
amendment of Mr. Kaine, 195; rejected, 196.
amendment of Mr. Beebe, 196; rejected, 197. amendment of Mr. Simpson, 197; rejected, 197. amendment of Mr. Wright, 197; rejected, 197.
amendment of Mr. Darlington, 197; adopted, 197.
amendment of Mr. Kaine, 197; rejected by yeas and nays, 198.
amendment of Mr. Wherry, 198; adopted, 198.
amendment of Mr. Corson, 198; adopted, 198.
amendment of Mr. J. W. F. White to strike out "auditors," 198; withdrawn, 201.
amendment of Mr. Harry White, 201; adopted, 202.
amendment of Mr. Kaine, 202; rejected, 202.
amendment of Mr. T. H. B. Patterson, 202; rejected, 203.
amendment of Mr. Ewing, 203; rejected, 203.
remarks on, by—
Mr. Ewing	199
Mr. Hanna.....	200
Mr. Howard.....	201
Mr. Hunsicker	200, 201
Mr. MacConnell.....	199
Mr. S. A. Purviance.....	199
Mr. J. W. F. White.....	198
the section as amended was agreed to.....	203
section 2. County officers, when elected and term of office; considered.....	203 amendment of Mr. Darlington, 203; rejected, 203.
amendment of Mr. Harry White, 203; rejected, 204.
amendment of Mr. Buckalew, 204; modified 204; adopted, 204.

County, township, &c.—Continued.

amendment of Mr. A. Reed, 204; rejected, 204.
the section as amended, was agreed to.....	204
section 3. All county officers to be paid by salary, considered.....	204 amendment of Mr. Lamberton, 205; adopted, 205.
amendment of Mr. Struthers, 205; adopted, 205.
amendment of Mr. S. A. Purviance, 205; adopted, 206.
amendment of Mr. Darlington, 206; rejected, 208.
amendment of Mr. Buckalew, 208; rejected, 208.
remarks on, by—
Mr. Clark	208
Mr. A. Reed.....	207
Mr. H. G. Smith.....	208
Mr. J. W. F. White.....	206
the section as amended was agreed to by yeas and nays.....	209
section 4. The Legislature to provide for the strict accountability of all officers; considered.....	209
the section was agreed to.....	209
section 5. Any qualified elector to be eligible; considered.....	209
the section was not agreed to.....	209
section 6. Election of county commissioners and auditors; considered.....	209 amendment of Mr. J. N. Purviance, 210; rejected by yeas and nays, 210.
amendment of Mr. Buckalew, 210; adopted, 210.
amendment of Mr. Buckalew, 211; adopted, 211.
amendment of Mr. Buckalew, 211; adopted, 211.
amendment of Mr. Hanra, 211; withdrawn, 211.
amendment of Mr. J. M. Baily, 211; rejected, 211.
the section as amended, agreed to, 211
section 8. The term of office to begin on the first Monday of December; considered.....	212 amendment of Mr. S. A. Purviance to strike out December and insert January, 212; adopted, 212.
the section as amended was agreed to.....	212
article referred to Committee on Revision and Adjustment.....	212
Court of chancery, common pleas to have powers of

- Court; each to have exclusive jurisdiction..... 279
- Court; no other to be created by the Legislature, than authorized by the, Constitution..... 542
- remarks on, by—
- Mr. Ellis..... 542
- Courts of common pleas, to continue as at present established..... 250
- Court of record, right of appeal to..... 338
- filling vacancies in..... 452
- remarks on, by—
- Mr. Armstrong..... 460
- Mr. Cuyler..... 457
- Mr. Ewing..... 459
- Mr. Hay..... 453, 455, 460
- Mr. MacConnell..... 457
- Mr. Wm. H. Smith..... 458
- Mr. J. W. F. White..... 466
- Courts, rules for the system of practice in, Supreme Court to provide..... 514
- remarks on, by—
- Mr. Armstrong..... 514
- Mr. Kaine..... 516
- Mr. S. A. Purviance..... 515
- Courts, the uniformity of the powers and process of..... 507
- remarks on, by—
- Mr. Armstrong 507, 508, 509, 510, 512.
- Mr. Corbett..... 513
- Mr. Cuyler..... 510
- Mr. Dallas..... 510
- Mr. Darlington..... 511
- Mr. Ellis..... 507
- Mr. Kaine..... 508
- CRAIG, DAVID, delegate XXVIIIth district:
- leave of absence granted to..... 3
- Credit of the State, county, city, borough or township, not to be loaned..... 140
- Criminal cases, removal of, to Supreme Court..... 281
- remarks on, by—
- Mr. Armstrong..... 183, 303, 309
- Mr. Bartholomew..... 302
- Mr. Beebe..... 300
- Mr. Biddle..... 304
- Mr. J. S. Black..... 294, 295
- Mr. Boyd..... 293
- Mr. Broomall..... 297
- Mr. Buckalew..... 294, 308
- Mr. Cochran..... 311
- Mr. Corbett..... 312
- Mr. Corson..... 285
- Mr. Cuyler..... 295
- Mr. Ellis..... 305
- Mr. Hazzard..... 288
- Mr. Hunsicker..... 281, 299, 311
- Criminal cases, &c.—Continued.
- remarks on, by—
- Mr. Lear..... 309
- Mr. MacVeagh..... 285
- Mr. Mann..... 285
- Mr. H. W. Palmer..... 291
- Mr. Purman..... 283
- Mr. Ross..... 303, 304
- Mr. Sharpe..... 287, 288
- Mr. Temple..... 280
- Criminal courts of Philadelphia and Allegheny counties..... 280
- CRONMILLER, JOHN P., delegate XVIIth district:
- leave of absence granted to..... 355
- Cumulative voting, provided for election of Supreme Court judges, if more than one to be elected..... 339
- CURRY, JAMES W., delegate XXIst district:
- leave of absence granted to..... 408
- prayers offered by, 3, 60, 110, 166, 238, 290, 349, 408, 429, 480, 533, 588, 646, 672, 719, 755.
- communication presented by—
- from city council of Altoona, inviting Convention to visit that city..... 672
- incidental remarks by..... 672, 673
- remarks by—
- on oath prescribed members of Assembly after sine die adjournment..... 185
- on accepting the resignation of Mr. Woodward..... 351
- on separate judicial districts for each county..... 487
- CURTIN, ANDREW G., delegate at large:
- communication presented by—
- from a citizen of Gettysburg, offering a hall for meetings of Convention at..... 533
- resolutions submitted by—
- to adjourn Convention over to Monday..... 167
- statement of, relative to the M'Alister memorial..... 406
- incidental remarks by, 40, 169, 215, 427
- remarks by—
- on the establishment of industrial schools..... 48, 49
- on keeping at interest the moneys of the State..... 152, 153
- on railroad and canal companies guaranteeing the stock of other corporations..... 569
- on discrimination in freight or passage by railroad companies, 633

CURTIN, ANDREW G.—Continued.

- remarks by—
 on the granting of free passes by railroads 698
 on providing for a recess of the Convention..... 731
 on the death of Mr. Meredith..... 767

CUYLER, THEODORE, delegate at large from Philadelphia:

- leave of absence granted to..... 214
 incidental remarks by, 23, 24, 25, 37,
 41, 102, 336, 338, 340, 415, 419, 433,
 434, 441, 509, 520, 521, 522, 585, 593,
 595, 596, 604, 606, 608, 609, 620, 667,
 669, 671, 735.

- remarks by—
 on the right of eminent domain... 34
 on corporation elections..... 37
 on the assessment of special tax
 for local improvements..... 99, 101
 on the removal of criminal cases
 to the Supreme Court..... 295
 on the election and qualifications
 of aldermen 323, 325, 337
 on requirement of judges to be learned in the law..... 340
 on adjournment of Convention... 358 on filling vacancies in court of record..... 452
 on the election and qualifications
 of aldermen in Pittsburg and Allegheny 457
 on the uniformity of the powers and process of the courts..... 510
 on establishing a Supreme Court
nisi prius..... 518
 on railroad and canal companies guaranteeing the stock of other
 corporations..... 568
 on preventing corporations doing
 the business of a common carrier from mining or manufacturing..... 577
 on discrimination in freight or
 passage by railroad companies, 623, 657, 660, 661.
 on the death of Mr. Meredith..... 770

D.

DALLAS, GEORGE M., delegate at large:

- report made by—
 from Committee on Legislature, dissenting from the majority on locating the capital of the State at Harrisburg..... 549
 incidental remarks by..... 13, 24, 32,
 42, 194, 235, 241, 315, 319, 392, 393,
 424, 426, 427, 520, 521, 522, 523, 549,
 712, 754.

DALLAS, GEORGE M.—Continued.

- remarks by—
 on the right of eminent domain... 34
 on the legislative power of cities, 218
 on special municipal laws, 225, 227, 228
 on the establishment of Philadelphia courts... 256, 266, 275, 276, 277
 on the election and qualifications
 of aldermen..... 319
 on accepting the resignation of
 Mr. Woodward..... 353
 on acts of the Legislature passed
 by bribery..... 387
 on the uniformity of the powers and the process of the courts... 761
 on the death of Mr. Meredith..... 510

- Damages by corporations, assessment of 31 Damages to property by railroad and canal corporations..... 716

remarks, on by—

- Mr. Alricks 739
 Mr. Biddle 740, 741
 Mr. Bigler 738
 Mr. Corbett 743
 Mr. Funck 716
 Mr. Lamberton..... 745
 Mr. MacConnell..... 742, 743
 Mr. A. Reed 744, 745
 Mr. J. W. F. White..... 743

DARLINGTON, WILLIAM, delegate Vth
district:

- leave of absence granted to 672
 incidental remarks by, 24, 32, 36, 39,
 40, 41, 42, 47, 72, 79, 82, 140, 148, 149,
 162, 166, 193, 195, 197, 203, 206, 210,
 215, 216, 246, 315, 318, 329, 336, 338,
 349, 392, 417, 425, 426, 427, 440, 441,
 442, 444, 448, 455, 480, 503, 504, 520, 524, 537, 548, 610, 669.

remarks by—

- on banking rates of interest... 6
 on the establishment of industrial
 schools 46, 63, 64
 on compulsory education 82
 on keeping at interest the moneys
 of the State 153
 on general laws for incorporation of cities 216
 on the term of Supreme Court
 judges..... 244
 on the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court..... 247, 248
 on acts of Assembly passed by
 bribery. 380
 on abolishing the registers' courts, 436
 on the style of process and form
 of prosecution..... 451
 on separate judicial districts for
 each county 493

DARLINGTON, WM.—Continued.

remarks by—
on the uniformity of the powers and the process of the courts.....	511
on dispensing with trial by jury in civil cases	526
on preventing corporations doing the business of a common carrier from mining or manufacturing	574
on the death of Mr. Meredith.....	758
DAVIS, WILLIAM, delegate at large:
leave of absence granted to.....	166, 588
Debates, resolution relative to publication of.	423
Debt, none to be created by or on behalf of the State	130 of any county, city, borough or township, Commonwealth not to assume.....	160
of cities	232
Decision of the chair, appeal from, by Mr. Boyd	712 sustained by yeas and nays	712
DE FRANCE, ROBERT M., delegate XXVIIIth district:
incidental remarks by, 151, 220, 232, 729
remarks by—
on special municipal laws.....	202
on the election and qualifications of aldermen	316
on adjournment of the Convention	358, 414
DODD, SAMUEL C. T., delegate at large:
leave of absence granted to.....	429
incidental remarks by.....	41, 193
remarks by—
on liability of individual associations	22
on general laws for the incorporation of cities.....	215
DUNNING, ABRAHAM B., delegate XIIth district:
leave of absence granted to.....	212
remarks by—
on the legal rate of interest... ..	132, 137
on discrimination in freight or passage by railroad companies, 636

E.

EDUCATION, article on second reading.	38
section 1. The Legislature shall provide for the maintenance and support of a thorough and efficient system of public schools; considered.....	38
the section was agreed to.....	38

Education, article on—Continued.

section 2. The Legislature shall appropriate at least one million dollars each year for that purpose; considered.....	38 amendment of Mr. Alricks, 39; rejected, 39.
the section was agreed to by yeas and nays	39
section 3. No money raised for the support of public schools shall ever be appropriated to sectarian schools; considered.....	49 amendment of Mr. Corson, 40; adopted, 40.
the section as amended agreed to,	40
section 4. The appointment of a superintendent of public instruction; considered	40 amendment of Mr. Darlington, 40; adopted, 40.
the section as amended agreed to,	40
section 5. Neither the Legislature nor any county, city, borough or school district, shall make appropriations to any institution under sectarian control; considered	40
the section was agreed to.	41
new section proposed by Mr. Hay, to prohibit the issue of bonds; considered.....	41
the section was not agreed to.....	41
new section proposed by Mr. Darlington, the arts and sciences to be encouraged and promoted in colleges and other institutions of learning; considered.....	41 amendment of Mr. Cuyler, 41; rejected, 41.
the section was not agreed to.....	41
new section proposed by Mr. Darlington, providing for the establishment of industrial schools; considered.....	42 amendment of Mr. Wherry, 42; modified, 45; rejected, 46.
amendment of Mr. Knight, 46; adopted, 57; reconsidered, 75; rejected, 78.
amendment, of Mr. Gibson, 59; rejected, 74.
amendment of Mr. J. M. Wetherill,	78
remarks on, by—
Mr. Baer	62
Mr. Boyd.....	55
Mr. Bullitt.....	66
Mr. Campbell	51
Mr. Carter.....	47, 49
Mr. Corbett.....	76
Mr. Curtin	48, 49

Education, article on—Continued.

remarks on, by—

Mr. Darlington.....	46, 63, 64
Mr. Gibson	51
Mr. Hanna.....	58, 59
Mr. Hazzard.....	46
Mr. Hunsicker.....	49
Mr. Kaine.....	55
Mr. Knight.....	66
Mr. MacConnell.....	64
Mr. Mann.....	45
Mr. Mantor.....	54
Mr. D. W. Patterson.....	74
Mr. Purman.....	61
Mr. Runk.....	70, 71, 72, 73, 75
Mr. Stanton	50
Mr. Stewart.....	47
Mr. J. M. Wetherill.....	78
Mr. J. P. Wetherill.....	53
Mr. Wherry.....	42, 43

motion to recommit the article to Committee on Education, to report the first and fourth sections alone, 78; adopted, 79.

Committee on Education report as directed	79
consideration of the same	80

section 1. The Legislature shall provide for the maintenance and support of a thorough and efficient system of public schools; considered..... 80

amendment of Mr. Mann, 80; rejected by yeas and nays.....	81
the section was agreed to.....	81

new section proposed by Mr. Wherry, to provide for the establishment of industrial schools; considered..... 81

the section was not agreed to by yeas and nays..... 81

new section proposed by Mr. Darlington, providing for compulsory education; considered..... 82

remarks on, by—

Mr. Darlington.....	82
the section was not agreed to by yeas and nays.....	83

new section proposed by Mr. H. W. Palmer, that no money raised for school purposes shall be applied to the support of any sectarian schools; considered..... 83

remarks on, by—

Mr. Broomall.....	83
Mr. Buckalew.....	84
Mr. H. W. Palmer.....	83
the section was agreed to by yeas and nays.....	85

Education, article on—Continued.

section 4. The appointment of a superintendent of public instruction; considered..... 85

the section was agreed to..... 85

new section proposed by Mr. Cochran, that there shall be no distinction of sex in the compensation of teachers; considered..... 85

remarks on, by—

Mr. Cochran.....	85
the section was not agreed to by yeas and nays.....	86

new section proposed by Mr. J. M. Wetherill, to provide for the establishment of schools for free instruction in agriculture, mines and the mechanic arts and sciences; considered..... 87

the section was not agreed to by yeas and nays..... 87

new section proposed by Mr. C. A. Black, that no school officer or teacher shall be interested in the sale, proceeds or profits of any books, etc.; considered..... 87

the section was not agreed to..... 87

new section proposed by Mr. Russell, that the arts and sciences shall be promoted, considered..... 87

the section was not agreed to..... 87

article referred to Committee on Revision and Adjustment..... 87

Education, compulsory, to provide for..... 82

EDWARDS, MATTHEW, del. XXIII^d district.

leave of absence granted to..... 166

incidental remarks by, 27, 60, 162, 460, 543, 669, 710, 715, 734.

Electors to give consent to annexing of territory to any city or borough... 234

ELLIS, JAMES, delegate at large :

leaves of absence granted to... 214, 646

incidental remarks by..... 522, 543

remarks by—

on the removal of criminal cases to the Supreme Court..... 305

on the uniformity of the powers and process of the courts..... 307

on the creating of any other court than those authorized by the Constitution..... 542

Eminent domain, the exercise of the powers and right of..... 33

remarks on, by—

Mr. Alricks.....	36
Mr. Biddle.....	34
Mr. Boyd.....	33
Mr. Broomall.....	35

Eminent domain, &c.—Continued.

remarks on, by—

Mr. Corson	34
Mr. Cuyler	34
Mr. Dallas	34
Mr. Howard	36
Mr. Hunsicker	35

Erie, invitation from mayor of, inviting Convention to hold its sessions in that city..... 480

EWING, THOMAS, delegate XXIII^d district:

leave of absence granted to..... 408

incidental remarks by, 26, 39, 61, 72, 91, 99, 108, 194, 203, 205, 210, 211, 225, 232, 234, 280, 306, 318, 321, 343, 373, 613, 644, 705, 710, 718.

remarks by—

on taxation of foreign insurance companies.....	17
on the assessment of special tax for local improvements, 98, 102, 103.
on the taxation of manufacturing corporations.....	114
on county officers.....	199
on special municipal laws, 228, 229, 330.
on the election and qualifications of aldermen.....	332, 334
on the election and qualifications of aldermen in Pittsburg and Allegheny	459
on the establishment of separate orphans' courts.....	529
on providing for a recess of the Convention.....	723

F.

FELL, J. GILLINGHAM, delegate at large:

incidental remarks by..... 24, 557, 776

Franchises of corporations, sale or lease forbidden. 558

Free passes, railroad companies prohibited from granting 696

remarks on, by—

Mr. Alricks.....	700
Mr. Buckalew.....	703
Mr. Carter.....	701
Mr. Cochran.....	696, 700
Mr. Corson.....	700
Mr. Curtin.....	698
Mr. Howard.....	699
Mr. Knight.....	699
Mr. Temple.....	703
Mr. Harry White.....	697, 698

Freight or passage, no discrimination in, to be made..... 611, 692

Freight or passage, &c.—Continued.

remarks on, by—

Mr. Ainey.....	620, 621
Mr. Armstrong.....	653, 655, 656, 684
Mr. Baer.....	621, 642, 649
Mr. J. M. Baily.....	630
Mr. Broomall.....	630
Mr. Buckalew.....	644, 686
Mr. Campbell.....	619
Mr. Clark.....	664
Mr. Cochran.....	634, 650, 651, 664
Mr. Curtin.....	633
Mr. Cuyler.....	623, 657, 660, 661
Mr. Dunning.....	636
Mr. Gilpin.....	638
Mr. Howard.....	626, 642, 666, 667
Mr. Knight.....	643
Mr. Landis.....	662
Mr. Lilly.....	521, 656
Mr. M'Murray.....	626
Mr. T. H. B. Patterson.....	640, 647, 687
Mr. Purman.....	652, 687
Mr. S. A. Purviance.....	692, 694
Mr. J. R. Read.....	612, 613
Mr. A. Reed.....	637
Mr. Rooke.....	628
Mr. Wm. H. Smith.....	624, 625
Mr. Stewart.....	639
Mr. J. P. Wetherill.....	611
Mr. Harry White.....	694

Freight or passengers, transportation of, officers and employees of railroad and canal companies not to engage in. 605

remarks on, by—

Mr. Bullitt.....	606, 607
Mr. Howard.....	607

FULTON, ANDREW M., del. XXIVth district:

petition presented by, from citizens of Westmoreland county, asking for recognition of Almighty God in the Constitution. 588

incidental remarks by..... 252, 688, 689

remarks by—

on the present establishment of the court of common pleas.....	254
on separate judicial districts for each county.....	475, 500
on preventing corporations doing business of a common carrier from mining or manufacturing,	572

FUNCK, JOSIAH, delegate XIIth district: leave of absence granted to..... 110

incidental remarks by, 27, 161, 164, 362, 410, 411, 527, 546, 547, 610, 655, 659.

remarks by—

on banking rates of interest.....	3
-----------------------------------	---

FUNCK, JOSIAH—Continued.

- remarks by—
 on damages to property by railroad and other corporations..... 716
- Future amendments, article on second reading; considered 161
- section 1. How amendments to the Constitution shall be proposed and adopted; considered..... 161
- amendment of Mr. Funck, 161;
 rejected, 162.
- amendment of Mr. Buckalew,
 162; adopted, 162.
- amendment of Mr. Guthrie, 162;
 adopted, 163; reconsidered, 193;
 rejected by yeas and nays, 195.
- amendment of Mr. Stewart, 163;
 modified, 164; adopted, 164.
- remarks on, by—
 Mr. Guthrie..... 194
- the section as amended was agreed to, 164; reconsidered, 193; agreed
 to, 195.
- new section proposed by Mr. Funck, to provide for a call of a Convention every twenty years; considered, 164.
- the section was not agreed to by
 yeas and nays, 164.
- article referred to Committee on Revision and Adjustment, 195.

G.

- GETTYSBURG, invitation of town council of, to hold sessions of Convention in..... 140
- thanks of Convention extended to... 166
- tender of Hall for use of Convention at 533
- GIBSON, JOHN, delegate XXth district:
 incidental remarks by, 59, 153, 162, 180, 377, 412.
- remarks by—
 on the establishment of industrial
 schools 51
- on separate judicial districts for
 each county 468
- GILPIN, JOHN, delegate XXVIIth
 district:
 leave of absence granted to 214
- incidental remarks by..... 314, 422
- remarks by—
 on separate judicial districts for
 each county 490
- on discrimination in freight or
 passage by railroad companies.. 638
- God, recognition of, in the Constitution, petition of citizens of Westmoreland county, asking for 588

- Governor, to fill all vacancies in court of record..... 452
- remarks on, by—
 Mr. Cuyler..... 452
- Grade of railroads in boroughs and cities to be regulated by local authorities 750
- remarks on, by—
 Mr. Buckalew 752
- Mr. Campbell..... 750, 752
- Mr. Lilly..... 752
- Mr. Mann 752
- Mr. Niles..... 751
- Mr. Turrell..... 751
- GREEN, HENRY, delegate at large:
 incidental remarks by 164
- GUTHRIE, JOHN B., delegate XXIIIrd
 district:
 incidental remarks by, 41, 162, 163, 320, 224, 227, 234.
- remarks by—
 on providing for future amendments to the Constitution..... 194

H.

- HALL, JOHN G., del. XVIIIth district:
 leave of absence granted to 290
- incidental remarks by, 31, 32, 167,
 206, 500, 525, 738.
- HANNA, WM. R., del. IId district:
 leave of absence granted to 140, 719
- incidental remarks by, 201, 211, 215,
 266, 269, 278, 327, 329, 331, 339, 405,
 415, 416, 438, 443, 458, 507, 512, 535,
 538, 539, 544, 705.
- remarks by—
 on the establishment of industrial
 schools..... 58, 59
- on the assessment of special tax
 for local improvements..... 100
- on county officers 200
- on the legislative power of cities, 220, 221.
- on the establishment of the Philadelphia courts 263
- on the election and qualifications
 of aldermen 222, 325, 332
- on adjournment of the Convention 413
- on abolishing the registers' court,
 406, 429, 433.
- on the establishment of separate
 orphans' courts 530
- HARDING, WM. W., resolution to pay accounts of 534
- Harrisburg, resolution of Mr. Lambertson, to adjourn Convention to meet at..... 171
- resolution of Mr. Alricks, providing for meeting in Hall of House of Representatives at..... 238

- Harrisburg, &c.—Continued.
majority report of Committee on Legislature, locating capital permanently at..... 534 minority report on same..... 549
Supreme Court to sit in banc in..... 549
- HAY, MALCOLM, delegate XXIII^d
district:
resolutions submitted by—
that Committee on Accounts and Expenditures have authority to sit during recess..... 737 relative to pay of Benjamin Sin-gerly..... 738
report made by—
from Committee on Accounts and Expenditures, relative to pay of W. W. Harding and Ed.
C. Knight..... 291
relative to expenses of M'Allis-ter memorial..... 533 relative to pay of Wm. W. Harding for printing paper..... 534 relative to pay of officers of Convention..... 645
relative to printing accounts of Benjamin Singerly..... 673 relative to pay of D. F. Murphy, official reporter..... 756
incidental remarks by, 41, 89, 193,
240, 246, 274, 315, 318, 410, 453, 456,
673, 684, 732, 738.
remarks by—
on exempting property from tax-
tion..... 96
on accepting resignation of Mr.
Woodward..... 351
on the election and qualifications
of aldermen in Pittsburg and Allegheny..... 453, 455, 460
- HAZZARD, THOMAS R., delegate XXVIth district:
leave of absence granted to..... 429
incidental remarks by..... 206, 756
remarks by—
on the establishment of industrial
schools..... 46
on the removal of criminal cases
to the Supreme Court..... 288
on the election and qualifications
of aldermen..... 316
on acts of Assembly passed by
bribery..... 397
- HEMPHILL, JOSEPH, delegate Vth district:
leave of absence granted to..... 561
resolution submitted by—proposing recess until September sixteenth..... 167
incidental remarks by..... 92, 246, 307, 349
- HEVERIN, JAMES H., delegate at large
from Philadelphia:
incidental remarks by, 171, 235, 236, 712
remarks by—
on the establishment of the Philadelphia courts..... 270, 271
Highways, all railroads and canals declared public..... 688
remarks on, by—
Mr. Armstrong..... 691
Mr. Buckalew..... 690, 691
Mr. Cochran..... 688, 691
House, Committee on, report resolution relative to money derived from sale of drapery..... 737 resolution that Committee have entire charge of Hall during recess.. 737
- HOWARD THOMAS, delegate XXIII^d
district:
appointed on committee on place of summer sittings of Convention... 85
incidental remarks by, 32, 187, 405,
412, 416, 417, 419, 421, 423, 521, 522,
535, 553, 554, 572, 609, 610, 705, 706,
749, 750, 751.
remarks by—
on the right of eminent domain... 36
on the taxation of manufacturing
corporations..... 122
on keeping at interest the moneys
of the State..... 154
on county officers..... 201
on the adjournment of the Convention..... 413
on the Supreme Court providing rules for practice in all the courts..... 522
on dividing the State into judicial districts every ten years..... 547
on railroad and canal companies guaranteeing the stock of any other corporation..... 568
on preventing corporations doing
the business of a common carrier from mining or manufacturing..... 580, 598
on officers of railroad or canal companies engaging in the transportation of freight or passengers..... 607
on preventing railroad or canal companies guaranteeing the bonds or stocks of other companies..... 610
on discrimination in freight or
passage by railroad companies, 626, 642, 666, 667.
on the granting of free passes by
railroads..... 699

HOWARD, THOMAS—Continued.

remarks by—

- on the fictitious issue of stock by railroad, canal or transportation companies..... 713
- on creating the office of Secretary of Internal Affairs..... 747

HUNSICKER, CHARLES, delegate Vash
district:

- leave of absence granted to 166
- resolutions submitted by—

- relative to adjournment of Convention..... 212

- incidental remarks by, 13, 26, 27, 61,
92, 106, 171, 202, 211, 267, 270, 275,
278, 289, 294, 295, 303, 304, 307, 308,
309, 312, 376, 382, 403, 415, 421, 422,
424, 426, 429, 712, 715.

remarks by—

- on the right of eminent domain, 35
- on the establishment of industrial
schools 49
- on county officers 200, 201
- on the removal of criminal cases
to the Supreme Court... 281, 599, 311
- on acts of Assembly passed by bribery 373

I.

INDEBTEDNESS of municipal corporations 141

remarks on, by—

- Mr. Boyd 144, 145
- Mr. Buckalew 143, 144
- Mr. J. W. F. White 143, 145

Individual associations, liability of..... 17

remarks on by—

- Mr. Biddle..... 20, 21
- Mr. Bigler..... 18, 19
- Mr. Carey 19
- Mr. Dodd 22
- Mr. Woodward 17, 22

Industrial schools, the establishment of 42, 81

remarks on, by—

- Mr. Baer 62
- Mr. Boyd..... 55
- Mr. Bullitt 66
- Mr. Campbell 51
- Mr. Carter 47, 49
- Mr. Corbett 76
- Mr. Curtin..... 48, 49
- Mr. Darlington..... 46, 63, 64
- Mr. Gibson..... 51
- Mr. Hanna..... 58, 59
- Mr. Hazzard 46
- Mr. Hunsicker..... 49
- Mr. Kaine..... 55
- Mr. Knight..... 66
- Mr. MacConnell..... 64
- Mr. Mann 45

Industrial schools, &c.—Continued.

remarks on, by—

- Mr. Mantor..... 54
- Mr. D. W. Patterson..... 74
- Mr. Purman..... 61
- Mr. Runk 70, 71, 72, 73, 75
- Mr. Stanton 50
- Mr. Stewart 47
- Mr. J. M. Wetherill..... 78
- Mr. J. P. Wetherill..... 53
- Mr. Wherry..... 42, 43

Insurance companies of other States to be subject to same taxation as those incorporated by this State.... 16

remarks on, by—

- Mr. Ewing 17

Instruction, appointment of Superintendent of Public 40, 85Interest, banks not to receive greater, than allowed individuals. 3

remarks on, by—

- Mr. Ainey..... 12
- Mr. Armstrong..... 9
- Mr. Baer..... 14
- Mr. Biddle..... 10
- Mr. Broomall..... 4, 11
- Mr. Curry 6
- Mr. Cochran..... 5, 10, 16
- Mr. Darlington..... 6
- Mr. Funk 3
- Mr. Lear 7
- Mr. MacVeagh..... 10, 14
- Mr. Niles..... 4
- Mr. Andrew Reed..... 13

Interest, legal rate to be seven per cent 130

remarks on, by—

- Mr. Baer..... 136
- Mr. Biddle..... 133
- Mr. Bowman..... 134
- Mr. Carey 135
- Mr. Dunning..... 132, 137
- Mr. Knight..... 130, 132
- Mr. Lear..... 137
- Mr. Mott..... 133
- Mr. Stratton..... 135

Internal Affairs, creating office of Secretary of..... 746

remarks on, by—

- Mr. Biddle..... 749
- Mr. Cochran..... 747
- Mr. Howard 747
- Mr. S. A. Purviance..... 748
- Mr. J. P. Wetherill..... 746

J.

JUDGES, cumulative voting provided

- for..... 338
- of court of common pleas..... 338
- of Supreme Court, number and term of..... 241

Judges, &c.—Continued.

priority of commission, how determined.....	339
residence and qualifications of.....	345
to be learned in the law.....	339
remarks on, by—
Mr. Baker.....	340
Mr. Biddle.....	342
Mr. Cuyler.....	340
Mr. Kaine.....	344
Mr. Lilly.....	341, 342
Mr. Littleton.....	341, 342
Mr. Simpson.....	340
Mr. H. W. Smith.....	342
Judiciary, article on second reading, considered.....	238
section 1. The vesting of the judicial power of the Commonwealth; considered.....	238 amendment of Mr. Temple, 238; rejected, 239.
amendment of Mr. Woodward, 239; rejected by yeas and nays, 240.
amendment of Mr. Russell, 240; rejected, 241.
amendment of Mr. Dallas, 241; rejected, 241.
the section was agreed to.....	241
section 2. The number and term of judges of Supreme Court; considered.....	241 amendment of Mr. Armstrong, 241; first division rejected, 243; second division withdrawn, 244.
amendment of Mr. Darlington, 244; rejected, 244.
amendment of Mr. Littleton, 244; rejected, 245.
amendment of Mr. Kaine, 245; rejected by yeas and nays, 245.
amendment of Mr. Hemphill, 246; rejected, 246.
amendment of Mr. Darlington, 246; rejected, 246.
amendment of Mr. Struthers, 246; rejected, 247.
amendment of Mr. S. A. Purviance, 247; rejected, 247.
remarks on, by—
Mr. Armstrong.....	241, 242, 243
Mr. Darlington.....	244
Mr. Kaine.....	242, 245
Mr. S. A. Purviance.....	242
Mr. Struthers.....	246
Mr. Woodward.....	246
the section was agreed to.....	247
section 3. The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court; considered.....	247 amendment of Mr. Kaine, 247; adopted by yeas and nays, 250.

Judiciary, article on—Continued.

amendment of Mr. Corson to amendment, 249; rejected, 250. amendment of Mr. Broomall to amendment, 250; rejected, 250.
remarks on, by—
Mr. Armstrong.....	248, 249
Mr. Broomall.....	250
Mr. Corbett.....	248
Mr. Corson.....	249
Mr. Darlington.....	247, 248
Mr. Kaine.....	247
Mr. MacVeagh.....	247
Mr. Mann.....	249
the section as amended was agreed to.....	250
section 4. The courts of common pleas to continue as at present established; considered.....	250 amendment of Mr. Kaine, 251; rejected by yeas and nays, 254.
amendment of Mr. Fulton to amendment, 252; rejected, 252.
amendment of Mr. Fulton, 254; withdrawn, 256.
remarks on, by—
Mr. Broomall.....	253
Mr. Fulton.....	254
Mr. Kaine.....	251, 253
Mr. Mitchell.....	255
Mr. Woodward.....	252
the section was agreed to.....	256
section 5. Relative to courts of Philadelphia and Allegheny county; considered.....	256 amendment of Mr. Armstrong, 256; adopted, 256.
amendment of Mr. Dallas, 256; first division rejected, 275; amendment withdrawn, 275.
amendment of Mr. Hanna to amendment, 266; withdrawn, 274.
amendment of Mr. Dallas, 273; rejected, 278.
remarks on, by—
Mr. Armstrong.....	267, 269
Mr. Biddle.....	260, 278
Mr. Bullitt.....	264
Mr. Campbell.....	258
Mr. Cassidy.....	266
Mr. Dallas.....	256, 266, 275, 276, 277
Mr. Hanna.....	263
Mr. Heverin.....	270, 271
Mr. MacConnell.....	274
Mr. Newlin.....	262
Mr. J. R. Read.....	258
Mr. Temple.....	272, 273
Mr. Woodward.....	264, 265
Mr. Worrell.....	259, 260

Judiciary, article on—Continued.

the section was agreed to by yeas and nays.....	279
section 6. Each court to have exclusive jurisdiction; considered, amendment of Mr. Armstrong, 279; adopted 279.
the section as amended was agreed to.....	279
section 7. The prothonotary of Philadelphia courts to be appointed by the judges of said courts; considered.....	279 amendment of Mr. S. A. Purviance, 279; rejected by yeas and nays, 280.
the section was agreed to.....	280
section 8. The courts of Philadelphia and Allegheny county shall detail one or more of its judges to hold the criminal courts; considered.....	280
the section was agreed to.....	280
section 9. Judge of common pleas to be a justice of oyer and terminer and general jail delivery; considered.....	280
the section was agreed to.....	281
section 10. Removal of criminal cases to the Supreme Court.....	281 amendment of Mr. Armstrong, 281; modified, 297; adopted by yeas and nays, 307.
amendment of Mr. Sharpe to amendment, 283; withdrawn, 285.
amendment of Mr. Hunsicker, 307; adopted by yeas and nays, 307.
amendment of Mr. Alricks, 307; rejected, 307.
amendment of Mr. Buckalew, 307; adopted, 308.
amendment of Mr. Russell, 309; rejected, 311.
amendment of Mr. Hunsicker, 311; adopted, 311.
amendment of Mr. Cochran, 311; rejected, 312.
remarks on, by—
Mr. Armstrong.....	283, 303, 309
Mr. Bartholomew.....	302
Mr. Beebe.....	300
Mr. Biddle.....	304
Mr. J. S. Black.....	294, 295
Mr. Boyd.....	293
Mr. Broomall.....	297
Mr. Buckalew.....	294, 308
Mr. Cochran.....	311
Mr. Corbett.....	312
Mr. Corson.....	285

Judiciary, article on—Continued.

remarks on, by—
Mr. Cuyler.....	295
Mr. Ellis.....	305
Mr. Hazzard.....	288
Mr. Hunsicker.....	281, 299, 311
Mr. Lear.....	286
Mr. MacVeagh.....	309
Mr. Mann.....	285
Mr. H. W. Palmer.....	282
Mr. Purman.....	291
Mr. Ross.....	283
Mr. Sharpe.....	303, 304
Mr. Temple.....	287, 288
the section was not agreed to by yeas and nays.....	312
section 11. The judges of Supreme Court and of common pleas have power to issue writs of certiorari ; considered.....	313 amendment of Mr. Kaine, 314; adopted, 314. amendment of Mr. Gilpin, 314; withdrawn, 314.
remarks on, by—
Mr. Kaine.....	313
the section as amended agreed to, 314
section 12. The election, commission and qualifications of justices of the peace and aldermen, and establishment of a court of police in the city of Philadelphia; considered.....	314
the first division was agreed to.....	315 amendment of Mr. Darlington to second division, 315; adopted... 315 amendment of Mr. D. W. Patterson, 315; adopted, 318. amendment of Mr. Broomall to amendment, 317; adopted, 318.
the second division was agreed to, 319 amendment of Mr. Dallas to third division, 319; adopted, 329.
amendment of Mr. Temple, 329; adopted, 329.
amendment of Mr. Hanna, 329; adopted, 329.
amendment of Mr. Armstrong, 329; adopted, 329.
amendment of Mr. Darlington, 329; rejected by yeas and nays, 331.
amendment of Mr. Hanna, 331; adopted, 331.
amendment of Mr. J. R. Read, 332; adopted, 334. amendment of Mr. Armstrong to amendment, 333; adopted, 333.
amendment of Mr. Armstrong, 334; adopted, 336.
the third division sub-divided.....	334

Judiciary, article on—Continued.

amendment of Mr. Buckalew to first part, 336; adopted, 336.
amendment of Mr. Sharpe to amendment, 336; adopted, 336.
amendment of Mr. Darlington, 336; rejected, 336.
amendment of Mr. Armstrong, 336; adopted, 336.
the first part of third division was agreed to by yeas and nays	337
the second part of third division was agreed to	338
remarks on, by—
Mr. Armstrong, 321, 328, 332, 333, 335
Mr. Beebe.....	316
Mr. Biddle.....	325
Mr. Bowman.....	315, 318
Mr. Broomall.....	317
Mr. Buckalew.....	330, 336
Mr. Corbett.....	315, 330
Mr. Cuyler.....	323, 325, 337
Mr. Dallas.....	319
Mr. DeFrance.....	316
Mr. Ewing.....	332, 334
Mr. Hanna.....	322, 325, 332
Mr. Hazzard.....	316
Mr. Knight.....	319, 328
Mr. Littleton.....	320, 330
Mr. MacVeagh.....	329, 330
Mr. Niles.....	317
Mr. D. W. Patterson.....	315
Mr. J. R. Read.....	320, 321, 335
Mr. Ross.....	316
Mr. Simpson.....	320
Mr. Temple.....	319, 320, 326, 327, 335
Mr. J. P. Wetherill.....	334
Mr. Worrell.....	334, 335
the section as amended agreed to,	338
section 13. Right of appeal to a court of record; considered.....	338
the section was agreed to.....	338
section 14. The election and term of judges of court of common pleas; considered.....	338 amendment of Mr. Kaine, 338; rejected, 338.
the section was agreed to.....	338
section 15. Cumulative voting provided for election of Supreme Court judges when more than one is to be elected; considered,	338
the section was agreed to by yeas and nays.....	339
section 16. If two or more judges elected at the same time, lots to be cast for priority of commission; considered.....	339
the section was agreed to.....	339

Judiciary, article on—Continued.

section 17. All judges required to be learned in the law; considered.....	339 amendment of Mr. Armstrong, 339; adopted, 340.
amendment of Mr. Baker, 340; rejected, 342. amendment of Mr. H. W. Smith, 342; rejected by yeas and nays, 344.
amendment of Mr. Ewing, 344; rejected, 344.
remarks on, by—
Mr. Baker.....	340
Mr. Biddle.....	342
Mr. Cuyler.....	340
Mr. Kaine.....	344
Mr. Lilly.....	341, 342
Mr. Littleton.....	341, 342
Mr. Simpson.....	340
Mr. H. W. Smith.....	342
the section was agreed to.....	341
section 18. The residence and qualifications of judges of Supreme Court; considered.....	345
the first division was agreed to.....	345 amendment of Mr. Gibson to second division, 345; rejected, 345. amendment of Mr. Beebe, 345; adopted, 346. amendment of Mr. Corson to amend, 346; adopted, 346.
remarks on, by—
Mr. Buckalew.....	347
Mr. MacVeagh.....	345
the section as amended was not agreed to.....	347
section 19. The several courts of common pleas to have the powers of a court of chancery; considered.....	347
the section was agreed to.....	347
new section proposed by Mr. Armstrong, relative to the passage of laws by fraud, bribery or undue means, to be declared by the Supreme Court null and void; considered.....	348 amendment of Mr. Harry White, 369; withdrew, 376. amendment of Mr. Sharpe, 376; rejected, 381. amendment of Mr. Bullitt, 381; rejected, 390.
amendment of Mr. Armstrong, 390; modified, 394; rejected, 397.
remarks on, by—
Mr. Alricks.....	399
Mr. Armstrong.....	360, 376, 400

Judiciary, article on—Continued.

remarks on, by—
Mr. Biddle.....	398
Mr. Bowman.....	402
Mr. Boyd.....	394, 395
Mr. Broomall.....	397
Mr. Buckalew.....	388
Mr. Bullitt.....	377
Mr. Calvin.....	386
Mr. Carter.....	368
Mr. Cochran.....	396
Mr. Corbett.....	376
Mr. Corson.....	382
Mr. Dallas.....	387
Mr. Darlington.....	380
Mr. Hazzard.....	397
Mr. Hunsicker.....	373
Mr. Kaine.....	374
Mr. Lear.....	378
Mr. MacConnell.....	395
Mr. MacVeagh.....	371, 394
Mr. Mann.....	397
Mr. S. A. Purviance.....	372
Mr. Andrew Reed.....	390
Mr. Sharpe.....	396
Mr. White Harry.....	369, 384
the section as amended was agreed to.....	403
section 20. Only judicial duties to be imposed on judges of Supreme Court; considered.....	404
the section was agreed to.....	404
section 21. Registers' office and recorder of deeds established; registers' court abolished and powers vested in orphans' court; considered.....	404
amendment of Mr. Armstrong, 404; adopted, 404.
amendment of Mr. Alricks, 404; rejected, 404.
amendment of H. W. Palmer, 404; adopted, 405. amendment of Mr. Bannan, 405; rejected, 406.
amendment of Mr. J. M. Bailey, 406; rejected, 406.
amendment of Mr. Hanna, 406; rejected, 433.
amendment of Mr. Hanna, 433; rejected 433.
amendment of Mr. Temple, 433; withdrawn, 433. amendment of Mr. Cuyler, 434; adopted 434. amendment of Mr. D. W. Patterson, 434; rejected, 436. amendment of Mr. Landis, 436; adopted, 436.
amendment of Mr. J. M. Bailey, 437; rejected, 440.

Judiciary, article on—Continued.

amendment of Mr. Darlington, 440; modified, 442; rejected, 442.
amendment of Mr. Kaine, 443; rejected, 443.
remarks on, by—
Mr. Armstrong.....	435, 436, 437, 440
Mr. Campbell.....	432
Mr. Cochran.....	442
Mr. Darlington.....	436
Mr. Hanna.....	406, 429, 433
Mr. Lilly.....	439
Mr. Littleton.....	438
Mr. D. W. Patterson.....	434, 438, 439
Mr. Simpson.....	430
the section as amended was agreed to.....	444
section 21. Reconsidered.....	527
amendment of Mr. Cochran, 528; rejected, 538.
amendment of Mr. Cochran, 528; rejected, 536.
amendment of Mr. M'Clean, 538; rejected, 538.
remarks on, by—
Mr. Armstrong.....	528, 535, 536, 538
Mr. Baer.....	531
Mr. Buckalew.....	529, 530
Mr. Cochran.....	528, 535, 537
Mr. Ewing.....	529
Mr. Hanna.....	530
Mr. M'Clean.....	538
Mr. Harry White.....	531, 532
the section was agreed to.....	540
new section proposed by Mr. Patton, providing for printing legal notices in the newspapers; considered.....	444 amendment of Mr. H. W. Smith, 446; rejected, 448.
remarks on, by—
Mr. Baer.....	447
Mr. Patton.....	444
Mr. H. W. Smith.....	447
the section was not agreed to.....	448
section 22. Relative to style of process and form of prosecution; considered.....	448 amendment of Mr. Harry White 448; rejected, 452.
remarks on, by—
Mr. Armstrong.....	450
Mr. J. S. Black.....	448
Mr. Darlington.....	451
Mr. Kaine.....	451
Mr. Harry White.....	450
the section was agreed to.....	452
section 23. Vacancies in court of record to be filled by appointment by the Governor; considered.....	452

Judiciary, article on—Continued.

amendment of Mr. Broomall, 452;
adopted 452.
amendment of Mr. Armstrong,
452; adopted, 452.
remarks on, by—
Mr. Cuyler.....	452
the section as amended was agreed
to.....	453
new section proposed by Mr. Hay, relative to election and jurisdiction of aldermen in Pittsburg and Allegheny; considered.....	453
remarks on, by—
Mr. Armstrong.....	460
Mr. Cuyler.....	457
Mr. Ewing.....	459
Mr. Hay.....	453, 455, 460
Mr. MacConnell.....	457
Mr. S. A. Purviance.....	460
Mr. Wm. H. Smith.....	458
Mr. J. W. F. White.....	456
the section was agreed to.....	461
section 24. Each county with 30,- 000 inhabitants to constitute separate judicial district, office of associate judge not learned in the law abolished; considered..	461 amendment of Mr. Kaine, 461; rejected, 463.
amendment of Mr. Alricks, 466;
rejected, 500.
amendment of Mr. Gibson to amendment, 468; rejected, 499.
amendment of Mr. Corson to amendment, 499; rejected, 500.
amendment of Mr. Fulton, 500;
rejected, 501.
amendment of Mr. D. W. Patterson, 501; rejected, 502.
amendment of Mr. Landis, 502;
rejected, 502.
amendment of Mr. Turrell to amendment, 502; rejected, 502.
amendment of J. N. Purviance, 502; withdrawn, 502.
amendment of Mr. Darlington,
503; rejected, 503.
amendment of Mr. C. A. Black, 503; modified, 503; adopted, 503.
remarks on, by—
Mr. Alricks.....	466
Mr. Armstrong.....	471, 494, 506
Mr. Baer.....	474
Mr. Beebe.....	491
Mr. Boyd.....	462, 488
Mr. Broomall.....	465
Mr. Buckalew.....	463, 505
Mr. Carter.....	467
Mr. Clark.....	478
Mr. Cochran.....	496

Judiciary, article on—Continued.

remarks on, by—
Mr. Corbett.....	498
Mr. Curry.....	487
Mr. Darlington.....	493
Mr. Elliott.....	469
Mr. Fulton.....	475, 500
Mr. Gibson.....	468
Mr. Gilpin.....	490
Mr. Kaine.....	461, 482, 506
Mr. Landis.....	502
Mr. Lilly.....	470
Mr. M'Murray.....	497
Mr. Mann.....	485
Mr. H. W. Palmer.....	505
Mr. D. W. Patterson.....	501
Mr. Pughe.....	476
Mr. Purman.....	484
Mr. J. N. Purviance.....	489
Mr. S. A. Purviance.....	477
Mr. Sharpe.....	480
Mr. Stewart.....	482
Mr. Harry White.....	464, 473
the section was not agreed to, 504,	506 section 25. All laws relating to organizations, powers, process, etc., of courts to be uniform ;
considered.....	507
amendment of Mr. Armstrong, 507; withdrawn, 509.
amendment of Mr. Kaine, 509;
adopted, 509.
amendment of Mr. D. W. Patterson, 512; adopted, 513.
remarks on, by—
Mr. Armstrong, 507, 508, 509, 510, 512
Mr. Corbett.....	513
Mr. Cuyler.....	510
Mr. Dallas.....	510
Mr. Darlington.....	511
Mr. Ellis.....	507
Mr. Kaine.....	508
the section as amended was agreed
to.....	513
new section proposed by Mr. Armstrong, that the Supreme Court provide rules for the system of practice in all the courts; considered.....	514
remarks on, by—
Mr. Armstrong.....	514
Mr. Kaine.....	516
Mr. S. A. Purviance.....	515
the section was agreed to.....	516
new section proposed by Mr. Patton, advertisements and legal notices to be published in two newspapers in each county having largest circulation; considered.....	516 amendment of Mr. Baer, 516; rejected, 517.

Judiciary, article on—Continued.

amendment of Mr. H. W. Palmer, 517; rejected, 517.
remarks on, by—
Mr. Cochran.....	516
the section was not agreed to.....	518
new section proposed by Mr. Cuyler, establishing a Supreme Court visi prius , in Philadelphia; considered.....	518 amendment of Mr. Howard, 522; adopted, 522.
remarks on, by—
Mr. Alricks.....	519
Mr. Corbett.....	521
Mr. Cuyler.....	518
Mr. Howard.....	522
the section was not agreed to.....	523
new section proposed by Mr. Sharpe to abolish office of associate judge; considered.....	523
the section was not agreed to.....	523
new section proposed by Mr. H. W. Palmer, providing for manner of filling office of associate judge; considered.....	525
remarks on, by—
Mr. H. W. Palmer.....	525
the section was not agreed to.....	525
new section proposed by Mr. Hall, that parties in civil cases by agreement filed may dispense with trial by jury; considered.....	525
remarks on, by—
Mr. Broomall.....	526
Mr. Darlington.....	526
Mr. H. W. Palmer.....	526
Mr. Purman.....	526
new section proposed by Mr. Funck, giving the Legislature authority to abolish office of associate judge; considered.....	527
the section was agreed to.....	527
new section proposed by Mr. Parsons, that when a county shall contain 45,000 inhabitants it shall be constituted a separate judicial district and abolishing the office of associate judge; considered.....	540
the section was agreed to.....	540
new section proposed by Mr. Stewart, that elections to fill vacancies, shall be only for the unexpired term considered.....	541
remarks on, by—
Mr. Armstrong.....	541
Mr. Broomall.....	541
Mr. Andrew Reed.....	541, 542
Mr. Stewart.....	541
Mr. Turrell.....	541, 542

Judiciary, article on—Continued.

the section was not agreed to.....	542
new section proposed by Mr. Ellis, that the Legislature shall not create any other court than those authorized by the Constitution; considered.....	542
remarks on, by—
Mr. Ellis.....	542
the section was not agreed to.....	543
new section proposed by Mr. Buckalew, to provide for dividing the State into judicial districts every ten years; considered.....	545
remarks on, by—
Mr. Broomall.....	547
Mr. Buckalew.....	545, 546, 547
Mr. Howard.....	547
the section was not agreed to.....	548
new section proposed by Mr. Sharpe, that the Supreme Court shall sit in banc in the city of Harrisburg; considered.....	549
the section was not agreed to by yeas and nays.....	549
the article was referred to the Committee on Revision and Adjustment.....	549
Judicial districts, each county of thirty thousand to form separate.....	461
remarks on, by—
Mr. Alricks.....	466
Mr. Armstrong.....	471, 494, 504
Mr. Baer.....	474
Mr. Beebe.....	491
Mr. Boyd.....	462, 488
Mr. Broomall.....	465
Mr. Buckalew.....	463, 505
Mr. Carter.....	467
Mr. Clark.....	478
Mr. Cochran.....	496
Mr. Corbett.....	498
Mr. Curry.....	487
Mr. Darlington.....	493
Mr. Elliott.....	469
Mr. Fulton.....	475, 500
Mr. Gibson.....	468
Mr. Gilpin.....	490
Mr. Kaine.....	461, 482, 506
Mr. Landis.....	502
Mr. Lilly.....	470
Mr. M'Murray.....	497
Mr. Mann.....	485
Mr. H. W. Palmer.....	505
Mr. D. W. Patterson.....	501
Mr. Pughe.....	476
Mr. Purman.....	484
Mr. J. N. Purviance.....	489
Mr. S. A. Purviance.....	477
Mr. Sharpe.....	480
Mr. Stewart.....	482

Judicial districts—Continued.

remarks on, by—

Mr. Harry White 464, 473

Judicial districts, the State to be divided into every ten years 545

remarks on, by—

Mr. Broomall 547

Mr. Buckalew 545, 546, 547

Mr. Howard 547

officers, oaths prescribed for 88, 171

power, vesting of the 238

Jurisdiction, each court to have exclusive 279

Jury, to dispense with trial by, in civil cases 525

remarks on, by—

Mr. Broomall 526

Mr. Darlington 526

Mr. H. W. Palmer 526

Mr. Purman 526

Justices of the peace, election and qualifications of 314

remarks on, by—

Mr. Armstrong, 321, 328, 332, 333, 335

Mr. Beebe 316

Mr. Biddle 325

Mr. Bowman 315, 318

Mr. Broomall 317

Mr. Buckalew 330, 336

Mr. Corbett 315, 330

Mr. Cuyler 323, 325, 337

Mr. Dallas 319

Mr. De France 316

Mr. Ewing 332, 334

Mr. Hanna 322, 325, 332

Mr. Hazzard 316

Mr. Knight 319, 328

Mr. Littleton 320, 330

Mr. MacVeagh 329, 330

Mr. Niles 317

Mr. D. W. Patterson 315

Mr. J. R. Read 320, 321, 335

Mr. Ross 316

Mr. Simpson 320

Mr. Temple 319, 320, 326, 327, 335

Mr. J. P. Wetherill 334

Mr. Worrell 334, 335

KAINE, DANIEL, delegate XXVth district :

resolution submitted by—fixing hours of daily sessions 290

incidental remarks by, 22, 32, 38, 39, 89, 90, 103, 146, 172, 175, 195, 196, 197, 198, 202, 205, 208, 209, 214, 215, 232, 239, 241, 250, 251, 289, 306, 314, 338, 349, 393, 400, 405, 318, 426, 334, 438, 462, 384, 495, 496, 507, 520, 534, 543, 544, 603, 603, 655, 696, 702, 716, 755.

KAINE, DANIEL—Continued.

remarks by—

on the establishment of industrial schools 55

on oath of office 88, 89

on oath prescribed members Assembly, after sine die adjournment 185 on term of Supreme Court Judges, 242, 235.

on the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court 247

on the present establishment of the court of common pleas. 251, 253

on the power to issue writs of certiorari 313

on the requirement of judges to be learned in the law 344

on acts of the Assembly passed by bribery 374

on the style of process and form of prosecution 451

on separate judicial districts for each county 461, 482, 506

on the uniformity of the powers and process of the courts 508

on the Supreme Court providing rules for practice in all the courts 516

on the right of corporations to construct a railroad or canal between any two points 554

on providing for a recess of the Convention 728

KNIGHT, EDWARD C., delegate at large from Philadelphia :

report of Committee on Accounts and Expenditures relating to pay of 291

incidental remarks by, 24, 46, 55, 60, 175, 180, 230, 240, 329, 695, 697, 700, 704.

remarks by—

on the establishment of industrial schools 66

on oath prescribed members of Assembly after sine die adjournment 190

on the legal rate of interest... 130, 132

on the election and qualifications of aldermen 419, 528

on discrimination in freight or passage by railroad companies, 643 on the granting of free passes by railroad companies 699

L.

LAMBERTON, ROBERT A., del. at large :

resolution submitted by—

to adjourn Convention to meet at Harrisburg 171

- LAMBERTON, ROBERT A.—Continued.
 incidental remarks by..... 205, 741
 remarks by—
 on damages to property by railroads and other corporations..... 745
- LANDIS, AUGUSTUS S., del. XX1st
 district:
 incidental remarks by, 436, 440,
 441, 502, 520, 689, 690.
 remarks by—
 on the legislative power of cities, 221
 on separate judicial districts for
 each county..... 502
 on discrimination in freight or
 passage by railroad companies, 662
 on the death of Mr. Meredith..... 762
- Law, all judges required to be learned in..... 339
 remarks on, by—
 Mr. Baker..... 340
 Mr. Biddle..... 342
 Mr. Cuyler..... 340
 Mr. Kaine..... 344
 Mr. Lilly..... 341, 342
 Mr. Littleton..... 341, 342
 Mr. Simpson..... 340
 Mr. H. W. Smith..... 342
- Laws, passage of by fraud, bribery or undue means to be null and void, 348
- LAWRENCE, GEORGE V., delegate at large.
 incidental remarks by, 31, 70, 89, 91, 195, 201, 212, 410, 411, 424, 472.
 remarks by—
 on adjournment of Convention..... 168
- LEAR, GEORGE, delegate VIIth district.
 incidental remarks by..... 745
 remarks by—
 on banking rates of interest..... 7
 on the legal rate of interest..... 137
 on the removal of criminal cases
 to the Supreme Court..... 286
 on acts of Assembly passed by
 bribery..... 378
- Legal notices required to be published in newspapers..... 444
 remarks on, by—
 Mr. Baer..... 447
 Mr. Patton..... 444
 Mr. H. W. Smith..... 447
 to be published in newspapers having largest circulation..... 516
 remarks on, by—
 Mr. Cochran..... 516
- Legislation, no beneficial to be allowed by general or special law..... 746
- Legislation, proposition of Mr. Harry White relative to article on..... 140
- Legislature, committee on, report of majority on location of Capital at Harrisburg..... 534 minority report of..... 549
- Lehigh University, trustees of, tender use of hall to Convention..... 338 thanks of Convention to..... 238
- LILLY, WILLIAM, delegate at large:
 resolution submitted by—
 to adjourn Convention to Monday, 170
 incidental remarks by, 11, 31, 38, 39,
 60, 63, 70, 74, 75, 144, 161, 162, 167,
 169, 193, 194, 197, 210, 214, 239, 252,
 277, 315, 338, 339, 356, 400, 404, 405,
 410, 413, 415, 417, 419, 422, 423, 433,
 455, 520, 521, 523, 524, 550, 558, 577,
 609, 219, 646, 670, 686, 694, 706, 734, 753,, 776.
 remarks by—
 on the requirement of judges to be learned in the law..... 341, 342
 on accepting the resignation of Mr.
 Woodward..... 350
 on adjournment of the Convention..... 357
 on abolishing the registers' court..... 439
 on separate judicial districts for
 each county..... 470
 on preventing corporations doing
 the business of a common carrier from mining or manufacturing..... 580
 on discrimination in freight or passage by railroad companies, 621, 656.
 on providing for a recess of the Convention..... 722, 723
 on borough or city regulating the grade and rate of speed of railroads within its limits..... 752
- LITTLETON, WILLIAM E., delegate IIIId district:
 incidental remarks by, 191, 206, 216,
 217, 224, 234, 236, 244, 275, 279, 319,
 360, 437, 734.
 remarks by—
 on the legislative power of cities, 222
 on special municipal laws, 225, 226, 227, 228.
 on the election and qualifications
 of aldermen..... 320, 330
 on the requirement of judges to
 be learned in the law..... 341, 342
 on abolishing the registers' court, 438
- M.
- MACCONNELL, THOMAS, del. XXIIIId
 district:
 incidental remarks by, 7, 21, 64,
 145, 205, 217, 242, 278, 308, 334, 416,
 432, 437, 441, 442, 451, 452, 584, 732.

MACCONNELL, THOMAS—Continued.

remarks by—

on the establishment of industrial schools	64
on the taxation of manufacturing corporations	125
on levying of special taxes	155
on county officers	199
on the establishment of the Philadelphia courts	274
on acts of Assembly passed by bribery	395
on the election and qualifications of aldermen in Pittsburg and Allegheny	457
on damages to property by railroads and other corporations, 742, 743.

MACVEAGH, WAYNE, delegate XIIth district :

leave of absence granted to	408
incidental remarks by, 17, 19, 24, 26, 30, 275, 311, 315, 318, 329, 331, 333, 336, 347, 353, 393, 396, 417, 421.

remarks by—

on banking rates of interest	10, 14
on the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court	247
on the removal of criminal cases to the Supreme Court	309
on the election and qualifications of aldermen	329, 330
on the residence and qualifications of judges of Supreme Court	345
on acts of Assembly passed by bribery	371, 394

M'Allister memorial, statement of Mr. Curtin relative to report of Committee on Accounts and Expenditures, relative to payment of expenses of	533

--	-----

M'CLEAN, WILLIAM, delegate XXth district :

appointed on committee on place of summer sitting of Convention	85
communication presented by, from town council of Gettysburg, inviting Convention to hold its sessions in that borough	140
incidental remarks by	187, 537
remarks by—
on the legislative power of cities	221
on the establishment of separate orphans' courts	538

M'CULLOCH, JOHN, delegate XXIIId district :

leave of absence granted to	166
-----------------------------------	-----

M'MURRAY, JOHN, del. XXVIIth district :

leave of absence granted to	214
incidental remarks by	702, 703

remarks by—

on separate judicial districts for each county	497
on discrimination in freight or passage by railroad companies	620

MANN, JOHN S., delegate XVIth district :

incidental remarks by, 31, 39, 80, 87, 90, 92, 164, 172, 334, 376, 425, 428, 534, 539, 540, 545, 694, 695, 696, 706.
--	--

remarks by—

on the establishment of industrial schools	45
on the taxation of manufacturing corporations	105, 126, 127
on the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court	249
on the removal of criminal cases to the Supreme Court	285
on acts of Assembly passed by bribery	397
on separate judicial districts for each county	485
on railroad and canal companies guaranteeing the stock of other corporations	564
on providing for a recess of the Convention	720
on borough or city regulating the grade and rate of speed of railroads within its limits	752

MANTOR, FRANK, delegate XXIXth district :

leave of absence granted to	166
incidental remarks by	669

remarks by—

on the establishment of industrial schools	54
on providing for a recess of the Convention	728, 729

Manufacturing corporations to be taxed same as individuals

remarks on, by—

Mr. Ainey	120
Mr. Armstrong	113, 125
Mr. Bardsley	117
Mr. Bigler	121
Mr. Bowman	121
Mr. Broomall	104, 117
Mr. Buckalew	106
Mr. Calvin	119
Mr. Carey	112
Mr. Cochran	105
Mr. Ewing	114
Mr. Howard	122
Mr. MacConnell	125

Manufacturing corporations—Continued.

remarks on, by—

Mr. Mann	105, 126, 127
Mr. Niles	104
Mr. H. W. Palmer	106
Mr. J. N. Purviance	123
Mr. H. W. Smith	118
Mr. Struthers	128
Mr. J. P. Wetherill	108, 110
Mr. Harry White	104, 115

Manufacturing.—See Mining.

Mayor of cities, duties of..... 223

Mechanic arts, the establishment of schools for free instruction in 87

Memorial from Seventh Day Baptists, relative to observance of the Sabbath..... 408

MEREDITH, WILLIAM M., delegate at large :

death of, announced..... 756 resolutions on death of, offered by—

Mr. Carey..... 758

remarks on, by—

Mr. Armstrong..... 775

Mr. Biddle..... 759

Mr. Carey..... 756

Mr. Curtin..... 767

Mr. Cuyler..... 770

Mr. Dallas..... 761

Mr. Darlington..... 758

Mr. Landis..... 762

Mr. J. N. Purviance 769

Mr. Sharpe..... 764

Mr. Stanton..... 763

Mr. Woodward..... 772

Mr. Wright..... 772

METZGER, JOHN G., delegate XVth district.

leaves of absence granted to..... 110, 672

Mining and manufacturing, corporations doing the business of a common carrier not to engage in..... 572

remarks on, by—

Mr. Armstrong..... 578, 600, 601

Mr. Baer..... 599, 600

Mr. Biddle..... 592, 593

Mr. Bigler..... 591

Mr. J. S. Black..... 602

Mr. Buckalew..... 582, 583, 597, 598

Mr. Bullitt..... 594

Mr. Carter..... 595, 596

Mr. Cochran..... 575, 585, 603

Mr. Cuyler..... 577

Mr. Darlington..... 574

Mr. Fulton..... 572

Mr. Howard..... 580, 598

Mr. Lilly..... 580

Mr. H. W. Palmer..... 574

Mr. T. H. B. Patterson..... 583, 584, 597

Mr. A. Reed..... 573

Mr. Sharpe..... 589

Mining and manufacturing—Continued.

remarks on, by—

Mr. J. P. Wetherill 581

Mr. Harry White..... 576

Mr. J. W. F. White..... 591, 592

Mining companies not to hold more than one thousand acres of land..... 30

Mining, the establishment of schools for free instruction in 87

MINOR, SAMUEL., delegate XXIXth district :

leave of absence granted to..... 429

incidental remarks by..... 146 235, 427

remarks by—

on special municipal laws..... 230

MITCHELL, LEWIS Z., del. XXVith district :

leave of absence granted to..... 429

incidental remarks by..... 429

remarks by—

on the present establishment of the courts of common pleas..... 255

Money, laws authorizing loaning of, for the State to specify the purpose, 130

Moneys of the State to be kept at interest for the benefit of the State..... 152

remarks on, by—

Mr. Alricks 150

Mr. Broomall 132, 153

Mr. Curtin..... 152, 153

Mr. Darlington..... 153

Mr. Howard 154

Mr. Harry White..... 155

MOTT, HENRY S., delegate XIIIth district :

leave of absence granted to..... 166

incidental remarks by..... 30

remarks by—

on the legal rate of interest 133

Municipal authorities, power of to make local improvement and assess special tax..... 98

remarks on, by—

Mr. Buckalew 98, 99, 100

Mr. Cuyler..... 99, 101

Mr. Ewing..... 98, 102, 103

Mr. Hanna..... 100

Mr. Wherry..... 100

Mr. Worrell..... 101

Municipal indebtedness, limitation of 141

remarks on, by—

Mr. Boyd 144, 145

Mr. Buckalew 143, 144

Mr. J. W. F. White 143, 145

Municipal indebtedness, annual tax to be levied for the payment of interest and principal on 146

remarks on, by—

Mr. Calvin..... 233

Mr. Newlin..... 232, 233

Mr. Temple 233

Municipal officers, ineligibility of.....	234
Municipal taxation, the Legislature not to exempt property from	235
Municipality, Legislature not to pass special laws creating any	224
remarks on, by—
Mr. Alricks.....	226
Mr. Armstrong	228
Mr. Bardsley.....	230
Mr. Biddle.....	226, 231, 232
Mr. Dallas.....	225, 227, 228
Mr. De France	232
Mr. Ewing	228, 229, 230
Mr. Littleton	225, 226, 227, 228
Mr. Minor	230
Mr. Newlin.....	224, 229
Mr. Simpson.....	226
Mr. Temple	227
Mr. Turrell.....	227
MURPHY, D. F., official reporter, res- olution relative to pay of.....	756

N.

NEWLIN, JAMES W. M., delegate 1st district:
incidental remarks by, 214, 234, 433, 439, 672, 753.
remarks by—
on special municipal laws.....	224, 229
on municipal indebtedness.....	232, 233
on the establishment of the Phil- adelphia courts	262
Newspapers having largest circulation to publish legal notices.....	516
remarks on, by—
Mr. Cochran	516
Newspapers, printing of legal notices in	444
remarks on, by—
Mr. Baer	447
Mr. Patton	444
Mr. H. W. Smith.....	447
Newspapers, transportation compa- nies not to prevent the sale or car- riage of.....	753
NILES, JEROME B., delegate XIVth district:
report made, by—
from committee on legislation, lo- cating the Capitol of the State at Harrisburg	534
incidental remarks by, 39, 43, 71, 84, 92, 149, 157, 187, 202, 211, 215, 229, 234, 235, 236, 398, 403, 421, 423, 427, 534, 704, 712, 725, 752.
remarks by—
on the taxation of manufacturing corporations.....	104
on the election and qualifications of aldermen.....	317

52—Vol. VI.

NILES, JEROME B.—Continued.

remarks by—
on railroad and canal companies guaranteeing the stock of other corporations.....	563, 565
on borough or city regulating the grade and rate of speed of rail- roads within its limits	751
Nisi Prius Court, Supreme, for Philadelphia.....	518
remarks on, by—
Mr. Alricks.....	519
Mr. Corbett	521
Mr. Cuyler.....	518
Mr. Howard.....	522

O.

OATHS OF OFFICE, article on second reading.....	88
section 1. Oaths prescribed mem- bers of the General Assembly, all judicial, State and county officers; considered.....	88 amendment of Mr. Kaine, 88; adopted by yeas and nays, 92.
amendment of Mr. Harry White to amendment, 90; rejected, 90; reconsidered, 92; adopted, 92.
amendment of Mr. Corbett to amendment, 91; adopted, 91. amendment of Mr. Ewing to amendment, 91; rejected, 91.
remarks on, by—
Mr. Kaine.....	88, 89
the section as amended was not agreed to by yeas and nays.....	92
reconsideration of.....	171
amendment of Mr. Buckalew, 172; adopted, 174.
amendment of Mr. Buckalew, 175; adopted, 175.
amendment of Mr. Harry White, 175; adopted, 175.
remarks on, by—
Mr. Calvin.....	174
Mr. Cochran.....	173
Mr. T. H. B. Patterson.....	173
Mr. Harry White.....	173, 174
the section as amended, agreed to,	176
new section proposed by Mr. Wherry, that all officers sub- scribe to an oath relative to their election, to receiving bribes, etc.; considered.....	176
the section was not agreed to.....	176
new section proposed by Mr. J. M. Bailey, providing for an oath for members of the General As- sembly to be taken after the sine die adjournment; consid- ered.....	176 amendment of Mr. Broomall, 187 ; ruled out of order..... amendment of Mr. J. S. Black, 188 ; accepted, 188. amendment Mr. of J. N. Purviance, 190 ; rejected, 192.

Oaths of Office—Continued.

remarks on, by—
Mr. Beebe.....	187
Mr. C. A. Black.....	188
Mr. J. S. Black.....	177, 180, 181
Mr. Cochran.....	179, 181
Mr. Corbett.....	183
Mr. Curry.....	185
Mr. Kaine.....	185
Mr. Knight.....	190
Mr. H. W. Palmer.....	184
Mr. D. W. Patterson.....	182
Mr. Purman.....	181
Mr. J. N. Purviance.....	191
the section was agreed by yeas and nays.....	193
article referred to Committee on Revision and Adjustment.....	193
Office, ineligibility to.....	209, 236
Officers of the county, relative to.....	195
remarks on, by—
Mr. Ewing.....	199
Mr. Hanna.....	200
Mr. Howard.....	201
Mr. Hunsicker.....	200, 201
Mr. MacConnell.....	199
Mr. S. A. Purviance.....	199
Mr. J. W. F. White.....	198
Officers of corporations, election of managing.....	38
remarks on, by—
Mr. Buckalew.....	37
Mr. Cuyler.....	37
Officers of the county, term of.....	203
when term to begin.....	212
strict accountability of.....	209
to be paid by salary.....	204
remarks on, by—
Mr. Clark.....	208
Mr. A. Reed.....	209
Mr. H. G. Smith.....	208
Mr. J. W. F. White.....	206
Official misconduct, power of council of cities to investigate.....	235
Office of railroad and canal companies for the transaction of business.....	555
remarks on by—
Mr. J. M. Wetherill.....	556
Orphans' court, powers of registers' court vested in.....	440
remarks on, by—
Mr. Armstrong.....	435, 436, 437, 440
Mr. Campbell.....	432
Mr. Cochran.....	442
Mr. Darlington.....	436

Orphans' court—Continued.

remarks on, by—
Mr. Hanna.....	406, 429, 433
Mr. Lilly.....	439
Mr. Littleton.....	438
Mr. D. W. Patterson.....	434, 438, 439
Mr. Simpson.....	430
Orphans' court, the establishment of separate.....	527
remarks on, by—
Mr. Armstrong.....	528, 535, 536, 538
Mr. Baer.....	531
Mr. Buckalew.....	529, 530
Mr. Cochran.....	528, 535, 537
Mr. Ewing.....	529
Mr. Hanna.....	530
Mr. M'Clean.....	538
Mr. Harry White.....	531, 532
Oyer and terminer, judge of common pleas to be a justice of.....	280

P.

PALMER, HENRY W., delegate XIIth district.....	47
appointed on committee on place of summer sitting of Convention.....	85
communication presented by— from citizens of Wilkesbarre, in- viting Convention to meet in that city.....	61
resolution submitted by— relative to holding sessions in some other place than Philadel- phia.....	360
incidental remarks by, 39, 40, 53, 61, 82, 92, 95, 96, 169, 187, 212, 236, 241, 404, 449, 517, 524, 548, 585, 587.
remarks by—
on appropriations to sectarian schools.....	83
on the taxation of manufacturing corporations.....	106
on oath prescribed members of Assembly after sine die adjourn- ment.....	184
on the legislative power of cities, 216
on the removal of criminal cases to the Supreme Court.....	282
on separate judicial districts for each county.....	508
on providing for filling office of associate judge.....	525
on dispensing with trial by jury in civil cases.....	526
on preventing corporations doing the business of a common car- rier from mining and manufac- turing.....	574
PARSONS, HENRY C., delegate XVth district :
leave of absence granted to.....	166

PARSONS, HENRY C.— Continued. communication presented by—
from the mayor of Williamsport, extending invitation to Convention to meet in that city..	354
resolution submitted by—directing committee on accounts and expenditures to report resolution for pay of clerks, etc.....	588 Passengers.— See Freight. not to be subject to any inconvenience by stopping off at intermediate points.....	705
PATTERSON, DAVID W., delegate IXth
district:
incidental remarks by, 79, 94, 175,
315, 412, 422, 425, 427, 440, 442, 443,
512, 513, 537, 539, 684, 732, 735.
remarks by—
on the establishment of industrial
schools..	74
on oath prescribed members of Assembly after sine die adjournment	182
on the election and qualifications
of aldermen	315
on the abolishing the registers'
court.....	434, 438, 439
on separate judicial districts for
each county.....	501
on providing for a recess of the
Convention.....	733
PATTERSON, THOMAS H. B., delegate XXIIId district:
leave of absence, granted to	214
incidental remarks by, 160, 202, 279,
336, 410, 411, 424, 550, 553, 555, 668,
669, 685, 689, 735, 736.
remarks by—
on oath of office	173
on railroad and canal companies guaranteeing the stock of other
corporations	570
on preventing corporations doing
the business of a common carrier from mining or manufac-
turing.....	583, 584, 597
on discrimination in freight or
passage by railroad companies, 640, 647, 687.
PATTON, JOSEPH G., delegate XIVth
district:
incidental remarks by	135, 424, 516.
remarks by—
on newspaper publications of legal notices	444
Philadelphia and Allegheny county, establishment of courts of.....	256
remarks on, by—
Mr. Armstrong.....	267, 269

Philadelphia and Allegheny— Continued.
remarks on, by—
Mr. Biddle.....	260, 278
Mr. Bullitt.....	264
Mr. Campbell.....	258
Mr. Cassidy.....	256
Mr. Dallas.....	256, 266, 275, 276, 277
Mr. Hanna.....	263
Mr. Heverin.....	270, 271
Mr. MacConnell.....	274
Mr. Newlin.....	262
Mr. J. R. Read.....	258
Mr. Temple.....	272, 273
Mr. Woodward.....	264, 265
Mr. Worrell.....	259, 260
Philadelphia, appointment of prothonotary of	279
criminal courts of.....	280
police courts, establishment of in,	314
Pittsburg, election and jurisdiction of aldermen in.....	353
remarks on, by—
Mr. Armstrong.....	460
Mr. Cuyler.....	457
Mr. Ewing.....	459
Mr. Hay.....	453, 455, 460
Mr. MacConnell.....	457
Mr. S. A. Purviance.....	460
Mr. Wm. H. Smith.....	458
Mr. J. W. E. White.....	456
Police court, establishment of in Philadelphia.....	314
PORTER, DANIEL S., del. XXIVth
district:
leave of absence granted to.....	166
Printing accounts, report of committee on.....	673, 684
Process of the courts, style of.....	448
remarks on, by—
Mr. Armstrong.....	450
Mr. J. S. Black.....	448
Mr. Darlington.....	451
Mr. Kaine.....	451
Mr. Harry White.....	450
Process, all powers regulating to be uniform.....	507
Property, certain exempt from taxation	93
heretofore exempted to be void.....	95 of manufacturing corporations to be taxed as individuals.....	103 damages to, by railroad or canal
companies	716
remarks on, by—
Mr. Alricks.....	739
Mr. Biddle.....	740, 741
Mr. Bigler.....	738
Mr. Corbett.....	743
Mr. Funk.....	716
Mr. Lamberton.....	745
Mr. MacConnell.....	712, 743

Property, &c.—Continued.

- remarks on, by—
 Mr. A. Reed..... 744, 745
 Mr. J. W. F. White 743
- Prosecution, form of.—See Process.
- Prothonotary of Philadelphia courts, to be appointed by the judges..... 279
- Public instruction, superintendent of to be appointed by Governor..... 40
- Public schools, Legislature to provide for a thorough and efficient system of..... 38, 80 money raised for not to be appropriated for sectarian schools..... 40, 83 one million dollars at least to be annually appropriated for 38
- PUGHE, LEWIS, delegate XIIIth district:
 leave of absence granted to..... 166
 remarks by—
 on separate judicial districts for
 each county 476
- PURMAN, ANDREW A., delegate at large:
 incidental remarks by, 127, 129, 193, 392.
 remarks by—
 on the establishment of industrial schools. 61
 on oath prescribed members of Assembly after sine die adjournment..... 181
 on the payment of the State debt, 149, 150.
 on the removal of criminal cases to
 the Supreme Court..... 291
 on accepting the resignation of Mr.
 Woodward 352
 on separate judicial districts for
 each county 484
 on dispensing with trial by jury in civil cases 526
 on discrimination in freight or passage by railroad companies, 652, 687.
- PURVIANCE, JOHN N., del. XXVIth
 district:
 leaves of absence granted to, 166, 646, 719.
 rises to a personal explanation..... 110
 incidental remarks by, 60, 102, 190, 210, 502.
 remarks by—
 on oath prescribed members of Assembly after sine die adjournment..... 191
 on the taxation of manufacturing
 corporations 123
 on separate judicial districts for
 each county 489
 on the death of Mr. Meredith 769

PURVIANCE, SAMUEL A., del. XXIIIrd
 district:

- leave of absence granted to..... 355
 incidental remarks by, 160, 161,
 194, 195, 196, 197, 193, 202, 203, 204,
 205, 206, 207, 209, 210, 212, 216,
 219, 228, 247, 252, 279, 280, 394,
 455, 461, 463, 466, 585, 721.
 remarks by—
 on the levying of special taxes 157
 on county officers 199
 on the term of Supreme Court
 judges 242
 on the resignation of Mr. Woodward 353
 on acts of the Assembly passed by
 bribery..... 372
 on the election and qualifications of aldermen in Pittsburg and Allegheny 460
 on separate judicial districts for each county..... 477
 on the Supreme Court providing rules of practice in all the courts.. 515 on discrimination in freight or passage by railroad companies ... 692, 694 on providing for a recess of the Convention..... 725
 on creating the office of Secretary of Internal Affairs..... 748

R.

- RAILROADS AND CANALS; article on second reading..... 549
- section 1. Any individual, company or corporation, organized for the purpose, shall have the right to construct a railroad or canal between any two points in the State; considered..... 549 amendment of Mr. T. H. B. Patterson, 550; adopted, 554.
 amendment of Mr. Brodhead, 554;
 rejected, 555.
 amendment of Mr. Brodhead, 555;
 rejected, 555.
 amendment of Mr. Cochran, 555;
 adopted, 555.
 amendment of Mr. Corson, 555; rejected, 555.
 remarks on, by—
 Mr. Bigler..... 550, 552, 553
 Mr. Kaine..... 554
 the section was agreed to..... 555
- section 2. Every railroad or canal corporation shall maintain an office for the transaction of its business; considered 555 amendment of Mr. J. R. Read, 555;
 rejected, 555.

Railroads and canals—Continued.

- amendment of Mr. Brodhead, 555;
rejected, 556.
- amendment of Mr. J. M. Wetherill, 556; rejected, 557.
- amendment of Mr. Cochran, 557;
adopted, 557.
- amendment of Mr. Fell, 557;
adopted, 557.
- remarks on, by—
Mr. J. M. Wetherill..... 556
- the section as amended was agreed to..... 557
- section 3. Relative to the taxation of the property of railroad and canal corporations; considered..... 557
- the section was agreed to..... 558
- section 4. Relative to sale or lease of franchises of one corporation by another; considered..... 558
- the section was agreed to..... 558
- section 5. No railroad or canal corporation shall guarantee the stock of any other corporation;
considered..... 558
- amendment of Mr. J. Baily, 558, rejected by yeas and nays, 562.
- amendment of Mr. Cochran, 562,
rejected, 570.
- remarks on, by—
Mr. Armstrong..... 565
- Mr. Joseph Baily..... 558
- Mr. Bigler..... 566
- Mr. Broomall..... 571
- Mr. Cochran..... 562
- Mr. Curtin..... 569
- Mr. Cuyler..... 568
- Mr. Howard..... 568
- Mr. Mann..... 564
- Mr. Niles..... 563, 565
- Mr. T. H. B. Patterson..... 570
- Mr. Turrell..... 565
- Mr. J. P. Wetherill..... 567
- the section was not agreed to, by
yeas and nays..... 572
- section 6. Preventing corporations doing the business of a common carrier from engaging in mining or manufacturing; considered... 572
- amendment of Mr. Fulton, 572, adopted by yeas and nays, 585.
- amendment of Mr. Cochran, 585,
adopted, 585.
- amendment of Mr. Bullitt, 594,
withdrawn, 597.
- amendment of Mr. Buckalew, 597,
withdrawn, 600.
- amendment of Mr. Baer, 600, rejected by yeas and nays, 604.
- amendment of Mr. Cochran, to amendment, 603, rejected, 603.

Railroads and canals—Continued.

- amendment of Mr. Kaine to amendment, 604; adopted, 604.
- amendment of Mr. J. S. Black, 604; withdrawn, 605.
- remarks on, by—
Mr. Armstrong..... 578, 600, 601
- Mr. Baer..... 599, 600
- Mr. Biddle..... 592, 593
- Mr. Bigler..... 591
- Mr. J. S. Black..... 602
- Mr. Buckalew..... 582, 583, 597, 598
- Mr. Bullitt..... 594
- Mr. Carter..... 595, 596
- Mr. Cochran..... 575, 585, 603
- Mr. Cuyler..... 577
- Mr. Darlington..... 574
- Mr. Fulton..... 572
- Mr. Howard..... 580, 598
- Mr. Lilly..... 580
- Mr. H. W. Palmer..... 574
- Mr. T. H. B. Patterson, 583, 584, 597
- Mr. Andrew Reed..... 573
- Mr. Sharpe..... 589
- Mr. J. P. Wetherill..... 581
- Mr. Harry White..... 576
- Mr. J. W. F. White..... 591, 592
- the section was agreed to by yeas
and nays..... 605
- new section proposed by Mr. Bullitt, officers and employees of railroad and canal companies shall not engage or be interested otherwise than as stockholders in the transportation of freight or passengers; considered..... 605
- amendment of Mr. Bigler, 606;
rejected, 607.
- remarks on, by—
Mr. Bullitt..... 606, 607
- Mr. Howard..... 607
- the section was agreed to by yeas
and nays..... 608
- new section proposed by Mr. Alricks, that any combination of railroad companies to unreasonably increase their rates shall work a forfeiture of their charter; considered..... 608
- remarks on, by—
Mr. Alricks..... 608
- the section was not agreed to by
yeas and nays..... 609
- new section proposed by Mr. Howard, that no railroad, canal or other company, shall guarantee the bonds or stocks of any other corporation; considered, 609
- remarks on, by—
Mr. Howard..... 610

Railroads and canals—Continued.

- the section was not agreed to by yeas and nays 610
- section 7. No discrimination to be made in freight or passage; considered..... 611
- amendment of Mr. J. P. Wetherill, 611; rejected by yeas and nays..... 641
- amendment of Mr. Baer, 642, adopted by yeas and nays 644
- amendment of Mr. Corson, 644; rejected, 644.
- amendment of Mr. Ewing, 644; rejected, 645.
- amendment of Mr. T. H. B. Patterson, 647; adopted, 686.
- amendment of Mr. Baer to amendment, 650; rejected, 653.
- amendment of Mr. Armstrong, to amendment, 655; modified, 668; rejected by yeas and nays, 670; reconsidered, 684; again rejected by yeas and nays, 685.
- amendment of Mr. Lilly, 688; rejected, 686.
- amendment of Mr. Buckalew, 687; adopted, 687.
- remarks on, by—
- Mr. Ainey..... 620, 621
- Mr. Armstrong..... 653, 655, 656, 684
- Mr. Baer..... 621, 942, 649
- Mr. J. M. Bailey..... 630
- Mr. Broomall..... 630
- Mr. Buckalew 644, 686
- Mr. Campbell 619
- Mr. Clark 664
- Mr. Cochran.....634, 650, 651, 664
- Mr. Curtin..... 633
- Mr. Cuyler.....623, 657, 660, 661
- Mr. Dunning..... 636
- Mr. Gilpin 638
- Mr. Howard..... 626, 642, 666, 667
- Mr. Knight 643
- Mr. Landis..... 662
- Mr. Lilly 621, 656
- Mr. M'Murray 626
- Mr. T. H. B. Patterson.....640, 647, 687
- Mr. Purman..... 652, 687
- Mr. J. R. Read..... 612, 613
- Mr. A. Reed..... 637
- Mr. Rooke..... 628
- Mr. Wm. H. Smith..... 624, 625
- Mr. Stewart..... 639
- Mr. J. P. Wetherill..... 611
- the section was agreed to by yeas and nays..... 688
- section 8. All railroads and canals declared public highways; considered..... 688

Railroads and canals—Continued.

- amendment of Mr. Fulton, 688; modified, 689; adopted, 689.
- amendment of Mr. Corbett, 690; rejected, 692.
- remarks on, by—
- Mr. Armstrong..... 691
- Mr. Buckalew..... 690, 691
- Mr. Cochran..... 688, 691
- the section was agreed to by yeas and nays, 690; reconsidered, 690; agreed to, 692.
- new section proposed by Mr. S. A. Purviance, prohibiting all discriminations in rates of freight or passage; considered..... 692
- amendment of Mr. Buckalew, 694; adopted, 695.
- remarks on, by—
- Mr. S. A. Purviance..... 692, 694
- Mr. Harry White..... 694
- the section was adopted by yeas and nays..... 696
- new section proposed by Mr. Knight, prohibiting railroad companies from granting free passes; considered..... 696
- amendment of Mr. Cochran, 696; withdrawn, 697.
- amendment of Mr. Harry White, 697; rejected by yeas and nays, 702.
- amendment of Mr. Harry White, 702; rejected by yeas and nays, 704.
- amendment of Mr. Campbell, 704; withdrawn, 705.
- remarks on, by—
- Mr. Atricks..... 700
- Mr. Buckalew..... 703
- Mr. Carter..... 701
- Mr. Cochran..... 696, 700
- Mr. Corson..... 700
- Mr. Curtin..... 698
- Mr. Howard..... 699
- Mr. Knight..... 699
- Mr. Temple 703
- Mr. Harry White..... 697, 698
- the section was agreed to by yeas and nays..... 705
- new section proposed by Mr. Cochran, passengers not to be subject to any inconvenience by stopping off at intermediate points, considered..... 705
- amendment of Mr. Lilly, 706; withdrawn..... 706
- the section was not agreed to by yeas and nays..... 707

Railroads and canals—Continued.

section 9. No railroad, canal or transportation company shall issue stock or bonds except for money, labor or property actually received; considered.....	707 amendment of Mr. Brodhead, 707; withdrawn, 707.
amendment of Mr. Cochran, 707; adopted by yeas and nays, 711.
amendment of Mr. Brodhead to amendment, 708; adopted by yeas and nays, 709.
amendment of Mr. Ewing to amendment, 710, adopted, 710.
amendment of Mr. Brodhead, 710; rejected, 710.
remarks on, by—
Mr. Brodhead.....	708
Mr. Broomall.....	708
Mr. Cochran.....	707
Mr. Howard.....	713
Mr. Harry White.....	711, 713
the first division was agreed to by yeas and nays.....	715
the second division was not agreed to by yeas and nays.....	715
section 10. Relative to payment of damages to property; considered.....	716 amendment of Mr. Kaine, 716; rejected, 716.
amendment of Mr. Funck, 716; adopted, 746.
amendment of Mr. Bigler to amendment, 739; withdrawn, 741. amendment of Mr. Lamberton to amendment, 741; adopted, 745.
remarks on, by—
Mr. Alricks.....	739
Mr. Biddle.....	740, 741
Mr. Bigler.....	738
Mr. Corbett.....	743
Mr. Funck.....	716
Mr. Lamberton.....	745
Mr. MacConnell.....	742, 743
Mr. A. Reed.....	744, 745
Mr. J. W. F. White.....	743
the section as amended was agreed to.....	746
section 11. No street passenger railway shall be constructed without the consent of the local authorities; considered.....	746
the section was agreed to.....	746
section 12. No beneficial legislation by general or special laws, considered.....	746
the section was agreed to.....	746

Railroads and canals—Continued.

section 13. Creating the office of Secretary of Internal Affairs; considered.....	746 amendment of Mr. J. P. Wetherill, 746; rejected, 749. amendment of Mr. Biddle, 749; adopted, 750.
remarks on, by—
Mr. Biddle.....	749
Mr. Cochran.....	747
Mr. Howard.....	747
Mr. S. A. Purviance.....	748
Mr. J. P. Wetherill.....	746
the section as amended was agreed to.....	750
section 14. Railroad companies to have the right to connect their railroads by proper connections; considered.....	750
the section was not agreed to.....	750
new section proposed by Mr. Cochran, giving authority to every borough or city to regulate the grade and rate of speed within its limits; considered.....	750 amendment of Mr. Campbell, 751; rejected, 752.
amendment of Mr. Niles, 752; rejected, 753.
remarks on, by—
Mr. Buckalew.....	752
Mr. Campbell.....	750, 752
Mr. Lilly.....	752
Mr. Mann.....	752
Mr. Niles.....	751
Mr. Turrell.....	751
the section was not agreed to by yeas and nays.....	753
new section proposed by Mr. Newlin, that no transportation company shall prevent the sale or carriage of any newspaper; considered.....	753 amendment of Mr. Dallas, 754; rejected, 754.
the section was not agreed to.....	754
article referred to Committee on Revision and Adjustment.....	754
READ, JOHN R., delegate from 11d district:
incidental remarks by, 4, 234, 332, 333, 555.
remarks by—
on the legislative power of cities, 222
on the establishment of the Philadelphia courts.....	258
on the election and qualifications of aldermen.....	320, 321, 335

READ, JOHN R.—Continued.

remarks by—
on discrimination in freight or passage by railroad companies,
612, 613.
Recess of the Convention.— See Con- vention. resolution of Mr. Hemphill, proposing, until 16th September.....	167
Record, court of, right of appeal to ...	338
Reed, Chas. M., mayor of Erie, communication from, inviting Convention to that city.....	480
REED, ANDREW, delegate XXth district:
incidental remarks by, 105, 196, 204, 209, 391, 504, 525, 542, 714.
remarks by—
on banking rates of interest.....	13
on fixed salaries for county officers.....	207
on acts of the Assembly passed by
bribery	390
on vacancies to be filled for the unexpired term.....	541, 542
on preventing corporations doing
the business of a common carrier from mining or manufac-
turing.....	573
on discrimination in freight or passage by railroad companies, 637
on damages to property by railroad and other corporations, 744, 745.
Register's court, abolishment of, and powers of vested in orphans' court,	404
remarks on, by—
Mr. Armstrong.....	435, 436, 437, 440
Mr. Campbell.....	432
Mr. Cochran.....	442
Mr. Darlington.....	436
Mr. Hanna.....	406, 429, 433
Mr. Lilly.....	439
Mr. Littleton.....	438
Mr. D. W. Patterson.....	434, 438, 439
Mr. Simpson	430
Resignation of Mr. Woodward tendered	349
debate upon acceptance of.....	349-554
not accepted.....	354
Resolutions:
to appoint a committee to report a place for summer sittings of Convention.....	60
proposing recess until Sept. 16th.....	167
to adjourn over to Monday.....	167, 170 to adjourn Convention to meet at Harrisburg, [Mr. Lamberton].....	171 relative to adjournment of Convention, [Mr. Hunsicker].....	212

Resolutions—Continued.

relative to adjournment of Convention, [Mr. Wright].....	214
relative to adjournment of Convention, [Mr. Baer]	237
providing for meeting of Convention in the Hall of the House of Representatives at Harrisburg,
[Mr. Alricks]	238
fixing hours of daily sessions... 290, 647
relative to adjournment.....	355, 419, 420
to provide for summer recess, [Mr.
Sharpe]	359
to provide for summer recess, [Mr.
H. W. Palmer].....	360
to provide for summer recess, [Mr.
Temple]..	409
to provide for summer recess, [Mr.
Broomall].....	409
to provide for summer recess, [Mr.
Ainey]	419
relative to printing the Debates.....	423 to pay expenses of McAllister memorial.....	533
to pay W. W. Harding for printing paper.....	534
directing Committee on Accounts and Expenditures to provide for
pay of officers.....	585
of Mr. Buckalew providing for a recess and the submission of the Constitution.....	588 to provide for appointment of committee to prepare an address to the people.....	588
proposing a recess to fifteenth September, (Mr. D. N. White)	672 directing Committee on Revision and Adjustment to prepare articles for publication.....	735 to prolong the morning sessions without recess.....	736 to add chairman of each committee to Committee on Revision and Adjustment.....	737 relative to money derived from sale
of drapery	737
directing Committee on House to have entire charge of Hall during the recess	737
authorizing the Committee on Accounts and Expenditures to sit during the recess	737
relative to pay of Benj. Singery, Printer to the Convention	738
to pay D. F. Murphy, Official Reporter.....	756
relative to the death of Hon. Wm.
M. Meredith, President of the
Convention.....	758

Revenue and Taxation, article on, second reading	92
section 1. All taxes to be uniform, certain property exempt from taxation; considered.....	93 amendment of Mr. Campbell, 93; rejected, 94.
amendment of Mr. Harry White, 94; rejected, 95.
remarks on, by—
Mr. Broomall	93
Mr. Harry White	93, 94
the section was agreed to.....	95
section 2. All laws heretofore passed exempting property not speci- fied in former section, to be void; considered.....	95 amendment of Mr. Broomall, 96; adopted, 96. amendment of Mr. Hay, 96; re- jected, 97. amendment of Mr. Alricks, 97; withdrawn, 97.
amendment of Mr. Armstrong, 98; adopted, 98.
remarks on, by—
Mr. Hay	96
the section as amended was agreed to.....	98
section 3. The corporate authori- ties of cities, boroughs and town- ships to have the power to make local improvements and assess special tax therefore; consid- ered	98 amendment of Mr. Ewing, 98; modified, 99; rejected, 101.
amendment of Mr. Cuyler, 101; rejected by yeas and nays, 102.
remarks on, by—
Mr. Buckalew.....	98, 99, 100
Mr. Cuyler.....	99, 101
Mr. Ewing.....	98, 102, 103
Mr. Hanna.....	100
Mr. Wherry.....	100
Mr. Worrell.....	101
the section was not agreed to by yeas and nays	103
section 4. The property and busi- ness of manufacturing corpora- tions shall not be taxed in any other manner or rate than that of individuals; considered.....	103 amendment of Mr. Dodd, 103; adopted by yeas and nays, 106.
amendment of Mr. MacConnell, 125; rejected by yeas and nays, 128.
remarks on, by—
Mr. Ainey.....	120
Mr. Armstrong.....	113, 125

Revenue and Taxation—Continued.

remarks on, by—
Mr. Bardsley.....	117
Mr. Bigler.....	121
Mr. Bowman.....	121
Mr. Broomall.....	104, 117
Mr. Buckalew.....	106
Mr. Calvin.....	119
Mr. Carey.....	112
Mr. Cochran.....	106
Mr. Ewing.....	114
Mr. Howard.....	122
Mr. MacConnell.....	125
Mr. Mann.....	105, 126, 127
Mr. Niles.....	104
Mr. H. W. Palmer.....	106
Mr. J. N. Purviance.....	123
Mr. H. W. Smith.....	118
Mr. Struthers.....	128
Mr. J. P. Wetherill.....	108, 110
Mr. Harry White.....	104, 115
the section was not agreed to by yeas and nays	129
section 5. No debt to be created by or on behalf of the State; con- sidered.....	130
the section was agreed to.....	130
section 6. All laws authorizing the borrowing of money by and on behalf of the State, shall specify the purpose; considered.....	130
the section was agreed to.....	130
new section proposed by Mr. Knight, making the legal rate of interest seven per cent; considered.....	130 amendment of Mr. Baer, 137; re- jected by yeas and nays, 139.
amendment of Mr. J. M. Wethe- rill, 139; rejected, 139.
remarks on, by—
Mr. Baer.....	136
Mr. Biddle.....	133
Mr. Bowman.....	134
Mr. Carey.....	135
Mr. Dunning.....	132, 137
Mr. Knight.....	130, 132
Mr. Lear.....	137
Mr. Mott.....	133
Mr. Stanton.....	135
the section was not agreed to by yeas and nays	140
section 7. The State, nor county, city, borough or township shall not loan its credit; considered.....	140
the section was agreed to.....	141
section 8. No county, township, school district or municipal cor- poration shall become indebted to an amount exceeding two per centum on assessed valua- tion of property; considered....	141

Revenue and Taxation—Continued.

- amendment of Mr. Broomall, 141;
adopted by yeas and nays, 146.
- amendment of Mr. Buckalew to amendment, 143; accepted, 144.
- remarks on, by—
 - Mr. Boyd 144, 145
 - Mr. Buckalew 143, 144
 - Mr. J. W. F. White 143, 145
- the section as amended was agreed
to 146
- section 9. Provision to be made for collection of an annual tax sufficient to pay the interest, and also the principal within thirty years; considered 146
- the section was agreed to by yeas
and nays 147
- section 10. To provide for the payment of the present State debt, and the establishment of the sinking fund; considered 147
- amendment of Mr. Harry White,
148; adopted, 148.
- amendment of Mr. Darlington, 148;
adopted, 148.
- amendment of Mr. Struthers, 148;
adopted, 148.
- remarks on, by—
 - Mr. Harry White 147
- the section as amended was agreed
to 148
- section 11. All moneys of the State over and above the necessary reserve, shall be applied to the payment of the State debt; considered 148
- amendment of Mr. Darlington,
148; rejected, 150.
- amendment of Mr. Kaine, 150;
adopted, 151.
- amendment of Mr. H. W. Smith,
151; rejected by yeas and nays,
151.
- remarks on, by—
 - Mr. Purman 149, 150
 - Mr. Harry White 149
- the section as amended was agreed
to 151
- section 12. All moneys of the State to be kept at interest for the benefit of the State; considered, 152
- amendment of Mr. Alricks, 152;
rejected, 156.
- amendment of Mr. C. A. Black to amendment, 154; accepted, 154;
withdrawn, 155.
- amendment of Mr. Harry White to amendment, 156; rejected, 156.

Revenue and Taxation—Continued.

- amendment of Mr. Broomall, 156;
adopted, 156.
- amendment of Mr. Broomall, 156;
adopted, 157.
- amendment of Mr. M'Murray,
157; adopted, 157.
- remarks on, by—
 - Mr. Alricks. 150
 - Mr. Broomall. 152, 153
 - Mr. Curtin. 152, 153
 - Mr. Darlington. 153
 - Mr. Howard. 154
 - Mr. Harry White. 155
- the section as amended was agreed
to by yeas and nays 157
- new section proposed by Mr. S. A.
Purviance, to prevent the Legislature authorizing the levying of a special tax on one class for the benefit of another class; considered 157
- remarks on, by—
 - Mr. MacConnell 158
 - Mr. S. A. Purviance 157
 - Mr. Woodward. 158, 159, 160
- the section was agreed to 161
- new section proposed by Mr. T. H.
B. Patterson, that the Commonwealth shall not assume the debt of any county, city, borough or township; considered 160
- the section was agreed to 161
- article referred to Committee on Revision and Adjustment 161
- Revision and Adjustment, committee on, article on Cities and City Charters, referred to 237
- article on corporations, referred to... 38
- article on county, township and borough officers, referred to 212
- article on education, referred to 87
- article on the judiciary, referred to, 549
- article on oaths of office, referred to, 193
- article on railroads and canals, referred to 754
- article on revenue and taxation, referred to 161
- resolution directing to prepare articles for publication 735
- resolution to add chairman of each committee to 737
- REYNOLDS, JAMES L., delegate at large:
incidental remarks by 208
- ROOKE, LEVI, delegate XVIIth district:
remarks by—
on discrimination in freight or
passage by railroad companies.. 628

- ROSS, GEORGE, delegate VIth district :
 leave of absence granted to..... 588
 incidental remarks by 410, 543
 remarks by—
 on the removal of criminal cases
 to the Supreme Court..... 283
 on the election and qualifications
 of aldermen..... 316
- RUNK, CHARLES M., delegate XIth district :
 incidental remarks by 74, 86, 87
 remarks by—
 on the establishment of industrial
 schools 70, 71, 72, 73, 75
- Rules of practice in the courts, Supreme Court to provide..... 514
 remarks on, by—
 Mr. Armstrong..... 514
 Mr. Kaine..... 516
 Mr. S. A. Purviance..... 515
- RUSSELL, SAMUEL L., delegate XXIth district :
 leave of absence granted to..... 355
 appointed on committee on place of summer sitting of Convention..... 85
 incidental remarks by, 87, 212, 240, 241, 271, 309, 689.
- S.
- SCHEDULE, committee on, proposition of Mr. Harry White relative to article on legislation referred to 140
- Schools.—See Public Schools.
- School books, no officer or teacher to be interested in 87
- Schools for neglected children, English newspaper communication on, presented by Mr. Stanton..... 68 letter from E. E. Wines, of the National Prison association, on.... 69
- Sciences, promotion and encouragement of..... 41 schools for free instruction in, to be established..... 87
- Secretary of Internal Affairs, creating office of..... 746
 remarks on, by—
 Mr. Biddle..... 749
 Mr. Cochran..... 747
 Mr. Howard..... 747
 Mr. S. A. Purviance..... 748
 Mr. J. P. Wetherill..... 746
- Sectarian schools, money raised for the support of public schools not to be appropriated to 40, 83
 remarks on, by—
 Mr. Broomall..... 83
 Mr. Buckalew..... 84
 Mr. H. W. Palmer..... 83
- Sectarian institutions, no appropriations of public moneys to be made
 to 41
- Sessions of the Convention, resolutions fixing hours of 290, 647
- Seven per cent., the legal rate of interest 130
 remarks on, by—
 Mr. Baer..... 136
 Mr. Biddle..... 133
 Mr. Bowman..... 134
 Mr. Carey..... 135
 Mr. Dunning..... 132, 137
 Mr. Knight..... 130, 132
 Mr. Lear..... 137
 Mr. Mott..... 133
 Mr. Stanton..... 135
- Sex, no distinction of, to be made in compensations of teachers... 85
 remarks on, by—
 Mr. Cochran..... 85
- SHARPE, J. M'DOWELL, delegate
 XIXth district :
 resolutions submitted by—
 to provide for a summer recess of the Convention..... 359
 incidental remarks by, 283, 285, 293,
 336, 370, 376, 391, 392, 393, 411, 438,
 482, 504, 521, 523, 549, 553, 655.
- remarks by—
 on the removal of criminal cases
 to the Supreme Court..... 303, 304
 on accepting resignation of Mr.
 Woodward..... 351
 on adjournment of the Convention 358
 on acts of Assembly passed by
 bribery..... 396
 on separate judicial districts for
 each county..... 480
 on preventing corporations doing
 the business of a common carrier from mining or manufacturing..... 589
 on the death of Mr. Meredith..... 764
- SIMPSON, J. ALEXANDER, delegate IVth district :
 incidental remarks, 195, 197, 215, 234,
 236, 333, 356, 405, 424, 438, 500, 538,
 539, 542, 604, 701, 712, 719.
- remarks by—
 on special municipal laws 226
 on the election and qualifications
 of aldermen 320
 on the requirement of judges to
 be learned in the law..... 340
 on abolishing the registers' court, 430
 on providing for a recess of the Convention..... 721

- Singerly, Benjamin, report of Committee on Accounts and Expenditures, relative to printing account of 673-684 resolution to pay accounts of..... 738
- Sinking fund of the State, establishment of 147
 remarks on, by—
 Mr. Harry White 147
- Sinking fund, every city to create 234
- SMITH, HENRY G., delegate IXth district :
 leave of absence granted to 322
 incidental remarks by, 26, 41, 42, 74, 108, 409, 420, 427, 737.
 remarks by—
 on fixed salaries for county officers 208
- SMITH, HENRY W., delegate VIIIth district :
 leaves of absence granted to 110, 408
 incidental remarks by, 91, 120, 151, 343, 359, 443, 446, 522, 723.
 remarks by—
 on the taxation of municipal corporations..... 118
 on the requirement of judges to be learned in the law 342 on newspaper publication of legal notices..... 447
- SMITH, WILLIAM H., delegate at large :
 leave of absence granted to..... 238
 incidental remarks by 460, 461, 526
 remarks by—
 on the election and qualifications of aldermen in Pittsburg and Allegheny..... 458
 on discrimination in freight or passage by railroad companies, 624, 625
 on providing for a recess of the Convention..... 721
- Specie payment, suspension of not to be permitted..... 28
- Speed of railroads, every borough or city to regulate..... 750
 remarks on, by—
 Mr. Buckalew 752
 Mr. Campbell 750, 752
 Mr. Lilly..... 752
 Mr. Mann..... 752
 Mr. Niles 751
 Mr. Turrell..... 751
- STANTON, M. HALL, delegate IIIth district :
 communication presented by—
 from an English newspaper on schools for neglected children... 68 from E. E. Wines, of the National Prison association, on the same subject..... 69
- STANTON, M. HALL—Continued.
 incidental remarks by, 60, 78, 82, 162, 169, 211, 215, 237, 354, 355, 416, 533, 534, 543, 756, 776.
 remarks by—
 on the establishment of industrial schools..... 50
 on the legal rate of interest..... 135
 on the death of Mr. Meredith 763
- Starkweather, G. W., mayor of Williamsport, communication from 354
- State, all moneys to be kept at interest for the benefit of 152
 remarks on, by—
 Mr. Alricks 150
 Mr. Broomall..... 152, 153
 Mr. Curtin..... 152, 153
 Mr. Darlington..... 153
 Mr. Howard 154
 Mr. Harry White 155
- State debt, moneys of the State over and above the necessary reserve to be applied to payment of 148
 none to be created..... 130 sinking fund established for payment of..... 147
 remarks on, by—
 Mr. Purman 149, 150
 Mr. Harry White..... 149
- State, laws authorizing borrowing money for, to specify purpose..... 130
- State officers, oath prescribed for.. 88, 171
 remarks on, by—
 Mr. Calvin..... 174
 Mr. Cochran..... 173
 Mr. Kaine..... 88, 89
 Mr. T. H. B. Patterson..... 173
 Mr. Harry White..... 173, 174
- STEWART, JOHN, delegate XIXth district :
 leaves of absence granted to... 166, 646
 incidental remarks by, 20, 23, 25, 30, 163, 164, 174, 409, 411, 412, 413, 414, 415, 416, 482, 509, 524, 525, 542, 549, 659.
 remarks by—
 on the establishment of industrial schools 47
 on separate judicial districts for each county..... 482
 on vacancies to be filled for the unexpired term..... 541
 on discrimination in freight or passage by railroad companies... 639
- Street passenger railways, not to be constructed without consent of local authorities..... 746
- Stockholders, cities not to become 234
- Stock, no fictitious issue of, to be permitted..... 707

Stock, &c.—Continued.

remarks on, by—
Mr. Brodhead	708
Mr. Broomall	708
Mr. Cochran	707
Mr. Howard	713
Mr. Harry White	711, 713
Stocks or bonds of corporations not to be guaranteed by any railroad or canal company	518, 609
remarks on, by—
Mr. Armstrong	565
Mr. Jos. Bailly	558
Mr. Bigler	566
Mr. Broomall	571
Mr. Cochran	562
Mr. Curtin	569
Mr. Cuyler	568
Mr. Howard	568
Mr. Mann	564
Mr. Niles	563, 565
Mr. T. H. B. Patterson	570
Mr. Turrell	565
Mr. J. P. Wetherill	567
STRUTHERS, THOMAS, del. XXXth district :
incidental remarks by, 142, 148, 205, 234, 424, 425, 426.
remarks by—
on the taxation of manufacturing corporations	128
on the term of Supreme Court judges	246
Superintendent of Public Instruction, creating office of	40, 85
Supersedeas, removal of criminal cases by the Supreme Court shall not be	281
Supreme Court, number and term of judges of	241
remarks on, by
Mr. Armstrong	241, 242, 243
Mr. Darlington	244
Mr. Kaine	242, 245
Mr. S. A. Purviance	242
Mr. Struthers	246
Mr. Woodward	246
jurisdiction of	247
remarks on, by—
Mr. Armstrong	248, 249
Mr. Broomall	250
Mr. Corbett	248
Mr. Corson	249
Mr. Darlington	247, 248
Mr. Kaine	247
Mr. MacVeagh	247
Mr. Mann	249
removal of criminal cases to	281

Supreme Court, &c.—Continued.

remarks on, by—
Mr. Armstrong	283, 303, 309
Mr. Bartholomew	302
Mr. Beebe	300
Mr. Biddle	304
Mr. J. S. Black	294, 295
Mr. Boyd	293
Mr. Broomall	297
Mr. Buckalew	294, 308
Mr. Cochran	311
Mr. Corbett	312
Mr. Corson	285
Mr. Cuyler	295
Mr. Ellis	305
Mr. Hazzard	288
Mr. Hunsicker	281, 299, 311
Mr. Lear	286
Mr. MacVeagh	309
Mr. Mann	285
Mr. H. W. Palmer	282
Mr. Purman	291
Mr. Ross	283
Mr. Sharpe	303, 304
Mr. Temple	287, 288
judges of, to have power to issue writs of certiorari	313
remarks on, by—
Mr. Kaine	313
cumulative voting provided for when more than one judge of, to be elected	338
residence and qualifications of judges	345
remarks on, by—
Mr. Buckalew	347
Mr. MacVeagh	345
Supreme Court, judicial duties only to be imposed on judges of	404
to provide rules for the system of practice in all the courts	514
remarks on, by—
Mr. Armstrong	514
Mr. Kaine	516
Mr. S. A. Purviance	515
Supreme Court, visi prius , in Phila- delphia, to establish	518
remarks on, by—
Mr. Alricks	519
Mr. Corbett	521
Mr. Cuyler	518
Mr. Howard	522
Supreme Court, to sit in banc in the city of Harrisburg	549
T.
Taxation.— See Revenue.
all laws heretofore exempting from, to be void	95
remarks on, by—
Mr. Hay	96

Taxation—Continued.

exemption of certain property from,	93
from.....	93
remarks on, by—
Mr. Broomall.....	93
Mr. Harry White.....	93, 94
Legislature not to exempt property from municipal.....	235
of foreign insurance companies.....	16
remarks on, by—
Mr. Ewing.....	17
of manufacturing corporations, to be the same as of individuals.....	103
remarks on, by—
Mr. Ainey.....	120
Mr. Armstrong.....	113, 125
Mr. Bardsley.....	117
Mr. Bigler.....	121
Mr. Bowman.....	121
Mr. Broomall.....	104, 117
Mr. Buckalew.....	106
Mr. Calvin.....	119
Mr. Carey.....	112
Mr. Cochran.....	105
Mr. Ewing.....	114
Mr. Howard.....	122
Mr. MacConnell.....	125
Mr. Mann.....	105, 126, 127
Mr. Niles.....	104
Mr. H. W. Palmer.....	106
Mr. J. N. Purviance.....	123
Mr. H. W. Smith.....	118
Mr. Struthers.....	128
Mr. J. P. Wetherill.....	108, 110
Mr. Harry White.....	104, 115
of railroad and canal corporations.....	557
Taxes to be uniform.....	93
levying of on one class for the benefit of another, prohibited.....	157
remarks on, by—
Mr. MacConnell.....	158
Mr. S. A. Purviance.....	157
Mr. Woodward.....	158, 159, 160
special, for local improvements,
power to assess.....	98
remarks on, by—
Mr. Buckalew.....	98, 99, 100
Mr. Cuyler.....	99, 101
Mr. Ewing.....	98, 102, 103
Mr. Hanna.....	100
Mr. Wherry.....	100
Mr. Worrell.....	101
Teachers of public schools, no distinction of sex to be made in compensation of.....	85
remarks on, by—
Mr. Cochran.....	85
TEMPLE, BENJAMIN L., delegate IIIrd
district:
resolution submitted by—
relative to a recess of Convention,	409

TEMPLE, BENJAMIN L.—Continued.

incidental remarks by, 11, 27, 169,
191, 236, 238, 239, 241, 245, 328, 329,
332, 353, 354, 357, 393, 397, 413, 415,
416, 420, 424, 425, 426, 433, 521, 523,
533, 535, 537, 671, 719.
remarks by—
on special municipal laws.....	227
on municipal indebtedness.....	233
on the establishment of the Philadelphia courts.....	272, 273
on the removal of criminal cases
to the Supreme court.....	287, 288
on the election and qualifications
of aldermen... 319, 320, 326, 327, 335
on accepting the resignation of
Mr. Woodward.....	351
on the granting of free passes by railroad companies.....	703
Townships.— See County. credit of, not to be loaned.....	140
Transportation of freight or passengers, officers and employees of railroad and canal companies not to engage in.....	605
remarks on, by—
Mr. Bullitt.....	606, 607
Mr. Howard.....	607
Trial by jury, parties in civil cases may dispense with.....	525
remarks on, by—
Mr. Broomall.....	526
Mr. Darlington.....	526
Mr. H. W. Palmer.....	526
Mr. Purman.....	526
TURRELL, WILLIAM J., delegate XIVth district:
leave of absence granted to.....	238
incidental remarks by, 81, 101, 102,
142, 163, 164, 198, 204, 461, 472, 473,
502, 535, 556, 717, 734.
remarks by—
on special municipal laws.....	227
on vacancies to be filled for the
unexpired term.....	541, 542
on railroad and canal companies guaranteeing the stock of other corporations.....	565
on borough or city, regulating the grade and rate of speed of railroads within its limits.....	751
V.
VACANCIES in court of record to be filled by the Governor.....	452
remarks on, by—
Mr. Cuyler.....	452
to be filled for the unexpired term only.....	541
remarks on, by—
Mr. Armstrong.....	541

Vacancies, &c.—Continued.

• remarks on, by—

Mr. Broomall.....	541
Mr. A. Reed.....	541, 542
Mr. Stewart.....	541
Mr. Turrell.....	541, 542

VAN REED, HENRY, delegate VIIIth district :

incidental remarks by..... 523, 524

WALKER, JOHN W., delegate at large :
President of Convention, pro tem- pore, 3, 60, 110, 166, 214, 238, 290, 349, 408, 429, 480, 533, 588, 646, 672, 719, 755.

unanimously elected President of the Convention..... 756

returns thanks for the honor..... 756 communications presented by—from Mr. Woodward tendering his resignation..... 349

from Seventh Day Baptists relative to observance of the Sabbath..... 408

from Mr. Collins, tendering his resignation..... 646

incidental remarks by..... 524, 756

WETHERILL, JOHN M., delegate Xth
district :

leave of absence granted to..... 212

incidental remarks by, 87, 105, 125, 139, 144, 362, 556, 585.

remarks by—

on the establishment of industrial
schools..... 78

on business office of railroad and canal companies..... 556

WETHERILL, JOHN P., delegate at large from Philadelphia :

incidental remarks by, 66, 72, 73,
162, 211, 212, 422, 524, 551, 694.

remarks by—

on the establishment of industrial
schools..... 53

on the taxation of manufacturing
corporations..... 108, 110

on the election and qualifications
of aldermen..... 334

on railroad and canal companies guaranteeing the stock of other
corporations..... 567

on preventing corporations doing
the business of a common carrier from mining or manufacturing..... 581

on discrimination in freight or
passage by railroad companies.. 611

on creating the office of Secretary
Internal Affairs..... 746

Westmoreland county, petition of citizens of, asking for recognition of Almighty God in the Constitution..... 588

WHERRY, SAMUEL M., delegate
XIXth district :

leaves of absence granted to..... 60, 322

incidental remarks by, 24, 25, 37,
38, 40, 41, 46, 55, 57, 79, 80, 81, 86,
150, 176, 196, 198, 215, 685, 712.

remarks by—

on the establishment of industrial
schools..... 42, 43

on the assessment of a special tax
for local improvements..... 100

WHITE, DAVID N., delegate at large :

leave of absence granted to..... 60

incidental remarks by, 443, 520, 673, 685, 719.

resolution submitted by—proposing a recess of the Convention to 15th September..... 672

WHITE, HARRY, delegate at large :

leave of absence granted to..... 166

resolutions submitted by—

relative to adjournment of Convention..... 420

to provide for appointment of committee to prepare an address to the people..... 588

incidental remarks by, 17, 30, 89, 90,
95, 106, 125, 140, 142, 172, 175, 201,
203, 204, 376, 391, 393, 415, 417, 419,
420, 421, 424, 425, 426, 427, 448, 461,
485, 495, 499, 503, 504, 523, 524, 533,
534, 577, 669, 670, 671, 686, 698, 701,
702, 704, 710, 735, 738, 749, 751.

remarks by—

on oath of office..... 173, 174

on exempting certain property from taxation..... 93, 94

on the taxation of manufacturing
corporations..... 104, 115.

on the State sinking fund..... 147

on the payment of the State debt, 149

on keeping at interest the moneys
of the State..... 155

on accepting the resignation of
Mr. Woodward..... 349.

on acts of Assembly passed by
bribery..... 369, 384

on the style of process and form
of prosecution..... 450

on separate judicial districts for
each county..... 464, 473

on the establishment of separate
orphans' courts..... 531, 532

WHITE, HARRY.—Continued.

remarks by—

- on preventing corporations doing the business of a common carrier, from mining or manufacturing..... 576
- on discrimination in freight or passage by railroad companies.. 694
- on the granting of free passes by railroads..... 697, 688
- on the fictitious issue of stock by railroad, canal or transportation companies..... 711, 713

WHITE, JOHN W. F., del. XXIII^d district:

- leave of absence granted to..... 166
- incidental remarks by..... 205, 453

remarks by—

- on municipal indebtedness... 143, 145
- on county officers..... 198
- on fixed salaries for county officers..... 206
- on the election and qualifications of aldermen in Pittsburg and Allegheny. 456
- on preventing corporations doing the business of a common carrier from mining and manufacturing..... 591, 592
- on damages to property by railroad and other corporations..... 743

Wilkesbarre, communication from city of, inviting Convention to hold sessions at..... 61

Williamsport, communication from city of, inviting Convention to hold sessions at..... 354

WOODWARD, GEORGE W., delegate at large:

- resignation of, tendered..... 349
- resolution of Mr. Alricks not to accept..... 349

WOODWARD, GEO. W.—Continued.

debate on acceptance of resignation

- of 349-354
- withdrawal of resignation..... 755
- incidental remarks by, 24, 26, 30, 61, 132, 239, 755, 756.

remarks by—

- on liability of industrial associations..... 17, 22
- on the levying of special taxes.... 160
- on adjournment of Convention, 167, 168.
- on the term of Supreme Court judges..... 246
- on the present establishment of the courts of common pleas..... 252
- on the establishment of the Philadelphia courts..... 264, 265
- on the death of Mr. Meredith..... 772

WORRELL, EDWARD R., delegate IVth district:

- leave of absence granted to..... 110
- incidental remarks by, 81, 176, 203, 204, 236, 400, 426.

remarks by—

- on the assessment of special tax for local purposes..... 101
- on the establishment of the Philadelphia courts..... 259, 260
- on the election and qualifications of aldermen..... 334, 335

WRIGHT, CALEB E., delegate XIIIth district:

- leaves of absence granted to..... 408, 588
- resolution submitted by—
 - relative to adjournment of Convention..... 214
 - to adjourn over July Fourth..... 355
- incidental remarks by, 38, 197, 212, 214, 355.

remarks by—

- on the death of Mr. Meredith..... 772